Tuesday, the 10th of March, 1863, was a kind of epoch day in our English history. On that day was married the heir apparent of the British throne, Albert Edward, the Prince of Wales, to the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, in the royal chapel, Windsor, in the presence of Her Majesty the Queen, and her brilliant court. It is a period to be recorded in our history for its consummation of an event which is vitally and immediately connected with the highest interests of this nation—its future character, prospects, and destiny. While we have a history that day will be distinguished as a remarkable day.

The parties to the marriage are right royal. The bridegroom is the eldest son and heir of the Queen of England; the bride is the eldest daughter of the Crown Prince of Denmark. Both are scions of royalty, and occupy a position only one step below the apex of the pyramid of social grade and distinction. None is higher in rank and station in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or in the world, than these royal personages, save those who sit on thrones. And their destiny is most illustrious and royal : a crown shall be their head-dress ; a throne their seat ; kingdoms, empires, and continents their dominions ; hundreds of millions of people their subjects ; the most powerful sceptre in the world their royal wand. Who does not feel astonished at the rank of the youthful pair whose matrimonial union we have just celebrated, and see sufficient justification for the national enthusiasm on the occasion ? It is a growing conviction that grades in the social scale of mankind are of Divine appointment or permission. The class that ignores and declaims against royalty and aristocracy, and seeks to promote a communism of class are few and unimportant. The truth is spreading, that equality in rank and station is incompatible with the incidental teachings of Scripture, the laws of nature, the principles of philosophy, and the facts of history. And surely all men cannot be equal in social position. There must be sovereigns and subjects, masters and servants. Doubtless Providence has placed the distinguished pair in their exalted and royal position, and hence to them in that position it behoves us to do loyal homage.

The marriage may properly be termed an early one. Both parties are young : the bride very young. The prince has only reached his majority a few months, and the princess is barely turned eighteen years of age. It is not our province to animadvert on the custom of early marriages so common in this country at the present day ; this belongs rather to the physianthropist or natural philosopher than the Christian minister. Still we cannot but express our regret that such a precedent should be set for the custom by our royal family. The Princess Royal was married at seventeen years of age, the Princess Alice at eighteen years, and now the Prince of Wales marries a bride of eighteen years. It may be alleged that royal persons, owing to their superior and efficient education and training, are not at an early age so juvenile and simple in their knowledge, manners, habits, and so on, as young persons of lower orders of society. Be this admitted, but still there is no royal way to make young people as wise, experienced, and discreet, as those persons who are aged or have attained a ripe period in life. We are not, notwithstanding, advocates for late marriages in either royal or rustic society (December is too late to wear the bridal wreath), but we do think that youths in their teens are too young to be married on both physianthropic and social grounds. This was not our opinion once, but increased acquaintance with persons and circumstances has induced the change. Suppose now the families of the country generally follow the precedent set by the sovereign's family—what boys and girls shall we have bearing the relation of husband and wife and father and mother. Our noble land is shamed already by many babe-marriages ; and if we mistake not the tendency of royal acts greatly, they will increase more and more after such examples. This feature in the royal marriage has not our unqualified approbation, and we respectfully urge our youthful unmarried readers to give the subject their serious consideration. Be men and women before you are husbands and wives.

That the marriage is a happy one there can be but one opinion. It is not a union of hands for political purposes, but a union of hearts imbued with conjugal love. Everything associated with the alliance of the royal pair, from first to last, is proof positive of this truth. From the moment of the Prince's introduction to the Princess at Copenhagen, when Cupid mounted his noble brow, his conduct has been that of a genuine and ardent lover. In a letter to the Earl of Caithness, the Prince thus expresses his happiness in his choice :—"I assure you," he says, "I now know what it is to feel happy. If I can make the future life and home of the Princess a happy one, I shall be content." And how strikingly did his conduct on meeting the Princess at Gravesend illustrate these sentiments. He greeted her not with a state etiquetical bow, nor with a royal kiss on the hands, but with an earnest, hearty, lover-like kiss on the lips, a greeting which did more to tell the country that the union was a happy one, than all the assurances which could be made in Parliament. This affection is thoroughly reciprocated by the Princess, who is considered by those who know her best well worthy to follow our good, our virtuous, our truly noble Queen, whenever Providence shall (long may the day be postponed), be pleased so to order it. We have only to add our hearty wish that their happiness may continue, and with the flight of time increase; and that every couple who enter the holy estate of matrimony may share, according to their station and circumstances, equal happiness.

The marriage was conducted most religiously. There was no levity or mirth, but seriousness and devotion. St. George's Chapel even, where the ceremony was performed, with all its ornamentation was not made to look like a theatrical salle, but retained its character as a place of worship. The music too was of a strictly devotional kind. On their arrival at the altar, both the Prince and Princess kneeled down and remained in silent prayer for awhile. The service itself was most simply and impressively read by the Primate of all England—there was no chanting—and on his earnest pronouncement of the benediction, the entire august company fervently responded "Amen." During the ceremony the Queen was observed to weep, and more than once to be engaged in prayer. Thanks be unto God for such a Queen. In this feature of the marriage what a confirmation is furnished of the oft-repeated truism, that religion is adapted to all men in all stations and circumstances of life. The pageantry of courts may not hoist piety from her chief place. Religion is truly royal and courtly, and while it may be enjoyed by the highest as well as the lowest, it demands the reverence of one as well as the other. The marriage of England's royal heir was honoured by its religiousness.

Our last remark is, that it is an important one. All marriages are important personally and relatively. The importance of such events is equal to the rank, station, and influence of the parties. A royal wedding is highly important. It has a political as well as a social and personal importance. The alliance of England and Denmark is one important result of the recent wedding: the future sovereigns of our country may be expected to issue therefrom. In short, the destiny of this great nation, and partly that of the whole world, is focussed in the event of March 10th. Hence, the future good or evil of our fatherland depends considerably upon the conduct of our Prince and Princess of Wales and their progeny. May a gracious heaven guide them and their house into all truth and righteousness, and make them and theirs a blessing to England and the world.

This article has already swelled too much, or we had designed a few remarks on some other features, and also on the incidents and lessons of the royal marriage: but we forbear. Ere we lay down our pen, suffer us to inquire, dear reader, if you are allied, yea, affianced to the Prince of Peace. Union with Christ is all important to your present and future happiness, honour, and heaven. If still alienated from him, we beseech you come to his embrace. He calleth to you, "Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away." Come as you are; come by repentance, prayer, and faith. Come now, for all things are ready. Oh! come to the marriage.

A WORD IN SEASON, AND THE POWER OF PRAYER ILLUSTRATED.

ON one of the many high ridges of gritstone, which surround the town of Halifax like a huge fortress, stands one of the neatest Primitive Methodist Chapels which it has been my lot to see. Its elevated and unsheltered position exposes it to every storm that rages; but, like the religion which is taught within its walls, it has hitherto withstood every hostile influence, and is likely to continue to do so. The other evening a deeply interesting missionary meeting was held therein, sustained entirely by the Circuit preachers, aided by one or two local brethren. Mr. John Sutcliffe, brush manufacturer, was in the chair, who, after a neat speech, called on Mr. T. Bairstow, rate collector, who gave us a most telling address. An incident or two which he narrated, made a powerful impression on my mind, and I doubt not on many other minds ; and as the recital thereof will be edifying to the readers of the Primitive Methodist Magazine, I will now proceed to the task as well as my recollection will enable me.

"You all know," said Mr. Bairstow, "that my calling necessitates me to visit more families than does any Primitive Methodist Minister in the land; for I average about 150 visits daily; and although the purpose for which I make those visits is such that people generally would much rather see me go out of their homes than enter them, yet I am happy to say, I am seldom insulted, but oftener welcomed by those on whom I call. There is one fact of which I am proud, and that is, there is not a publican on whom I call, but knows I am a teetotaler, and there are few other inhabitants of Halifax but know that I am a Primitive Methodist. Frequently I am drawn into conversation on religious subjects; and when time and other circumstances favour, I seize the opportunity to say a word for God. Some time ago, I called upon a family in my regular course; the wife was an invalid, but a happy Christian; and I had had on previous occasions precious conversations with her. On this occasion her husband, who was a thorough follower of Barker and Holyoake, was in; we were not long in getting into a war of words, in the midst of which he styled our religion a mockery and a delusion, and myself and all such, weak-minded, though perhaps, well meaning errorists. It was now my time to speak; I wished him to look facts in the face; I enumerated the trophies of the Christian religion; showed him the good it had effected at home and abroad; and astounded him by proving that every wise, benevolent, and moral enterprize in the world was sustained by Christian men and women. Now, I asked, what good thing have you infidels done, or what noble enterprize are you supporting? You cannot point to one! All your work is to try to scatter and destroy the good that others are doing; yours is a crusade against the life-giving and cherished institutions of the age. Why, man, you cannot live unless you can get us Christians to prop you up a while by yielding to discussion; you cannot keep a place in which to carry on your objects; if you get one you have soon to part with it; and then, waxing warm with my theme, and sliding into the broad West Yorkshire idiom and accent, I exclaimed with all the earnestness of an excited mind, 'you heven't a hoyle to caar in.' Here I paused; the man was overwhelmed; the woman electrified; for, rising in bed, and striking the table beside her with her clenched hand, she exclaimed with amazing energy, 'that's true, that's true; they heven't a hoyle to caar in! they heven't a hoyle to caar in!' I left the house, while the woman continued to repeat the expression. A few weeks afterwards I had to call at the house again; the man was in this time also. As soon as I prudently could, I turned the conversation into a religious channel. In a most subdued tone, my unbelieving friend exclaimed, 'Say no more, say no more; I heven't a hoyle to caar in!' I saw the man was a changed character; he was concerned about salvation. In a short time he fled to Jesus crucified; and in a few weeks afterwards he sickened and died. But he died rejoicing in Jesus, and in hope of the glory of God. He dated his change from the day on which I showed him the good-for-nothing character of the system he was trying to prop up.

"In another part of the town there resided an uncommonly pious woman, whose husband, though not immoral, was ungodly. I had often profitably conversed with this woman, but on the occasion to which I am going to refer you, we talked long and charmingly. She told me that for seven long years she had prayed for her husband's conversion, without seeing the least sign of change in him to encourage her. The power of prayer, however, was her hope; the profitableness of the exercise to her own heart her constant reward. Well, awhile ago, she said, she began to see a change in her husband; he grew dull, spoke but little, and was very restless. Conviction for sin was gnawing at his heart; she saw and rejoiced in the change. She knew what would follow, and prayed on with an ardour and a hope she had not had before. One night he went out and returned not till the next morning about breakfast time; he had wandered about all night owing to the disquietude of his soul. Strange to say, all this time she had not courage to speak to him about the Gospel scheme of salvation. A night or two afterwards, he asked her to pray for him before retiring to rest. This opening of usefulness, however, the tempter induced her to decline, for she had never prayed audibly in her husband's presence. This act of disobedience brought darkness and sorrow into her mind, and for a time she felt as if she was abandoned of the Lord. In her grief she fell before her Saviour, confessed her wickedness, and promised him she would so sin no more. That night too she confessed her fault to her husband, and offered then and there to pray with him. That offer was accepted. Long and fervently did that husband and wife kneel before the Lord in prayer; but as the new day's sun gilded the eastern hills with his bright beams, the Sun of Righteousness arose on the desolate heart of the sin-stricken husband with healing in his wings. Much joy was in that cottage home that morning. The long sought husband sat by the side of his long seeking wife, happy in God! No one could tell whether he or she had the happier heart. And there was joy too that morning in the presence of the angels of God. A great victory had been won, after a seven years' seige. Well, it is only about four months since this event occurred, and yet—I mention this as a proof of the uncertainty of life—both these happy persons have been called away to a happier land."

These incidents point a moral as well as adorn a speech. Let us each and all be on the alert to speak a word for our Saviour whenever opportunity presents; a word in season is always profitable. If we live a life of prayer, we shall be guided in so doing by the unerring counsel of God. A plain homely remark, uttered by a fervent spirit, will often effect what a set speech, neatly worded, will fail to accomplish. The writer remembers to have once said to a woman whose salvation he had vainly sought—by his preaching—"Mary, your heart is as hard as a stone." That same day she sought and found the Lord. It is nearly twenty years since that time, but Mary is still connected with the Church of Christ. Let all Christians also be instant in prayer for their relatives and friends. Let each seek to convert another. This course would soon flood the Christian Church with converts. Five minutes prayer for conversions, offered up daily by every Christian in the land, would e'er long produce such times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord as have not of late been witnessed. What is needed, is not the labours of professional revivalists, so called, but an earnest Church throughout the length and breadth of the land. May we soon have it. Amen.

JOHN SIMPSON.

CONNEXIONAL INTELLIGENCE.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

CROSTON-STREET SCHOOL, LIVERPOOL. This school was opened in 1861, the number of scholars then was forty-five. On Monday, Nov. 3rd, 1862, upwards of 200 friends sat down to tea, after which a public meeting was held. The Rev. J. Gibson occupied the chair, and appropriate pieces were recited by the scholars. The school has made very encouraging progress. The number of scholars now on the books is 223, with an average attendance of 178, and there are thirty-three teachers. Several of the scholars have been converted, and have become members of society. J. DAVEY.

LYNN STATION.—You will be pleased to hear that a gracious work has commenced in this circuit, and many souls have been brought into the enjoyment of religion.

At Lowton a great number of young persons and others have accepted the invitation of the Gospel, and given their hearts to God. At Platt-bridge special services were commenced Dec. 7th, 1862, and during the week the little chapel was crowded, and sinners were saved. Indeed the sounds of joy and the sounds of sorrow were so commingled that the distinction between the pardoned and the penitent could scarcely be discerned. The services were kept on for a few weeks, and while the old members have been quickened, twenty-seven persons have been added to our little society here. It will be matter of thankfulness to those kind friends who have contributed of their property to help us in this time of unexampled commercial distress, to learn that the good work is going on among us. Many a grateful heart offers its praises to Almighty God for the unparalleled benevolence recently displayed towards the suffering operatives in these parts, and some of the objects of this kindness have become subjects of saving grace. Thank our friends for us, Mr. Editor, our hearts are too full.

How Christmas-day was kept.—To show you how the grace of God has taken hold of our dear young people, I send the following account how Christmas-day was kept at Platt-bridge. It was written by one of the new converts, a youth eighteen years of age, son of the class-leader. "Sir, I am happy to tell you what a glorious day we had here on Christmas-day. It seemed as if heaven had begun below, all things looked so happy and comfortable, and I hope good was done. We began our services in the morning, and continued them through the day, in the following manner. At 4 o'clock in the morning one went round the village to knock up all the young members, who afterwards met at a friend's house at 5 o'clock, in number about twenty-three. We sang a hymn before we set out. Oh how beautiful it did appear in the stillness of the morning; it seemed as if the angels which sang at the Saviour's birth, had again appeared. We then proceeded through the village singing and praising God, and telling the people of the birth of the Redeemer. At 6 o'clock we came to the chapel, where some of the friends were already engaged in holding a prayer-meeting. We joined with them in heart and wish that there might be a mighty revival of religion. In the afternoon the younger scholars to the number of seventy-six sat down to coffee and buns, and afterwards 155 friends, teachers, and elder scholars, partook of an excellent tea. In the evening the scholars and some of the teachers recited pieces, dialogues, &c., of a moral and religious tendency. The benediction was pronounced, and as the company separated, the organ and singers joined in the beautiful lines,

"When shall we all meet again?"

The neighbours now crowd the house of God, and some who have come to hear the story of the cross, have gone home rejoicing in God their Saviour. This district, which is mostly inhabited by coal miners, has for a long time been "a seat of Satan;" for though the population were few yet sin has, till lately, greatly increased." May God grant the good work may progress in every part of our extensive circuit. In Cheshire, I am happy to say the Lord has lately been saving souls. Hallelujah.

J. PEET.

MISSIONARY SERVICES IN LEIGHTON BUZZARD STATION.—We have recently held missionary services at each of the following places, viz., Reach, Leighton, Liddington, Hockliffe, Billington, Salford, Wavendon, Husborne Crawley, Newport Pagnell, and Woburn Sands. The attendance was good and the collections liberal, realising the sum of £17 2s. 2d. We have sent one half of the said moneys to the General Fund, and 8s. 6d. to the Australian Fund. We think it right to state that at one place we had the use of a Wesleyan chapel, and at other places our Baptist friends kindly lent us their chapels. We thank God and take courage, pleased to know that our prospects for the future are cheering. W. BIRKS.

LOWESTOFT, YARMOUTH STATION.—We held a tea meeting in connection with our chapel anniversary at Lowestoft, Dec. 31st, 1862, when about ninety persons sat down to the social cup. Afterwards a public meeting was convened in the school room, and presided over by the writer. Very excellent and appropriate addresses were delivered by the Rev. J. Heigham, minister of the Methodist Free Church, and Messrs. Adams, jun., and Thurtley. During the proceedings a statement was made that a debt of £265 remained upon the chapel. A very spirited and praiseworthy effort was then entered into towards its liquidation, and in a few minutes the sum of £20 was promised towards the next anniversary. With this amount and the proceeds of a bazaar which is expected to be held during the summer, it is hoped we shall clear £50 off the building. T. MACKILL.

ASHTON KEYNES, BRINKWORTH STATION.—RE-OPENING A CHAPEL.—Primitive Methodism in this village has had almost every kind of opposition to contend with, and has had many fluctuations and reverses, so that about two years ago it seemed on the very verge of utter ruin, but a kind and gracious providence watched over it for good. At its lowest state a family, all Primitives, were providentially removed from Carney hither, and they took a lively interest in the cause. Their regular attendance at the prayer-meetings produced a better influence, the old members were quickened, prayer was answered, souls saved, and the chapel became too small, and being sadly out of repair it was determined by the friends to make a desperate effort to put in a new inside, erect a gallery, put up a boiler, and paint, and thoroughly renovate it, the estimate for which, with some extras, was £60. Sanction was obtained, and the friends entered heartily into the work, seven men engaging to become responsible for the money. On Sunday, January 4th, 1863, the chapel, though not completed, was opened for divine worship, and three sermons were preached, one in the morning by Mr. Deacon, of Blunsdon; another in the afternoon by Mr. Tuck, of Stratton, and the last in the evening, by the writer. A good influence pervaded all the services, and in the evening the chapel was densely crowded, and the yard nearly full. On Monday a tea meeting was held, the provision for which was given; a public service of extraordinary influence followed, and the Lord graciously delivered one struggling soul, and we had the shout of a king in our midst. The services realized £42 11s. 5d., promises were made to the amount of several pounds, and our friends are determined to raise the residue early in the summer. Great credit is due to our excellent secretary Mr. S. Westmacott, for his zeal and perseverance, and we hereby tender our sincere thanks to all our subscribers and collectors, and trust they will speedily have the great gratification of seeing the whole of the debt entirely liquidated.

W. HAZELL.

BRADLEY GREEN, TUNSTALL STATION.—The anniversary of this Chapel was celebrated January 4th and 5th, 1863. On Sunday the 4th, the Rev. J. A. Bastow, of Carlisle, preached two very impressive and instructive sermons, to attentive congregations. On Monday the 5th, Mr. Bastow delivered a Lecture, which will not soon be forgotten. The subject treated by the lecturer was, "Arminius, and the Influence of his Theological Views on Christian Liberty, and the World's Conversion." Altogether, our Anniversary was a good one, and the financial proceeds are far in advance of those of last year.

R. EZARD.

WOLSHINGHAM STATION.—We held our first course of Missionary meetings this year at the following places: New Hunwick, Jan. 12th, 1863; Byers Green, 13th; Tow Law 14th; and Billy Row, 15th. These places brought in about £12. The meetings were well attended, we had the assistance of the Rev. W. Nation, and the Rev. J. Lightfoot, who did us good service. We are happy to say peace prevails, and prosperity in a few of our places of worship. At one place about sixty souls have professed to be saved.

H. J. A.

NEWBRIDGE, NEWPORT, ISLE OF WIGHT.—About two years since our brethren missioned this neighbourhood, and God has owned and blessed our labours to the conversion of many precious souls. To his name be the glory! On Lord's Day, Jan. 18th, we opened a new chapel here; crowded congregations assembled, and the Rev. W. Baitson, delivered two sermons on the occasion. The afternoon service was conducted by Mr. W. Chever-ton. On the following Monday a public tea was provided, and attended by a large assembly from the surrounding villages and towns. Afterwards a public meeting was held, which gave great satisfaction; it was presided over by our friend Mr. Joseph Dash, Circuit Steward, and addressed by brothers Moorey, Dennes, Cheverton, (Cowdry, Alderslade, Connel, Baitson, and the writer. On Sunday, January 25th, the opening services were brought to a close by Mr. D. Dennes.

For the prosperity that God is favouring us with as a Circuit, and for the kindness of our esteemed friend Mr. Woodford, we tender our sincere thanks; and taking courage, we hope and believe that brighter days will yet appear. W. DINNICK.

ST. GEORGE'S, WROCKWARDINE WOOD STATION.—On Sunday, January 18th, 1863, we held some special services towards the expenses connected with the erection of a gallery in the chapel at the above place, as we needed more accommodation for our hearers. The Rev. J. Ferguson, of Congleton, delivered two good discourses, and the Rev. J. Hutchings, one. Owing to the congregations being so large, the trustees kindly lent us the Oaken Gates Chapel, which was very crowded. The Rev. J. Ferguson preached a sermon on the Monday evening, at St. George's Chapel. The collections amounted to £11. The chapel, since its opening in the year of our Connexional Jubilee, has been the birth-place of many souls.

J. B.

NEWLYN, PENZANCE STATION.—On the 22nd of January, 1863, we had the anniversary tea meeting for our Newlyn Chapel. The provisions were given, and the tables were very ably presided over by the ladies. After the removal of the tables there was a crowded public meeting.—Brother B. G. Batten was called to the chair, and filled that post well. The meeting was further addressed by Brothers R. Bennetts, W. A. Rouffiquack, R. Pollard, W. H. Penhaligon, J. Champton, J. Carter, J. Hawkins, and C. T. Harris; thus closing a good service. The noble sum of £21 13s. 7d. was produced at this anniversary. During the past year £50 was paid off the debt of the chapel, besides making improvements, and securing a new chapel trust. In viewing the past we are thankful, and we hope the future will be attended with greater success. We tender our best thanks to the friends who have helped us so willingly—praying that the Lord may reward them.

C. T. HARRIS.

CHARLTON, DEAL AND DOVER MISSION.—Our friends here have completed their spacious school-room situated beneath the chapel. The opening services were held on Sunday, January 25th, 1863, when three sermons were preached by the Rev. D. Kendall, of Canterbury. On the following day a tea meeting was held, when 140 surrounded the social board. Tea was likewise provided for the children, numbering about sixty, after which a public meeting was held in the chapel. R. Rees, Esq., occupied the chair, and interesting addresses were delivered by the Revs. D. Kendall, G. Dowson, R. Ayers, J. Blades, and the writer. Several beautiful pieces were sung by the children at each service, in a manner which reflected great credit upon the superintendent and teachers. A vote of thanks was given to the respected chairman for the kind and Christian feeling exhibited by him, and to all who had interested themselves in these services. The congregations were good, and the influence was powerful. We have already realised by collections, profits of tea, and donations, £18, and have promises yet to come in amounting to £5. We tender our thanks to all who have helped us, and pray that the richest blessings of grace may come upon our Zion here. D. DAY.

STOURBRIDGE CHAPEL, BRIERLY HILL STATION.—Our chapel at this place has recently undergone various improvements, including the insertion of a gallery and new pulpit, palisading the front, and painting the building throughout, giving the house of God a more respectable and complete appearance, and furnishing accommodation for eighty additional hearers. The re-opening services were held January 25th, and February 1st, 1863. On the former Sabbath, sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Evans, Mr. E. Johns (Wesleyan), and Mr. G. Lydiatt. Collections, £8 5s. On the latter Sabbath, by Mr. T. Lissimore, Mr. W. Morgan, and the writer. Collections, £8 15. The outlay (embracing a new harmonium), is about £90, towards which sum we have raised by collections, donations, books, &c., about £50; and besides this, through the laudable efforts of the trustees, during the last five years, £100 have been secured and paid on behalf of the trust premises. We would tender our thanks to all who have assisted us; and to the Almighty, the Giver of all good, be praise, now and evermore. J. QUARMBY.

SELBY STATION.—Some time ago it was thought that if an evening class could be formed where instruction might be imparted in writing, arithmetic, and other branches of useful knowledge, on terms adapted to the means of the humbler classes, it would be of service. A suitable place having presented itself in our school-room, Selby, W. Allison, Esq., generously announced that he would commence a course of gratuitous instruction in the above-named place. The attendance from the first was encouraging, and is still increasing, and on Friday evening, January 23rd, 1863, 130 members of the classes, or their friends, took tea together in the school-room. After tea a public meeting was held, when suitable addresses were delivered by Mr. G. Brown, Mr. J. Dodsworth, W. Allison, Esq., and the Rev. J. R. Parkinson. Various experiments followed by means of the electrifying machine, kindly provided by Mr. T. Cutting, jun., and striking views of distant objects were also produced by the use of the magic lantern. Votes of thanks to Mrs. W. Leetham, and Mrs. W. Allison for providing the tea, and to Mr. W. Allison for the instruction kindly and gratuitously afforded by him, closed the proceedings.

On Wednesday evening, January 28th, a public meeting was held in our new chapel, in aid of the fund for the support of a town and village missionary for Selby and its vicinity. The chair was taken by Mr. McCulloch, who presided with his usual ability. Appropriate addresses were also delivered by Mr. M. Kee, York City Missionary; W. Staniland, Esq., Brayton; Mr. J. Dodsworth, and the Rev. J. R. Parkinson. During the evening selections of sacred music were giving by the York choir with very good effect. The proceeds of the meeting, with donations previously promised, amounted to more than £30.

J. R. P.

WICKHAM BROOK STATION.—The great Head of the church has very graciously visited us with showers of heavenly grace. We commenced a protracted meeting at Chevington, November 30th, 1862, and on Monday, the writer preached; one soul penitently sought the Lord, and not in vain. The following evening we preached a sermon to the young; there was a shaking among the dry bones; some of the local preachers entered heartily into the work, and souls were saved nearly every night of the week. The Sabbath was a high day, two were converted at mid-day, and about twelve more at night. The protracted meeting was continued for a month, and the revival is still going on. Some of the worst characters in the neighbourhood have been numbered among the saved. There were thirty names on the class-book, but not more than eight or ten persons had met in class, for many months; now from ninety to a hundred do so weekly. At Barrow I preached three times, and in the prayer meeting which followed we had a severe and protracted struggle, but ultimately victory was obtained, and four or five souls were brought into gospel liberty. Several of the children in the Sabbath-school have been converted; altogether the society in this place has greatly improved. At Dunstall Green the leader and some of the members have entered very heartily into the work. The result has been many pleasing conversions, and the society has nearly doubled its numbers. At Saxon street we are progressing; several precious souls have been rescued from the iron grasp of the devil, and are rejoicing in the liberty of the sons of God; and at the week-night services, the chapel is crowded to excess. At Poslingford, a few have been converted, and we have recently formed a society. A few have been converted at Wickham Brook, and there are indications of good. In the above-named places not fewer than 150 persons have been converted in three months. There is one feature in this revival of a pleasing nature, and which should not be overlooked, that is, the effort put forth to attend the meetings. The population in this district is thinly scattered over a wide extent of country, consequently many of our friends have several miles to walk; but neither dark nights, rain, nor bad roads has deterred them. Under the gracious influence that has rested upon them every obstacle has been overcome.

J. SYMONDS.

STOURPORT, KIDDERMINSTER STATION.—In the town of Stourport, Worcestershire, we have a good chapel and house, erected in 1856, but a heavy debt of £680 has paralyzed the energies of the Society, and been a source of continual trouble and anxiety to the trustees and circuit officials.

Nearly five years ago, when Mr. Porter was stationed to this circuit, the property was on the eve of being sold, but extra efforts were made, and the General Chapel Fund Committee contributed £20; the back interest was paid, and the debt lowered to £612 8s. 8d. This consisted of borrowed money and tradesmen's bills, the nonpayment of which lowered our cause in public estimation. Besides, it appeared utterly impossible that the small Society could raise nearly £30 annually for interest, besides incidental expenses; consequently the property again became embarrassed, and £155 were called in. Hence, two years ago, the case was again laid before the General Chapel Fund Committee, who promised £20 on condition that the trustees raised £130 more. Towards this sum, Miss Fisher of Hall Close, Alveley, generously gave us £50; Michael Fellows, Esq. of Hall Close, £10; Messrs J. & J. Wood, Alveley, £10; Messrs Baldwin & Co., Stourport, £14; a friend, £16 10s; W. Gwillim, Kidderminster, £5; nine local preachers, £8 10s.

and other friends, £4 8s. By an appeal to other circuits £7 0s. 8d. was obtained. Eardington tea-meeting realised £5 17s. 8d., and a bazaar, £45 2s. 4d., which, with the £20 from the General Chapel Fund, made a total of £196 8s. 8d. This sum enabled the trustees to settle all the bills, pay the arrears of interest, and reduce the debt to £450; so that the property is now comparatively safe.

The intention was to lower the debt to £400, and this would have been done, but the great depression in trade, immediately after the effort began, prevented many friends from aiding us as they had promised; then the house was some time unoccupied, and we lost £6 10s. by a tenant. We have also had the chapel painted and coloured, (it had never been done before, and was in a very dirty state,) towards which Michael Fellows, Esq., gave us £9; so that taking these things into consideration the trustees feel it is a cause for gratitude to God and the friends who have aided us, that we have done so well as we have; and not of vain regret that we have not done impossibilities.

The thanks of the trustees are especially given to Miss Fisher and Mr. Fellows, the Messrs. Baldwin, Messrs. Wood, and others, for their donations; and to the friends in different parts of the circuit, especially at Kidderminster and Eardington, who assiduously assisted in getting up the bazaar.

BRANDON STATION.—We have many signs of divine approval in this station. A fortnight's missionary services recently held were characterized by a high tone of spiritual feeling and Christian liberality. The financial proceeds were above £30, being £10 10s. in advance of any previous year. Our deputation, Brothers Gunns and Blake, served us well. The presence of the divine Master was with them. Best of all, souls were saved from the bondage of sin and Satan, and made to rejoice in the hope of a blessed immortality. This glorious work has of late been in progress in many places, especially at Thompson, where over fifty persons have found the pearl of greatest price. Many from the neighbouring villages, Tottington and Merton, where we are not allowed to form a Society, are among the saved. Our Thompson Chapel, built two years ago, is in easy circumstances, and is filled to excess. The debt has just been reduced £10, and an enlargement is contemplated. Also at Walton, a commodious and beautiful chapel is now in course of erection, the cost of which, with other improvements of the trust property, will require an outlay of about £500. Many of our dear friends are actively engaged in various ways in aiding the building fund. May the blessing of our gracious Head increasingly be our portion, and the portion of His universal Church, for Christ's sake. W. H. MEADOWS.

PENANCE STATION.—We have recently had a very interesting course of missionary services in connection with this Circuit. Two excellent sermons were preached in this town to large and attentive congregations on Sunday, February 8th, 1863, by the Rev. W. Jones, of Cwm Circuit; at Newlyn, by Revs. W. Jones and O. Pullen; at Cockwells, by Revs. O. Pullen and J. Hawkins; and at Ludgvan, by the Revs. O. Pullen and the writer. A good missionary meeting was held here; Mr J. Whitford occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Revs. S. T. Allen (Independent), J. Nance (Wesleyan), J. Wiltshire (Baptist), W. Jones and O. Pullen (the Deputation), and the Circuit ministers. Excellent missionary meetings were also held at Newlyn, Cockwells, and Ludgvan. The amount collected was £61 4s. 1½d., being £12 8s. 9d. in advance of the amount collected last year at the same places. Much praise is due to our indefatigable collectors and donors for their efforts during the past year; the boxes and books ranged in amounts from three shillings to three pounds ten shillings. On Friday, February 6th, the Rev. W. Jones delivered a most interesting and eloquent lecture on "Biography and its lessons"—the chair was taken at 8 p.m. by R. A. G. Davies, Esq., Mayor of this borough. The proceeds, which amounted to £3 13s. 9d., were forwarded to our committee for the distressed operatives in the North. C. T. HARRIS.

PICKERING SABBATH SCHOOL.—On Lord's-day, February 15th, 1863, two sermons were preached by the Rev. A. Worsnop, in behalf of this school. After each sermon the children recited several pieces of poetry and dialogues, interspersed with hymns and anthems, suitable for the occasion. On the following Tuesday the annual tea-meeting was held in the school-room adjoining the chapel. After the tea a public meeting was held in the chapel, when addresses were delivered by Mr. T. Smalls, chairman, Messrs. W. T. Lumley, T. Stephenson, and the Revs. J. Hirst and A. Worsnop. The children again recited, and sung at intervals. The chapel on each occasion was filled to overflowing. The collections, &c., surpassed those of any former year. The sum of £21 9s. 3d. was realized. To all our kind friends who have hitherto assisted us, we tender our grateful acknowledgments, and would render to God eternal praise. R. T. CHARTER.

MORCAMEB CHAPEL OPENING, LANCASTER STATION.—Dear Brother Antliff, I beg to send you a few particulars relating to the opening of the above place of worship, &c. On Sunday, February 15th, 1863, three sermons were preached by the Rev. J. Jobling, of Silades; on the following Sabbath, I preached morning and evening, and my colleague (Mr. Barker) in the afternoon. A very gracious influence attended the services; and at the last service one person professed to find pardon. The collections amounted to the sum of £10 14s., which, considering the prevailing distresses, the fewness of our members, the season of the year, &c., may be considered pretty good. An unfortunate circumstance occurred during its erection, which delayed its opening some months. Some of your readers will remember the terrific gales which happened in the last autumn. The roof was only then just put on, without the slates, and the peaks standing up so high, and being so much exposed to the violence of the wind, the gables fell, causing considerable delay, and a loss to all parties concerned.

The building is now, however, complete, and is considered not only strong and substantial, but very handsome and a great credit to the Connexion. It is built of the Lancaster best white freestone. Its size is 40 feet by 30. Height to the square about 18 feet, and about the same height to the ridge. It has seven handsome mullion windows, and one large wheel or circle window, which ornaments the front, and which is about ten feet in diameter inside the circle or wheel. It has the appearance of a star or rather of stars, when lighted with gas, for it contains nine ornamental star lights, the centre one being the largest, and of stained glass. All the windows are glazed lead lights, and the framework is of solid brown stone. In the front there is a stone porch with folding iron gates, through which we pass into the chapel. In a line with the gates there is wrought iron palisading to protect the chapel front. The interior of the chapel is equally neat and beautiful. One half is in the form of a rising gallery, with reclining seats, without doors. The rest is fitted up with moveable seats and plain forms. There are seats for about 200 persons. Instead of an ordinary pulpit, there is a platform, with steps and hand railing at each end. In the centre where the preacher stands, it has the appearance of a pulpit, of octagon shape; from the desk in the centre to each end of the platform, the front is open panelling, very tastefully executed. The chapel is open to the roof, which, with the front of the platform, all the seats, the inside of the doors, &c., are stained and varnished. The outside of the doors is beautifully grained oak. In the centre of the chapel is the stove, and cast iron piping, which is covered level with the rest of the floor with ornamental grating, which allows the heat to rise and warm the chapel; it is protected from the wood work by stone casing. The gas-fittings are neatly done. The chapel is well ventilated. Each window has an iron case-ment in it, which opens and shuts with cord and pulley.

Attached to the chapel there is a vestry 27 feet by 10 feet, grate, cupboards, &c., all complete. There is also a yard for coal, &c., and a sanitary water-closet. The erection has a noble and commanding appearance, and stands in a most eligible situation; and cannot be concealed by other buildings. It is admired by all classes.

The total cost, including the purchase of the site, expense of conveyance, and all other things, is about £520: towards which we have raised but about £100, so that we have a considerable sum yet to raise, to bring the debt within the limits of rule, and to place the trust in a working position. As the chapel will be of great advantage to those of our Yorkshire friends and others, who visit this beautiful watering place during the summer, we may reasonably hope they will lend us a helping hand. Since the opening, several persons have joined us; and, I am happy to say, our station is doing well. O for a richer baptism of the Holy Ghost.

T. BENNETT.

BROMLEY HILL.—On Lord's Day, February 22nd, 1863, three eloquent and impressive sermons were preached in behalf of the Trust Funds of our Chapel here. That in the morning, by our esteemed superintendent minister, the Rev. James Arnold; and those in the afternoon and evening, by the Rev. Samuel Antliff, of Derby. A gracious influence pervaded the whole of the services. Collections were made during the services, which considerably exceeded those of the past year. The trustees are endeavouring to pay off, during the present year, a remaining mortgage of £80 upon the burial ground.

LONDON THIRD STATION.—The twelfth anniversary of the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Crisp Street, Bromley St. Leonard's, was celebrated on February 23rd. A goodly number of friends sat down to tea in the adjoining school-room at half-past five. The public meeting commenced at seven p.m. The chair was occupied by W. Cordell, Esq. (the circuit steward), and soul-stirring addresses were given by Rev. G. Anstin (of London 1st circuit), Rev. G. Lamb (of London 2nd circuit), Rev. T. Penrose, Rev. G. H. Fowler (circuit ministers), and Mr. Rogerson. The financial report shows a reduction of debt on the trust property of £30 during the year, the proceeds of the present anniversary are £19 6s. 1d., being £4 13s. 0d. in advance of last year, and the sum of £20 is promised on the "Golden System" for the next year. The preparatory sermons were preached on Lord's Day, February 22nd, by the Rev. G. H. Fowler, E. H. Rabbits, Esq., and the Rev. R. Davies (general book-steward). All the services were well attended, and a Divine influence pervaded the whole. We are also glad to state that the congregations are improving on the Lord's day, and there have been several additional seats let during the last six months. This is very encouraging when we consider that the church is mainly composed of the working classes.

ELY STATION.—Dear Editor, The tidings of religious progress, the salvation of deathless souls, and the advancement of the Redeemer's glory, being always acceptable to you and your numerous readers, we forward you a brief sketch of what has been done, and still is being done, in this station. During the past few months, the Most High has graciously visited us with his blessing. Believers have been quickened, and sinners have been converted. In this visitation most of our places have shared considerably, especially the following: at Isleham, where our society has been very low for many years, we commenced a protracted meeting in November last, which was signally owned and blessed by the great Head of the Church. The energies of believers were aroused, and their sympathies were put forth in good earnest for the salvation of the ungodly. Their prayers, groans, and tears, were noticed by Him who has said, "Prove me now herewith, and see if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." The Spirit fell in life-creating power upon the valley of dry bones, Satan was defeated, souls were saved, and Jesus was glorified. A particular case may here be mentioned. One of our long-tryed friends, together with her husband, had been weeping and praying for many years for the salvation of her children, and in this blessed revival it was her happy lot to witness the conversion of them all—three sons, and two daughters-in-law. Other remarkable instances might be given, but for the sake of brevity, we say in a word, that during four months, not a week passed without the disenfranchisement of sin-bound souls, and additions to our society. Hallelujah.

At Fordham, a wave of sanctifying and converting glory came upon the church and congregation some time since, and moral victories were achieved over sin and hell, on which an angel might feast his eyes, and over which a seraph might strike his harp with unusual vigour and delight. About twelve precious souls have professed to find "Him of whom Moses in the law and the prophets did write." "Glory to God in the highest." Jesus still lives and reigns. At Burwell, where we have recently re-commenced "holding forth the Word of Life," we have held a protracted meeting which will long be remembered by many who attended it. The first three nights were seasons of darkness and hardness, the preacher could scarcely get through his discourse each night, and the few praying friends found it very difficult to continue the contest with the combined forces of earth and hell. But on the fourth night, while singing,

"Faith, mighty faith, the promise sees,
And looks to that alone;
Laughs at impossibilities,
And cries, 'It shall be done,'"

light flashed upon us, grace streamed in a wonderful manner, hell's legions were routed, and several souls bounded into gospel-liberty. Among these was a female upwards of seventy years of age—and to gaze upon her sparkling eyes and beaming countenance, glowing with salvation, and to hear her sing with her daughter, who found pardon at the same time,

"I do believe, I will believe," &c, was no mean privilege. The night following, six more were found with throbbing bosoms, bleeding hearts, streaming eyes, and contrite souls, panting to touch the sceptre of redemption. Since then, others have plunged in the cleansing fountain, and lost "all their guilty stains;" and still we are expecting greater things. O for a richer baptism on the ministry, and more earnestness, holiness, and faith, on the part of the church! Heavenly qualifications can make us spiritual giants in overthrowing vice, conquering devils, saving souls, and decking the Redeemer's brow. O Holy Ghost, baptize the Connexion with sanctifying power, and give us a glorious harvest of souls! R. EAGLEN, & T. SEAMAN.

DONCASTER STATION.—On Lord's-day, March 1st, missionary sermons were preached at Doncaster, Mexbro', Bentley, and Stainforth, by the Revs. T. Newsome, C. Kendall, T. Kendall, and J. G. Smith. A public meeting was held at each place during the week, and addresses were given on the subject of missions, to large congregations, and listened to with marked attention. Mr. R. Wadsworth occupied the chair at Doncaster, and Mr. F. Rudd also assisted at each meeting. The moneys came up well, exceeding our expectations. I am sure our kind collectors have done nobly, and I hope they will be encouraged to labour on and do their best in extending the kingdom of Christ to the ends of the earth. The four meetings realized £40 14s. 4d.; being £6 11s. 2d. more than last year. To all our collectors and donors we tender our best thanks; praying that the Great Head of the Church may bless them in this life, and in the life to come crown them with everlasting glory. T. KENDALL.

CHAPEL OPENING AT CHESTER.—Dear Editor,—By united and persevering effort we have accomplished a work which has long been desired for the credit and prosperity of Primitive Methodism in the ancient city of Chester, viz., the erection of a new chapel, school-room, and minister's house, in a commanding position, and with suitable accommodation. The newly-erected edifice stands within a hundred yards of the city wall, and in close proximity to the old tower, from which King Charles I. saw his army defeated on Rowton Moor; and the numerous visitors who frequently throng the city wall will have an additional object to excite their attention, in the beautiful edifice reared for the worship of the Lord of hosts. The opening services took place on Sunday, March 8th, when the Revs. W. Rowe, C. Chapman, M.A., (Independent), and J. Pritchard, held forth the Word of life to crowded and delighted audiences. The Rev. J. F. Moody (Wesleyan), preached a most interesting sermon on Monday evening, March 9th; and on Sunday, March 15th, the Revs. W. Sanderson and J. Gibson proclaimed the unsearchable riches of Christ with good effect. Penitent sinners cried for mercy both on the 8th and 15th, and we believe not in vain. The collections amounted to the noble sum of £101 15s. 6d. On Monday, March 16th, a tea meeting was held in the school-room; a hundred trays were furnished gratuitously, and 900 persons partook of the refreshing cup. After tea a public meeting was held in the Music Hall; T. F. Maddock, Esq.—who has given us £20 towards the building of the chapel, and furnished the pulpit with a beautiful Bible, hymn-book, and cushion—occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. Gibson, Sanderson, Eastwood, Brining and others, to 1,500 people. The cost of the erection will be upwards of £2,000, including the purchase of land and making deeds, towards which we have raised by tea meeting, subscriptions, and collections, &c., nearly £700; and we feel truly grateful to the many friends who have liberally and cheerfully helped us, but the list of subscribers is far too long for publication.

in the Magazine. The buildings, as they stand upon the site, consist of a minister's house, the chapel and vestries, with a school-room underneath, equal in size to the chapel (the latter being supported on iron columns), and a handsome entrance porch. The style adopted is Gothic, of an early character, having both segmental and circular arches. The materials are patent pressed brick, with dressings and ornamental detail, in white and blue brick, and red and white stone. The school-room windows have semi-circular arches, of chamfered red brick, springing from massive piers, and set in deep reveal; above them are panels with brick ornament, supporting stone sills. A row of double circular arched windows set in double reveal, lights the chapel, the centre reveal having a bath stone column, base, and capital, richly carved. The entrance porch is built entirely of white brick, having columns and caps in bath stone, the latter handsomely carved with foliage, supporting the arch with moulded stone hood, resting upon carved corbels; the spandrels are filled up with stone, having sculptured ribands, upon which is inscribed, in Gothic letters, "Primitive Methodist Chapel, A.D., 1862." A broad flight of stone steps leads into the porch, which is paved with ornamental encaustic tiles, from which there are two entrances into the chapel. The roof is of the description termed "waggon-headed," the principals and the curved ribs only being left visible; the latter rest upon carved brackets of stone, built into the wall. The whole of the pews are open, made of pine, stained and varnished; the pulpit and communion are in character, but of pitch pine, also stained and varnished. Ventilation is amply provided for; in the ceiling are outlets for the vitiated air, whilst the fresh is admitted through gratings in the floor, regulated at pleasure. The roof is covered with coloured slates, and has pointed steep gables as ventilators, three on each side. The windows are glazed in quarries with cathedral green glass, except a circular one over the pulpit, which is stained glass, shedding a golden light over the interior. The size of the chapel and school-room is 51 feet by 36 feet inside; vestries, 18 feet by 15 feet; and the porch, 15 feet by 10 feet. The chapel and school-room, &c., are fitted up with gas; the chandeliers and pendants of a suitable design for the style of architecture. The plans and specifications of the whole were made by Mr. T. A. Richardson, and the general appearance of the structure is much admired by the public, and speaks well for his taste and ability. May peace and prosperity be vouchsafed to the society, and when the last day shall come, may it be found that thousands have been saved in this house of prayer.

J. EASTWOOD.

COLONIAL DEPARTMENT.

GEELONG, VICTORIA.—Nine years ago last September, the first quarterly meeting of this station (then a mission, under the care of the General Missionary Committee) was held, when twenty-six members and £12 10s. 0d. ordinary income were reported. For five years Mr. G. Watts laboured indefatigably, chiefly in the town, preaching in the open air, and visiting from house to house. A chapel was erected, at a cost of £554 9s. 6d., which may now be reported all but out of debt. He left the station in 1858, then a circuit, with eighty-five members, and an income of £26 7s. 0d. His successor, Mr. G. T. Hall, travelled three years in the station, during which time its borders were considerably extended, owing principally to the removal of members from town, and their settling on land ten and twenty miles from Geelong. These friends commenced religious worship in their respective localities, were visited on an average once a month by the minister, and thus those societies were formed which constitute the present circuit. While the country gained by this dispersion of members, the society in the town suffered a serious diminution in number, and had less of the travelling preacher's labours; yet Mr. Hall, on leaving, reported 116 members and an income of £394s. 9d. Mr. L. Dobinson was appointed to the station in 1861; he laboured for six months, and then resigned. His ostensible reason was, that he was not sufficiently supported. Doubtless this had some influence upon his mind, taken in connection with previous oppositions and privations, of a character to which most ministers are more or less subject; but, without any breach of charity, we think that Proverbs xxiv. 10 may be fairly quoted. There are strong reasons to believe that he entered the circuit with his mind in a very unsettled state, that he never thoroughly identified himself with it, and, as a consequence, did not secure the sympathy of the societies; but, under great depression of spirits, tendered his resignation. It was a sad blow to the circuit, and excited considerable prejudice, amongst those unacquainted with the facts of the case, against us as a church. Under these disjointed circumstances, the writer entered the circuit in April, 1862. His own mind had been much depressed, but he resolved, God being his helper, to adopt 2 Corin. ii. 2—5 as his motto, and give it a fair trial. No countenance was given to censorious remarks respecting his predecessor, and all reflections on the circuit were instantly repelled. "This one thing I do" produced its results. Mutual sympathy and co-operation now characterize our intercourse and efforts, the congregations have improved, a few souls have been saved, two fresh places have been opened, and the ordinary income last September quarter-day was £42 11s. 9d., being £4 more than the highest amount ever before raised on the station. In addition to this, £16 16s. 0d. was promised towards the erection of a circuit house, with a view to economise expenditure, and prepare the way for a second preacher, as soon as one can be obtained.

Two courses of missionary services have been held within the last four months. The first on July 6th and the following week, at Geelong, Derriwell, Sutherland's Creek, Anakies, and the Duck Ponds; the second, October 5th—9th, at Connewarre, Ceres, and Mount Moriac. At every place, excepting one, the receipts were in advance of those of the previous year, making a total of £32 13s. 2½d. The brethren, J. Langham, at the first, and G. Watts, at the second course, rendered efficient service.

On the 5th and 6th October, Geelong Chapel Anniversary services were held. Brother and Sister Watts preached the sermons. Trays were gratuitously furnished by a few of our excellent female friends, and the whole of the remaining debt, excepting £4, was paid. Had the writer not been suddenly called away to the funeral of his niece, Mrs. Jane Ann Davidson, daughter of Mr. Edward Swan, one of our Melbourne local preachers, he believes the whole debt would have been liquidated.

On Sunday, October 12th, a new chapel was opened at Sutherland's Creek. Two years ago a person offered a piece of land on which to erect a chapel; money was promised, and upwards of £30 of it paid. The building was commenced, but no title deed nor even a bill of sale was issued. This brought the society into trouble; for when the party was urged to give a title to the land, he refused on some paltry grounds: consequently the work ceased, and the unfinished walls stand to this day a monument of bad management and broken faith. These were discouraging circumstances, but God's work must go on. The writer found this determination strong on first visiting the place. Mr. M. Tonkin, one of our local preachers, offered half an acre of and in a most eligible situation, and at once made out a bill of sale. The title deeds were registered about six weeks ago. Immediate steps were taken to proceed with the erection of a weather-board building, 14 by 21 by 10. The contractors have made a neat, comfortable place of it, for £73 14s. 2½d. The chapel was opened on the above date, when sermons were preached by the writer to overflowing congregations. On Monday the tea meeting was held. It was delightful to witness the approach of people from every point of the compass to celebrate the occasion. The public meeting after tea was addressed by the writer, Messrs. J. Rippin, T. Spalding, J. English, J. Smith, M. Tonkin, and J. Clinnick. After counting the donations, collections, and proceeds of the tea, it was found that only 14s. 2½d. were wanted to clear the entire cost. The congregation responded by a liberal collection, making the total £76 6s. 8d., leaving a balance of £2 12s. 7½d. towards purchasing a bell, and fencing the ground. First of all our gratitude is due, and is hereby recorded, to the Author and Giver of all good; next to Mr. M. Tonkin, for the gift of the land, and £5 as a donation, and then to the Messrs. Holdens, for donations and leading materials; and to Mesdames Tonkin, Holdens, and Hamilton, for their well-furnished trays.

And now "Arise, O Lord, into Thy rest, Thou and the ark of Thy strength. Let Thy priests be clothed with righteousness, and let Thy saints shout for joy." Amen.

M. CLARKE.

P.S. Another chapel, of a more substantial character, is in course of erection, of which I will inform you in due time.

EAGLE HAWK, BENDIGO.—I am happy to say we have a good and glorious work going on at Eagle Hawk. For about four months God has been graciously reviving his work and saving souls; and like some mighty stream that deepens and widens as it flows, the good work increases in influence and power. Our chapel is crowded to excess on Sabbath-days, and the week-night services are well attended. There were six converted last week, and among those who have been gathered in, there are some who have been the most reprobate and vile. We desire to thank and glorify God, and we pray that "He may ride on till all be subdued."

G. T. HALL.

NORTH ADELAIDE, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.—Extracts from James Read's Journal.

August 3rd, 1862.—Preached an anniversary sermon in the afternoon at Unley Park, and a school sermon at night in a crowded chapel at Pine Forest. The friends at Unley Park did well. They raised above £26.

10th.—Preached an anniversary sermon at Payneham in the evening. Though the weather was unfavourable the chapel was well filled. We had an excellent prayer meeting.

18th.—Preached at North Adelaide on the "Saviour's mission to earth." After the service one cast in her lot with the people of God.

27th.—Gave the fifth of a course of lectures at North Adelaide, on the "Pilgrim's Progress." Subject—"Giants Pope and Pagan; and Vanity Fair, and its lessons." There was an excellent audience, and a rich influence was felt.

September 14th.—Preached this evening at North Adelaide, on the "Cure of blind Bartimeus." We had a powerful prayer meeting. A man who had wept under the word with a sorrow for sin, sought pardon, and through faith in Jesus's blood found it to the joy of his soul. Praise the Lord!

24th.—Gave the sixth of a course of lectures on the "Pilgrim's Progress," at North Adelaide. Subject—"By-ends, Demas, and their friends; Doubting Castle and Giant Despair." I trust good was done.

29th.—Gave a lecture at Glenelg in aid of the chapel fund.

30th, to Oct. 2nd.—We held missionary meetings at Pine Forest, Beverley, and North Adelaide. The Rev. J. Warner attended as the deputation. The meetings were rich in interest and holy feeling. We raised £22 15s. 3d.

3rd.—The Rev. H. Cole preached the opening sermon of the district meeting. It was a plain useful sermon calculated to do good.

4th.—District business. Sacrament at night. Sermon by the Rev. J. G. Wright. Our hearts were warmed by burning thoughts from a warm heart. It was a soul-stirring sermon.

5th.—District camp meeting. This has been a high day; the singing, praying, and preaching were truly Primitive Methodist.

6th.—District business. Public meeting at night. The speakers were full of fire.

7th.—Stationing of preachers. Temperance meeting at night. I am re-stationed for another year. O, for more grace that I may be increasingly useful! Amen.

12th.—Preached the anniversary sermons of Redruth Chapel, Koorunga Circuit. Nearly £11 were collected on the Sabbath, but the best of all was, God was with us, and one precious soul was converted at night.

13th.—Gave a lecture at Redruth for the benefit of the chapel fund. We raised above £10.

19th.—Preached Sunday school sermons at Beverley, morning and afternoon, and had a precious time at night at North Adelaide, while administering the sacrament.

20th.—Attended the Sabbath school tea at Beverley. There was a good company. Presided at the public meeting at night. Addresses were given by myself, and Brothers Turnbull and Ford, on "The importance, success, and benefits of Sabbath schools."

26th.—I had a good time this evening at North Adelaide, preaching from Habakkuk's prayer. Two young persons were made happy in the Saviour's love. Carry on, blessed Saviour, thy mighty work. Give me grace to conquer self, and exalt thee more.

27th.—Preached Sunday school sermons at Islington to good congregations. A gracious influence attended the services.

Nov. 23rd.—Opened a new place for preaching about five miles from Adelaide. Lord, open our way.

30th.—Exchanged with Bro. Wright. I preached three times in the Mount Barker Circuit, I trust with profit to the people.

Dec. 1.—Circuit Quarterly meeting at Beverley. Unity, peace, and goodwill pervaded the minds of all. Met all demands; balance in hand. Praise the Lord.

2nd.—We held a tea meeting at North Adelaide for the benefit of the chapel. About 150 sat down to tea. The public meeting was addressed by myself, the Revs. J. Warner, J. Minard, and J. Turnbull. With the collections on the Sunday, profits of tea, and donations, we raised £23 14s. To God be all the glory!

14th.—Preached missionary sermons on the South Adelaide Circuit, and attended meetings to the 17th. O, that as a people, we may be baptised with more of the missionary spirit!

21st.—Preached the re-opening sermons of Callington Chapel, Mount Barker Circuit. The congregations and collections were excellent.

22nd.—Gave a lecture in aid of Callington Chapel fund. The noble sanctuary was well filled. God was with us and good was done. The proceeds of the services amounted to above £42.

25th.—Christmas Day. By request, I gave a lecture in the Wesleyan chapel at Mount Barker, at two o'clock. About 300 were present. After the service our people held a tea meeting. Above £20 were obtained from the sale of tickets. In the evening, a public meeting was held in the Wesleyan chapel, when £229 were raised in cash and promises. Mount Barker, though the head of a large circuit, embracing 400 members and 27 preaching places, has a very small chapel. The friends think of erecting a new one. May God open their way.

28th.—Preached anniversary sermons at Athelston, South Adelaide Circuit. The congregations were not large, but the presence of God was felt.

31st.—We held a watch-night service at North Adelaide. There was a good attendance, and the service was marked by great power. My departed years re-echo the voice of mercy, warning, and time. May I listen to their voice. They have departed as a tale that is told. Like a well-told tale may my future life be interesting, impressive, and profitable. Jesus, through me bless others! Holy Spirit dwell with me, and animate me with thy presence, and lead me on to holiness.

Farewell, 1862! Welcome, 1863!

"Sun of righteousness, arise,
Warm my heart, refresh my eyes;
Let my prayer thy pity move;
Make this year a year of love."

J. READ.

GEELONG CIRCUIT, VICTORIA.—In Oct. last, I informed you we were engaged in erecting a chapel, of which I would furnish the details in due time.

Inverleigh is a small township, situated in a fine agricultural district, about twenty miles west of Geelong, on the great western road which connects Victoria and South Australia. The population is somewhat scattered, and may amount to about five hundred persons. There are three places of worship—Church of England, Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic; three day-schools, stores, hotels, police station, &c.

The first notice of this place, as connected with the Geelong Circuit, bears date September, 1860. Here, the brethren Dawber, W. Cozens, A. Faulkner, and other old English friends are located; and through their kindness service has been conducted in one of their houses every Sunday, and once a month on week-nights since the above date. We have now twelve members in Society, and an improving congregation. The necessity of erecting a place of worship, became in course of time, subject of attention. C. L. Swanston, Esq., generously granted half an acre of land for the purpose. Collectors were employed in canvassing the district for contributions, and soon their success justified the trustees in commencing the building. It is a good substantial brick structure—18 by 28 by 12 feet—plastered inside, and well furnished. The total cost is £186 3s. 0d. The opening services were held on Nov. 30th, when two sermons were preached; and, on December 1st, a public tea-meeting was held. The friends from Geelong, Winchelsea, Teesdale, Mount Moriac, and Ceres, mustered in great force. There could not be fewer than three hundred persons present. The sale of tickets alone amounted to nearly £17. The entire proceeds of the opening services were £40 19s. 7d.; the collectors' books produced £59 11s. 0d.; and Messrs Dawber, Faulkner, and several others, contributed £40 in the shape of carting materials—thus leaving a deficiency of £45 12s. 0d. The trustees have borrowed £50 for twelve months at 10 per cent., on a note of hand. Our gratitude is due, and is hereby recorded, to the Giver of all good for his presence and blessing; to the ladies—Mesdames Dawber, Harris, Faulkner, Daniel, Maurrel, Hewitt, and Wilson, who furnished the trays; to the collectors for their noble efforts; to the Geelong choir for their able performances at the opening services; and to all the friends who have in a variety of ways favoured our good cause.

In conclusion, permit me to express my firm opinion, that Inverleigh should be made the head of a station. There are Teesdale, Winchelsea, Mount Moriac, and Derriwell, where we already conduct worship, and each place is from 12 to 23 miles from Geelong, but only 7 or 8 from each other. Sundry other places could be taken up, and I am quite certain they could well support a young man. "Whom shall I send? And who will go for us?" Send by whom thou wilt send; but send labourers into the harvest. Amen!

M. CLARKE.

MELBOURNE DISTRICT MEETING.—The sixth annual assembly of the Melbourne District was held at Geelong, January 9—12th, 1863. This meeting had been anticipated by the officials and members of the Geelong Circuit with pleasurable emotions, and every possible preparation made to accommodate the delegates, and render the religious services successful.

On Friday the 9th, the ministers arrived for the first time, from their respective stations by railway, some of them having travelled about 150 miles in a few hours, a distance which formerly occupied three or four days. Thanks to the glorious gospel of the ever-blessed God, which has so christianized and civilized the Anglo-Saxon race, that wherever they emigrate their enterprise and energy are developed in making crooked places straight, and rough places plain, and providing a highway for religion, commerce, and fraternal intercourse. The re-union of the brethren was most cordial. The afternoon was spent in examining into the state of the chapels, and the com.

mittee was glad to find that five new ones had been built, and that the others were, on the whole, in comparatively easy circumstances. Brother J. Langham preached an appropriate sermon, under a gracious influence, in the evening; and brothers G. Watts and G. T. Hall administered the sacrament.

On Saturday the district meeting was duly constituted, and the reports were carefully scrutinized. The delegates were animated by a strong desire that everything should pass the assembly, and be submitted to Conference, in perfect order. It was especially a matter of devout thankfulness to God that he had favoured us with an increase of fifty-seven members for the year. An excellent missionary meeting was held in the evening.

On Sunday morning the ministers and friends met in Weller street Chapel, Ashby, at nine o'clock, held a prayer-meeting, and thence walked in procession through the town, singing the high praises of God, and publishing the camp-meeting to be held on the Eastern Beach. Some of us could not but contrast our little band with the thousands we had witnessed on similar occasions in England. But "who hath despised the day of small things?" Not the God of camp-meetings, or he would not have blessed them with such glorious results. We felt encouraged by recollecting the exploits of our ancestors, and resolved to emulate their faith, zeal, and charity. The weather was more agreeable than we had anticipated, as the heat had been most intense a few days previously, but a welcome change had taken place. There was a good attendance, the brethren spoke with authority, and waves of holy influence went over the assembly during the day. In the evening the chapel was inconveniently crowded, and the love-feast was kept up till near ten o'clock. Much good, we trust, was done.

On Monday the official business was all but finished. A public tea meeting was held in the evening in the Temperance Hall, and a temperance meeting followed. Charles Read, Esq., presided. The brethren nobly advocated the cause, and by their arguments, illustrations, and eloquence, kept the meeting in a high state of excitement till a late hour. Several persons signed the pledge at the close of the meeting.

Thus terminated one of the best, if not the best, district meetings held in Victoria. We earnestly crave an interest in the prayers of the Connexion, that "the good will of him that dwelt in the bush" may come upon the heads of those that are separated from their brethren. Amen. M. CLARKE.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Seven Years' Street Preaching in San Francisco, California; embracing incidents, triumphant death scenes, &c.

By Rev. WILLIAM TAYLOR, of the California Conference. Edited by W. P. Strickland. Twenty-seventh thousand.

London: H. J. Tresidder, 17, Ave Maria Lane, E.C. Price four shillings.

MR. TRESIDDER deserves well of the English public for issuing the valuable and vivacious works of the author of the present volume. The Model Preacher, noticed by us last month, and another volume to be noticed hereafter, as well as the present one, have already won a high position across the Atlantic, and it was fitting that readers on this side the water should have the privilege afforded them of perusing such deeply interesting productions; and therefore we acknowledge our sense of obligation to the spirited publisher for placing them within easy reach. The volume before us is of extraordinary interest, full of incident, fact, and marvel. Seven years' labour in California, among the gold hunters, for the most part, must have afforded numberless opportunities of seeing human nature under some of its most deplorable aspects, and of putting forth the most energetic efforts for its elevation. Such was Mr. Taylor's experience, as here described, and the results of his efforts are given in no emasculated phraseology. To Primitive Methodists, and all who love open-air worship, this work will be a real treat. And we know not how any philanthropist can read it without having his sympathies stirred to their profoundest depths. Let all who wish to know what can be done, even in California, by street preaching, ponder this thrilling production.

California Life Illustrated. By WILLIAM TAYLOR, of the California Conference, author of "Seven Years' Street Preaching in San Francisco," &c. Sixteen engravings. Twenty-fourth thousand. London: H. J. Tresidder, Ave Maria Lane, E.C.

THIS work is by the same author as the one above noticed, and treats of the same country, and pretty much of the same things in that country. Californian life is here sketched with a master's hand, and the toils and triumphs of a Methodist missionary in California are depicted with great force and vivacity. None of the novel writers of this generation have published anything to be compared with this; information, excitement, and spiritual edification are everywhere to be met with finely blended in these pages. Mr. Taylor is sure to be popular as a writer on this side the Atlantic, as well as on the other. Almost every kind of reader will find something to his taste in this production. The pictorial illustrations of this book, and also of the "Seven Years' Street Preaching" are numerous and respectable. We give these works our hearty commendation.

The London Quarterly Review, No. 39.

London: H. J. Tresidder, 17, Ave Maria Lane.

This is the April number of the London Quarterly, and is worthy of the able numbers that have gone before it. Its immediate predecessor was noticed by us in our April magazine, and we have no hesitation in giving as favourable an opinion of this as we gave of that. Some of the articles are of peculiar interest and value just now,—as "Greece and the Greeks," "Kinglake's Invasion of the Crimea," the "American War," and above all, "English Rationalism." We question whether anything more elaborate and complete, as an answer to Dr. Colenso, has yet appeared, than the article last named. If no other article were worth notice, the present number must command admiration for the masterly dissertation on the claims of the Pentateuch which is contained in this. We very earnestly commend to our intelligent friends the perusal of this masterly paper. We are glad to find the Reviewer takes so comprehensive and honest a view of the American question. Many English writers at present flounder fearfully in regard to the occasion and character of the great Transatlantic contest. It is truly refreshing to find the reviewer in the London Quarterly so much at home in his subject, and so honest and even-handed in weighing the pros and cons of the belligerents. Let all persons who wish to see a faithful and able resumé of the facts of the American revolt and the subsequent contest, give this article their careful attention. Some of the brief literary notices, too, are of a high order. Mr. Godwin's "Faith" comes in for a fair share of discussion. And the treatment accorded to his book is befitting the subject and the author. On the whole, we again cheerfully recommend the London Quarterly to the patronage of our readers. It may not be generally known that the publisher has engaged to supply our preachers with the work for 14s. per annum. Let his generous offer meet with a hearty response.

The Illustrated Pocket, Critical, and Explanatory Commentary on the Old and New Testaments. By Rev. R. JAMIESON, D.D.; Rev. A. R. FAUSSET, A.M.; and Rev. Professor DAVID BROWN, of Aberdeen. Parts 2, 3, and 4. Price one shilling each. London: W. Wesley, Paternoster Row. Glasgow: W. Collins.

We some few months ago expressed our favourable estimate of the first part of this work, and have great satisfaction in giving an equally favourable opinion of the parts above named. There is a vast amount of valuable matter in each of these parts, and we know of nothing equal to this work for our Sabbath school teachers and others who want a comprehensive commentary at a moderate price, and which gives the latest information on all subjects of Biblical exegesis.

The Biblical Cyclopedia; or, Dictionary of Eastern Antiquities, Geography, Natural History, Sacred Annals and Biography, Theology, and Biblical Literature; illustrative of the Old and New Testaments. Edited by JOHN EADIE, D.D., LL.D. With maps and illustrations. To be completed in thirteen monthly parts, price sixpence each. Part I., revised edition. London: W. Wesley.

DR. EADIE'S dictionary has long held among Biblical students a distinguished place, and this new edition will no doubt command a much larger circulation than did the former. The illustrations are numerous and striking, the letter press is clear and good, and the information fresh and reliable. For 6s. 6d. a handsome volume will be obtained. We wish the spirited publisher abundant success.

Illustrations of the New Testament, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4. London: W. Wesley, Queen's Head Passage, Paternoster Row.

We have here a series of beautiful pictures intended to illustrate New Testament facts, and thus to arrest the eye and assist the memory of young and old. Such pictures as these are appropriate ornaments for the cottage, the nursery, or the school. Each sheet contains eleven groups, and the four sheets make a complete set of illustrations. They are coloured lithographic engravings, and are sold at one shilling each sheet; or mounted on canvas and rollers, at two and six pence each. We hope all who have a taste for publications of the pictorial class will patronise this set—for we know of few more deserving of patronage.

The Story of the Life of John Anderson, the Fugitive Slave. Edited by HARPER TWELVETREES, M. A., Chairman of the John Anderson Committee. London: W. Tweedie, 337, Strand, W.C. 1863.

A good deal of spicy story is contained in this volume. John Anderson's history has been a very remarkable one, as must be that of any man who spends the best of his days in slavery, and then finds his way to the land where no slave can breathe. We rejoice in the publication of books of this class as tending to ventilate the question of slavery, and to show free-born Englishmen what is the character of that loathsome system which has lately found many interested apologists among us. Anderson is every inch a man, and his black face reminds one of the saying that a black man is "God's image in Ebony." Mr Twelvetrees has discharged a friendly duty in editing for the press this touching story. Our readers will find it worthy of their perusal, and if once they begin to read it, no fear but they will go through with it. A fund of information on collateral topics will be found in this handsome volume. We give it our warmest commendation.

Methodism as it is, with some of its Antecedents, its Branches, and Disruptions; including a diary of the Campaign of 1849, protracted during a period of seven years; with a special reference to the character, power, policy, and administration of the "Master Mind" of John Wesley's legislative successor. London: W. Reed, 15, Creed Lane, Ludgate Street; J. Heywood, Manchester; A. Mann, Leeds; W. Gillings, Liverpool; and J. Lund, Bradford. Parts 1 and 2. 1863. Price four pence each.

HERE is a pretty full bill of fare, and our readers will at once discern the object and character of the work from this comprehensive title. These two parts contain a large quantity of useful information, and the anonymous writer displays the qualities of a practised hand. If he shall steer clear of all unnecessary acrimony, and throughout the work abide by what is reliable and permanently important, the production will be eminently fitted for a position of honour as a work of reference to all who wish to be thoroughly versed in Methodist history.

The Evangelist, being sketches of sermons on various subjects, by several preachers. London: Richard Davies, Sutton Street, Commercial Road, East. Leeds: John Parrott, Briggate. 1863.

THIS volume contains forty-eight outlines of sermons on some of the most important subjects contained in the Holy Bible. The authors have chosen to appear incognito, but we know not why. There is certainly nothing to be ashamed of in this pretty book. The outlines are sound in doctrine, logical in arrangement, terse in phraseology, and pointed in application. For our local brethren we know of nothing more likely to be serviceable, as furnishing germs of thought which they may develop, and adapt for their pulpit ministrations. We have sometimes been asked what we would recommend to brethren who have to work hard all the six working days of a week, and to preach on the Sabbath; something in the form of suggestive outlines, or elements of pulpit discourses, being required by such. Henceforth, we shall be free to say, we recommend the Evangelist. Some other works would be very worthy of recommendation, only their doctrines are objectionable; others, only they are too long, or too expensive; others, again, only the style is too high for our friends. Here, however, none of these objections hold. We therefore give the work our cordial recommendation. The price is two shillings, and there are 208 pages of letter press. We presume the work is the production of Primitive Methodist Itinerant, or local preachers, or both. Any travelling preacher will be able to obtain it for friends from the book-room.

Sunshine and Shade; or, the History of John Dale. Price three pence. London: R. Davies, Primitive Methodist Bookroom. Leamington: Gould, Wellington Street, and Rev. G. Wallis. 1863.

THIS is substantially a temperance narrative. It is fraught with useful lessons, and is every where trustworthy and interesting. The ravages of strong drink, and the pleasures and advantages of sobriety and religion, are clearly and earnestly placed before us. We wish for the little book a wide circulation.

The Mother and her Child; or the Maternal Nurse. By Elihu Tyas, Primitive Methodist Minister. London: R. Davies, Sutton St., Commercial Road, E.

WE have here a valuable discourse by Mr. Tyas, on Exodus ii. 9. It is adapted for usefulness, especially among Christian mothers. Very solemn is the responsibility of mothers, and well is it that they should be remembered by those who cater for the press or study for the pulpit. Mr. Tyas has supplied some wise suggestions and counsels in this discourse, and we hope they will be extensively read and permanently useful.

The Unpreached Gospel; an embedded truth. By the author of "The Study of the Bible." London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co. Price sixpence.

WE are not quite sure whether we understand the writer of this pamphlet, but if we do he holds some sort of millenarian creed, of which we dare not speak flatteringly. There are good thoughts in the production, but on the whole we do not see that it will do much good to either saint or sinner.

The Evangelical Magazine and Missionary Chronicle, March, 1863. The Mother's Friend, March, 1863. The Teacher's Offering, March, 1863. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, 27, Paternoster Row.

THE Evangelical is a favourite with us, and improves with age. The present editor, the Rev. J. Stoughton, is no ordinary man. And the ability he brings to bear on this periodical is worthy of encouragement among all the sections of Protestant Christians. The present number contains papers on the Colenso Controversy, the Victory of Faith, Romanist Proselytism, a Memoir of Dr. Bennett, &c., &c. The Mother's Friend and The Teacher's Offering are rich in good words, and calculated to prompt their readers to seek to be rich in good works. We give to each of them a friendly greeting.

OBITUARY.

LOUISA BRETT died at Lyng, Norfolk, April 25th, 1862, aged 43 years. During a revival of religion in her native village, when she was ten years old, God's Spirit convinced her of her desperate state by nature and practice, and she fled to the cross for mercy, and was enabled to believe with her heart unto righteousness; she then joined the church, and continued a consistent member thereof until her death.

On the day above-named, she was for a time alone in her own home, and while alone, with no friendly hand to assist her, no loving voice to comfort her, and no watchful eye to notice her wants, and shed the warm tear of sympathy over her, a fit seized her and she died. She fell suddenly, but we trust safely. "To die is gain."

On the next Tuesday her remains were buried in the village churchyard; the circuit ministers attended; and the rector of the parish kindly allowed to be sung in the church the hymn beginning thus,

"The morning flowers display their sweets," and at the grave

"Farewell, dear friend, a long farewell,
For we shall meet no more,
Till we be raised with Christ to dwell,
On Zion's happy shore."

May her sorrowing friends meet her in heaven. Amen. J. DALGLISH.

ELIZABETH BARBER, of Bradwell, Derbyshire, was born in the year 1824. For a great part of her life she attended places of worship, but remained a stranger to saving grace. About four years ago, she professed to receive the pardon of her sins, and joined our society. Her last affliction was long and severe, during which, when visited by our people, she appeared for the most part happy in Christ. Whenever we inquired of her state she appeared happy and resigned, assuring us she had no doubts of her acceptance with God. Just before her departure, she said, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," and on April 29th, 1862, she exchanged mortality for life, leaving a husband and three children to mourn their loss. May they meet her in heaven.

T. DOODY.

ROSANNA HALL, was born November 17th, 1811, and died February 11th, 1862, at Old Hill, near Dudley. In the year 1834, she went to live with a pious lady in London, and remained there about five years, generally respected. She might have remained longer, but God in his providence thought fit to remove her mistress from earth to heaven. She died in the arms of our departed sister. Rosanna then returned home for a short season, but after a few weeks went to Leeds, where she lived for seven years. There she gave her heart to God and joined society. This was about the year 1840; from that period to the day of her death, she was enabled by the grace of God to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Neither poverty nor trouble, temptation nor persecution, could separate her from the love of Christ. She left Leeds about the year 1845, for the purpose of attending to her aged father and mother in their declining years. She here joined Brother Smith's class, and was very seldom absent, and her experience was always that of a true Christian.

The last fortnight of her life was entirely spent in preparing for her departure from time into eternity. She spoke like one who was quite conscious that her end was near; she acted like one who knew that her departure was at hand. She would often lay aside her work and say to her sister and those around her, "Come, let us kneel down, and have a few words in prayer." Thus with the weapons of faith and prayer, did she fight the last battles of life.

On Monday the 10th of February, while looking through the window, the sun shining in all its brightness upon the earth, she exclaimed with warmth, "O what a glorious morning! but it will be more glorious when I get the other side of the river," little thinking that she was already above knee-deep in the stream. How appropriate the advice of the Saviour, "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." She was then afterwards heard to say very quietly, but very distinctly, "Now, Lord, fetch me! now, Lord, take me." These were the last words she was heard to speak on earth. They shew that her happy spirit was quite ready for its eternal home.

T. PALMER.

Died at Bishopwearmouth, April 23rd, 1862, Mr. HENRY BOHAM, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. Newcastle-on-Tyne was his birth place, where also he was apprenticed to a coach painter, and he was always distinguished for steady, orderly habits. After residing for some time at Alnwick, in Northumberland, and regularly attending the means of grace there, he removed to Sunderland, where he became a teetotaler; and, after being deeply convinced of sin in a temporary preaching room occupied by our people, he was brought into clear Christian liberty by the agency of his wife. Soon after this he united with our Society, and, as he regularly maintained a true Christian character, he grew in grace, and in the knowledge and love of God. Being naturally timid, he was not very conspicuous in the public means, but in his class he shone brightly, and also in the Sunday School he was much beloved, and his services were highly appreciated. After a life of general good health, he was on the 5th of April suddenly smitten with apoplexy. For some time he continued in a torpid condition, but afterwards rallied, and encouraged the hopes of his friends. His heavenly Father, however, thought proper to disappoint these hopes, and after enabling him, although hardly able to articulate, to give sufficient evidence of his Christian triumph over death, he received him to glory.

J. LIGHTFOOT.

MARGARET JOHNSON was born at Sneeds-hill, Wrockwardine Wood Circuit, about the year 1818, and finished her Christian course, April 10th, 1862, at Pensnett, in the Brierley Hill Circuit. From her youth she was favoured with pious parents, her father being a leader among the Wesleyans for more than thirty years. But notwithstanding the privileges she enjoyed, she remained a stranger to the grace of God, until sixteen years ago, when through a dream she was brought to see herself a sinner. After having mourned for her sins for the space of three months, during which time she was in such distress of mind, that it brought on complete prostration of body, she found joy and peace through believing. She at once joined our people, and became a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus. About eleven years ago, she came to reside at Pensnett, when she joined the society, and continued with it until she was called to join the church above. For the last few years she has been a great sufferer, sometimes unable to attend the means of grace, but she confided in Him who is strength in weakness, and I never heard her—

"Murmur or complain, or wish her sufferings less."

For the last few weeks she was confined to home, and was visited by our esteemed ministers and friends, who found her resting upon Christ for salvation, and with a glorious prospect of happiness beyond the skies. On one occasion, I asked her about her hope of heaven; to which she replied, with joy beaming in her countenance:—"I build my hopes upon Christ, he's my Saviour, my only Saviour." On another occasion, she said she had been severely tempted; I then reminded her of our great High Priest, who was tempted in all points like as we are, and who knows how to succour them that are tempted; to which she replied—"O yes, He supports me now; He has been my Saviour for a number of years, and He will not leave me now. For though I pass through the fire it shall not burn me, and through the river it shall not overflow me. Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death He is with me, and I need not fear; Jesus supports me, and enables me to bear all patiently." On another visit, as soon as I went in, she grasped my hand and shook it several times, and said—"I am now ready; I am now ready;" these words she repeated several times, and added, "I shall meet the friends who have gone before; the time of my departure is at hand; I shall soon be with Jesus; O, glory, glory, glory!" Just before she died, she requested them to fetch the writer, to pray with her. As I had not come home, they fetched brother Cadman, who, as soon as he entered the room, heard her say, "Come, Lord Jesus, come now!" She then said—"Pray, pray." Brother Cadman then engaged in prayer, and she said, "pray on." I having arrived then engaged in prayer; and as soon as I ceased, she repeated three times, "The blood, the blood, the blood!" She then lifted up her hands in token of victory. Thus she died, to live to die no more. "The blood of Jesus cleanses me from all sin," had been a favourite expression with her while she lived, and she forgot it not in the agony of death. J. H. GRIMM.

My father, ADAM KYTE, was born at the Sear, in the county of Hereford, in 1780, and died at Moccas, in the above county, April 26th, 1862. He lived after the course of this world many years, being very much addicted to cursing and swearing, attending the ball room, card table, and other places of vice and wretchedness, and he was a bad father and an unkind husband. But in the year 1826, the Primitive Methodists came singing:—

"Christ He sits on Zion's hill,
He receives poor sinners still."

Father and mother went to Dorston in Cwm Circuit, to hear that man of God, the Rev. Thomas Procter, and they were attracted by the new and strange, yet powerful preaching and praying, of this hero of the cross; father and mother were both convinced of their lost state as sinners, and in a short time after were enabled to venture their all on the atoning blood of the Saviour, and the Lord in mercy sent deliverance to the captives. My father's change of heart was evinced by his pious life, and love to the cause of God. He at once began to entertain the servants of the great "I Am." For I have known the preachers, Procter and Towler, to be there three or four days a week, when friends were few and homes were scarce. His last affliction, which was of a trying nature, he bore with submission to the Divine Will. On one occasion I asked him the state of his mind, when he answered by saying, "All is well, I would rather depart and be with Christ." On Saturday, April 26th, 1862, the struggle closed.

"His God sustained him in his final hour,
Say this, and all that's good is said,
His final hour brought glory to his God."

He has left behind him several children. The writer of these lines is a local preacher of twenty-nine years standing, and a sister is a member in Birmingham, and others are hearers. O, that we may meet our father in heaven. F. KYTE.

MONTHLY SUMMARY.

We have the gratification of being able to report that we have heard from all our district meetings in England, excepting Brinkworth, and with the exception of Hull district, they all report an increase of members for the connexional year. The increases, if correctly reported to us, stand as follows:—Tunstall district, 410; Nottingham, 380; Sunderland, 777; Norwich, 419; Manchester, 560; Leeds, 233; Bristol, 281; London, 602; The Missions, 804; and Canada has an increase of 579; Total, 5,045: besides which the Adelaide district is said to have an increase of 68, and the Melbourne district of 57 (from Sydney we have no account), so that without Brinkworth district (from which we hope to hear very soon, and which we believe has an increase), the increases for the past year amount to 5,170. But Hull district reports a decrease of 83, which reduces the nett increase to 5,087.*—On the whole, therefore, when the accounts shall be made up for Conference, we hope it will be found the year's success is not much below that of the year before. And all things taken into account, our friends, we think, will admit we have cause, as a section of Christ's Church, to thank God again, and to take fresh courage.

London is now busy with its great annual gatherings of philanthropists of nearly all classes. We hope in our next number to give a summary of the proceedings of the different public societies as they are now being published in their reports.—The Sunday closing of public-houses is still engaging public attention, and, we believe some, if not all, of our district meetings, have sent petitions to Parliament, in behalf of this object.—An effort has lately been made to get permission for opening the Edinburgh Botanic Gardens on the Lord's-day, but so far the Anti-Sabbath movement has been unsuccessful.—The Romanists are working hard to obtain government pay for their priests as chaplains in our 'gaols, where there are Romanist prisoners. They also wish to secure the same privilege in regard to our workhouses. In truth, they envy the position of Protestantism in England, and especially that of the Established Church, and by slow degrees hope to undermine it, and win their way to power and authority in the land. Let all Protestants be on their guard. We are of opinion that the priests ought to try to teach their adherents while out of prison, and not come asking for leave to follow them into it, and for honest and virtuous people to pay them for doing the work in gaol they neglected to do outside.—Infidelity is chuckling over the Colenso agitation, and between the priests of Rome and the demagogues of secularism there seems to be just now a fellow feeling of gladness on account of the attacks which have been recently made on the Holy Scriptures. Herod and Pilate were made friends when Jesus was to be put to death.—Dr. Baird, of America, Dr. Tweedie, of Edinburgh, the Rev. J. Crompton, of Chesterfield, and Sir G. C. Lewis, Secretary of War, in the present administration, have lately passed from their earthly labours. Philip, king of Macedon, employed a page to knock at his bedroom door early in the morning, and to tell him to remember he was mortal. These visitations remind us and our readers, that we too must die. They cry aloud, "Prepare to meet thy God."

A good work of religion is progressing in Montreal, Canada; we pray it may spread through the entire province, and the whole world. An effort has been made to secure the liberation of the Protestant prisoners in Spain; but in vain. The spirit of persecution is too strong at present. But we hope the sufferers will be graciously sustained. A petition in their favour was signed by 30,000 Frenchwomen, many of them Roman Catholics; it was also presented to the Queen, by her brother-in-law, the Duke of Montpensier. But Her Majesty is a true daughter of the Church, and the holy father and the priests still hate the heretics. Poland is still struggling with the Russian bear, and she has the sympathy of a large portion of mankind. Let her have our prayers that God may guide and help her in her agony. America is still weltering in blood, and the war makes slow progress. Lancashire still suffers, and emigration seems to be setting in. What shall the end be? We must trust in God, and wait.

The Russian Government has purchased, for the sum of 100,000 silver roubles, the celebrated collection of Caraitic manuscripts of the learned collector Abraham Firkowitch. After the collection had been duly examined by different savans, and pronounced to be highly important for the criticism of the text of the Holy Scriptures, for paleography and chronology in general, and for the history of Southern Russia in particular, it was delivered as property to the public Imperial Library. The Caraitic scholar, Abraham Firkowitch, has devoted, we hear, thirty years of his life to the acquisition of these rare manuscripts. As early as 1830, during his stay in Constantinople, he succeeded in finding some valuable Hebrew codices. This seems to have given him the impulse for his untiring exertions in this field. He sacrificed his fortune in the search for rare and old manuscripts; bore without murmuring long separations from his family; subjected himself to all sorts of privations, and often endangered his life. Mr. Firkowitch has travelled through and explored the Crimea and the Caucasus in all directions; he has lived for months in church-yards and burial-places, to study and copy old inscriptions; he has penetrated into synagogues and other likely places, where the Jews used to hide books on sudden attacks or invasions from the enemy; he never wearied of the struggle with fanaticism and barbarity. Thus he succeeded in collecting 124 Hebrew original copies of the Old Testament, which are older than all other Hebrew codices in any of the libraries of Europe. Twenty-five of the manuscripts in Mr. Firkowitch's collection were written before the ninth, and twenty before the tenth century. Five of the manuscripts on leather are maintained to be the oldest of all documents on the Scriptures, hitherto discovered. The whole collection consists of 47 rolls of the Pentateuch, on leather and parchment; 77 codices of the Holy Scriptures; 33 translations in different languages; 272 works of Caraitic authors; 523 works of Rabbinit authors; 250 miscellaneous letters and articles; 722 inscriptions; 300 documents regarding the history of the Caraim in Western Russia, and 300 old plans of different Russian towns.

GLEANINGS FROM THE APOCALYPSE.

SUGGESTED BY A SERMON PREACHED BY REV. J. TOULSON, AT HIGH WYCOMBE,
From Rev. vii. 13—15.

On Patmos' lonely isle, the banish'd one
In silent grandeur stood. Nature, perchance
Had thrown her sable mantle o'er the world,
Veiling terrestrial things, lest ought of earth
Should mingle with celestial scenery,
And spoil the picture. Wrapt in speechless awe,
He stood, who erst had lean'd on Jesu's breast.
An angel—skill'd in mystic scenes
That mortals have not learn'd, gathered the rays
Of peerless light, that round the sapphire throne
Doth shine, and photograph'd futurity.
The curtain rose, the exile gazed, and lo!

The moving panorama slowly pass'd
 Before his wondering gaze. Majestic scenes!
 Fraught with vast import, big with future bliss
 Or woe; successively had glided past,
 When lo! a pause ensued,—an elder spoke;
 Ask'd the important question, "What are these Array'd in robes of white? Whence did they come?"
 "Patmos! I come to tread thy solitudes,
 Earth, veil thy face, heaven, bid the curtain rise,
 Renew the theme, ye elders round the throne,
 For I would list the answer. Hark! it comes—
 In heaven's own dialect it sweetly falls Upon my ravished ears; "Lo, these have come "Out of great tribulation, washed their robes,
 "And made them white in the atoning blood."
 Theirs was no flowery pathway to the skies.
 I see the martyrs' fires, with lurid flame,
 Burn fierce and high, telling a thrilling tale
 Of bitter persecution firmly braved;
 Of suffering innocence and conquering faith,
 Crown'd with a martyr's heaven; weariness, pain,
 Offspring of poverty—hunger and thirst,
 Toil and affliction—sorrow's gloomy train,
 And the long catalogue of earthly ills
 Had stamped their image there. Yet, had they borne
 A deeper impress! sinners they had been;
 Had trailed along the serpent's slimy track
 And soiled their garments. Whence the wondrous change?
 The Jew might tread the temple's hallow'd courts,
 Wash in the sacred laver, and his guilt
 Remain unpurged, his trespass unforgiven.
 Did purgatorial fires their virtue lend
 To cleanse the plague spot and renew the soul?
 Did martyr fires compose the crucible,
 Melt out the dross, and leave the spirit pure?
 Rise! Polycarp, Huss, Ridley, Latimer!
 Rise ye who nobly sealed the truth with blood
 And give the answer. From the countless throng
 Of temple worshippers of every clime
 And nation, breaks one universal cry,
 "Worthy the Lamb who died to set us free,
 "Who washed us in his purifying blood,
 "Worthy the Lamb! and angels shout amen."
 O blest inhabitants of that fair land
 Where troubles come not, where no tears are shed;
 Whose shores are never lash'd by sorrows waves;
 Whose shining streets of gold, and crystal streams
 Mirror no toil-worn forms; whose hills and vales
 Resound not with the wail of human woe
 Or bitter lamentation; on whose plains
 No scorching sunbeams fall, no storms descend;
 Whose spicy groves and fair Elysian bowers
 Are never wrapt in twilight's deepening gloom,
 For there is no more night. My spirit pants
 To share such rapturous bliss. Arise, my soul,
 Shake the defiling dust from off thy wings,
 And let the prospect cheer thee. No more night!
 Poor weary heart, tired of thy sojourn here,
 Repining at the needful discipline
 In mercy sent to fit thee for the skies;
 Take courage now, and bid thine eye of faith
 Pierce the dense clouds that shroud thy path with gloom.
 The morn is breaking; o'er the distant hills
 I see the light. Father, I fain would come
 To dwell with thee within thine own bright home,
 Where there is no more night.

BIOGRAPHY.

MEMOIR OF THE REV. J. D. WHITTAKER.

THE REV. JAMES DUNN WHITTAKER, son of Mr. James Whittaker, was born on the 14th of January, 1822, at Hippings, Lancashire. We learn from an extract from his journal, that at the time of his birth his parents were members of the Wesleyan Methodist Society; they were "devoted to God, and very zealous in promoting the interests of God's cause at Hippings." Thus, in infancy, our departed brother was nurtured under the benign influence of the religion of our Lord Jesus. Referring to this period, he says, "My parents were anxious that all their children might early be brought to God, and enjoy his favour, which is better than life. As early as possible we were led to the prayer meetings and to the class. The Divine impressions made at those meetings were strengthened by regular family worship, at which we had gracious visits from on high." When seven years of age, "the work of the Holy Spirit became more and more clear, and the desire of my soul for peace with God, became more ardent. One day, in the summer season, there was an awful storm; the thunder, lightning, and rain were dreadful; my mind was drawn out in solemn musings on the day of judgment; the importance and final consequences of that day's decisions filled me with great concern about my own destiny. My father stood in the doorway musing, and speaking on the grandeur and terrible majesty of the storm. I silently retired upstairs, and by my father's bedside knelt at the chair often used for the purpose, to pray for the salvation of my poor soul. I felt I was a great and hell-deserving sinner in the sight of God. I wept, I prayed, I agonized—the thunder rolled, the lightning flashed in terrible majesty; and all seemed to say that God was displeased, and would avenge himself of his enemies. On that day, in the evening, God, for the sake of Jesus Christ, set my soul at liberty; my acceptance with God was clear, I knew, I felt, through Jesus, I was saved." Subsequently, our deceased brother lost his "confidence, hope, and prospect of heaven." Referring to the time of his restoration from his spiritual backslidings, he says, "The first Monday in 1835 was the beginning of a new era in my life. Henry Hargraves was visiting, in the plain Methodist way, from house to house. He called at ours, and said, 'I have called to invite you to class;' the good man went away after we had answered, 'We cannot come.' After he was gone, Joseph said, 'I will go;' I at once replied, 'Well, I'll go then.' We formed an attachment to the class, and continued our weekly visits. On the 21st of November, in the band-meeting God set my soul at liberty; then I could rejoice in him, and call him, Abba, Father." During two and a half years our brother was employed by the Wesleyans, as a tract-distributor, and, "it was not without seeing good done."

In a succeeding part of his journal our respected brother says, "In the fall of the summer of 1840, I had an attack of inflammation of the lungs and pleurisy. The doctor and our family had doubts of my recovery; nearly all hope was gone, but the hope of heaven was never lost in my soul. My prospect was bright, my confidence in God through Christ unshaken, during the whole of the affliction. I never thought I should die; I had the conviction that it was allowed, because I did not yield to the Spirit's work on my mind. For a long time I felt it to be my duty to preach the word of God. On the ground of my youth, lack of qualifications, and other things, I often resisted the impression, and would have moved otherwise; but God followed me. And in this affliction, I promised God if he would in mercy spare me, my life should be his; and when my way was open, I would make the feeble attempt to exhort sinners to flee from the wrath to come. The thing I promised the Lord I kept quiet, and went on my way as before, waiting for an opening, but I saw none.

"In the year 1842, my sister Ann got converted among the Primitive Methodists, and became an ornament to that church. At her request, my father gave the Rev. Samuel Smith a general invitation that when in that part of the circuit he should make our house his home. Some time in June I went with my friend, P. Gardinor, to Haslingden, and here I made my first effort to preach. I commenced work at Haslingden Foundry in July, 1842. Being a stranger in the town, I was for some time under the necessity of walking to and from my work. Finding this more than I could well do, I went to Mr. Smith, and asked him to recommend me to some place to lodge; he could not then, but very kindly said I might stay at his house until I could obtain a more suitable place. I found Mr. and Mrs. Smith a second father and mother. I have to thank God that my lot was cast with them. A class meeting was held in Mr. Smith's house; I at once joined, not as a matter of convenience, but from principle, believing it to be my duty to do so."

About two months after our deceased brother became a member of our connexion, his name appeared on the preachers' plan, and he continued to labour as a local preacher until the year 1845, at which date he received an invitation to enter the itinerant ministry, and was appointed to travel in the Birmingham circuit. In England, he laboured on the following stations:—Birmingham, Ludlow, Leominster, Darlaston, and Congleton. In all these portions of our connexion he faithfully and efficiently fulfilled his ministerial functions, but as the writer has not been favoured with a perusal of his journal, he can say nothing definitely on this part of his devoted life.

In 1854, Brothers Whittaker and Cole were appointed to labour in our Colonial mission field, and they arrived at Adelaide, South Australia, towards the close of that year. The following are extracts from a letter from the Rev. H. Cole:—"Brother Whittaker evinced great earnestness in labouring to improve the (Adelaide) Mission. Through his judicious business transactions, good sound preaching, and earnest pastoral labours, there was soon an improvement in the mission. I was his colleague for three years, and I always found him up and doing, planning, or executing to the best of his ability his plans for the good of the cause of God. Having a good knowledge of architecture, he rendered valuable service to the connexion in this department of labour. After travelling at Adelaide four years, he was stationed at Kooringa, and he had not been here long before a glorious revival broke out, and he laboured incessantly in it. In writing to me about this time, he says, 'We have a blessed work going on here, one of the best and most solid revivals I have witnessed since I left Birmingham.' . . . As a man, he was rather sensitive; as a friend, I always found him make himself friendly; as a husband and father, he was affectionate and kind, at the same time, when necessity required, he was strict and faithful. As a Christian, so far as I have seen and heard, he was one who walked and talked with God. As a preacher, he was above mediocrity; the more he preached—the oftener he was heard—the more he was liked. He could bring out of his treasury things new and old. As a colleague, I travelled comfortably with him. I have been with him on sea and on land, at religious meetings and in official meetings, and, also, in family bereavements; and I found him a consistent Christian, a faithful minister, and an affectionate brother in Christ." The Rev. Joseph Warner writes, "My acquaintance with Brother Whittaker dates from my arrival in this colony, November 23rd, 1858. He was then just closing his labours in the Adelaide circuit. On his entering the station it contained less than 100 members. During the time he travelled here it was divided into two circuits, containing a total of 199 members. During the same time eight connexional chapels were erected, at a total cost of about £3000. Brother Whittaker was an able minister of the New Testament. Our cause in this colony owes much to him. He was sincerely attached to the connexion, jealous for its reputation, and anxious to extend its usefulness. He is held in high esteem by many. The savour of his name will not soon perish. Soon after his removal to Kooringa, he began to complain of failing health. We hoped that his ailments would soon pass away, but contrary to this hope he became worse. When at length application had been made, and orders received for his removal, the whole of his brethren in the ministry, and many other sincerely attached friends, mourned sorely for him. The last time I saw him at Kooringa, at the close of the District Meeting, will not soon be forgotten. Some of us hoped to see him again, others not. But now we shall see his face no more. Our sympathy with the widow and fatherless is deep and general. I revere the memory of Brother Whittaker as a firm friend, a wise counsellor, a good man, and a faithful minister."

Mr. Whittaker, with his dear wife and three children, arrived at Wellington, New Zealand, on December 1st, 1861. His first appearance indicated that he was "a man who had seen affliction," but the voyage from Australia had evidently operated beneficially on his health; and he cherished a strong hope that soon his strength would be restored. He attempted to take his country appointments, but, alas, had soon to relinquish the idea, the disease—malformation of matter in the abdomen—entirely incapacitating him for the long journeys to the country parts. He continued to preach in the city occasionally, till within a month of his decease, and the congregations were edified and blest under his earnest and faithful ministry. One peculiar feature in him as a preacher, was, if I rightly opine, a natural aptitude of preaching to the eye as well as to the ear of his audience. Those who sat before him were impelled to see, as well as hear "the truth as it is in Jesus."

After such eulogistic memoranda as those given above, from the pen of my esteemed brethren, it would be superfluous for me to expatiate further. We will now lead our readers to

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate."

About twelve days prior to his demise, his left leg became swollen and inflamed, and his beloved wife wished to call the doctor in. On Friday, Sept. 26th, Dr. Kebble was in attendance, and instructed him to remain in bed. On Saturday I left town for my country appointments, and returned on the following Tuesday. I called as I came home, and found him quite eased of pain, and he expressed a hope that the worst was past. On Wednesday, he was quite conversant, and asked several questions relative to the approaching chapel anniversary, and other matters. I informed him that I was afraid he had come to bed to die, and wished him to be quite composed respecting all external affairs. He replied that he could not rid himself of the impression that his sickness was not "unto death," and he thought his Master had something more for him to do. We drew near to God in prayer, and while we were at the mercy-seat, he heartily responded to the supplications offered. On Thursday, he thought himself much revived, and his hope was sanguine. As I sat by his bed, I repeated a couplet by Dr. Watts—

"Thy saints in all this glorious war Shall conquer though they die."

He remarked, "Paul's affirmation was better than any poetry: 'We are more than conquerors through Him that loved us.'" I read a portion of Paul's writings and prayed, and subsequently left him tranquil. Early on Friday morning, Mrs. Whittaker was aroused by her husband's restlessness, and would have risen, but he wished her to be quiet. No vigil had been kept at night. Brother Francis, who had been very attentive during the week, came in haste for me in the morning. I went, and found Mr. W. partially deprived of his sensational powers, and he continued in this state till his eyes were closed in death. During the whole day he was unable distinctly to articulate a sentence. The last words I heard escape his dying lips were, "For ever and ever!" He expired about eleven o'clock on Friday night, October 3rd, 1862. His mortal remains were followed to the grave by a number of respected ministers and friends; and the whole of the obsequies were deeply impressive. Members of other churches, as well as our own, have come forward with practical expressions of sympathy towards the bereaved relict and children, by private donations and a public subscription. This is a good feature in the colonies in almost all cases of respect and need. May we meet our brother in heaven! Amen! JOSHUA SMITH.

P.S. In a letter of condolence to Mrs. Whittaker, the Rev. R. Hartley, of Sydney, says, "The valuable testimony he bore in my letter is worthy of insertion in his memoir. He says, 'I now feel, Brother Hartley, the consolations of that gospel I have preached to others to be of great value in a long affliction. Precious blood of Christ!'"

MEMOIR OF MR. J. BOWMAN.

JAMES BOWMAN was born at West Butterwick, February 28th, 1786, and resigned his fleeting breath at Belton, in the Epworth circuit, September 25th, 1862. He did not, however, pass through time regardless of eternity. He early believed in his redemption, free agency, and accountability; and that during his mortal life he must prepare for his eternal state. He knew, too, that only the religion of the Bible could fit him for a heavenly eternity; but, unhappily, for a number of years he widely mistook its character. "Being ignorant of God's righteousness," which is "by faith," he went about to "establish" his "own righteousness," (Rom. x. 3), and for what the Rev. J. Wesley calls "the fashionable religion of morality," he was remarkable, considering himself as good as most, and, true to the Pharisaic principle, "better than some." Indeed, the sincere and zealous professors of evangelical religion, in his neighbourhood, he thought to be actuated by wild fire, and pronounced their religion to be as unsubstantial and fleeting as the vapourous "Will-o'-the-Wisp" of some low-lying land. We wonder not at this. Mere morality, however estimable it may be as such, knows not the life of God, and is destitute of the glorious faculties of such life. It understands not the things of God. It has no heart of love, no pulse of joy, no tongue of praise, no vigour of holy zeal. Mere external morality, however correct, has only some semblance of life, without its divine realities and glorious manifestations. Hence, the subject of our sketch was, even then, one of the blind that have eyes, the deaf that have ears, the dumb that have tongues, the living that are dead—"dead in trespasses and in sins."

However, in the year 1821, a sermon preached by one of our ministers was made the means of his thorough enlightenment and conviction of sin. His first wife was then a member of our society, and it is not improbable that the Holy Spirit shed a brighter illumination on his understanding in answer to her prayers. His views of himself were now quite changed, and he felt himself of all men "the most miserable," exclaiming from the depths of his troubled soul, "O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me?"

Now he saw that outward morality could not atone for one past sin, and that the law to which he had looked for righteousness condemned him for ever! He saw he was destitute of the love of God, and that all his moral acts had been performed in sin; and that before he could perform one good work, he must do it from love, and that in order to love, it was essential first to be pardoned and to know he was. For how can a sinner be brought to love the God of holiness, who has been grieved by his sins, unless he first feel that God's anger is turned away? Thank God! those whom he had before termed "fanatics," were, as Brother J. Pilgrim says, "The very persons now to direct him to the atoning Lamb."

In humble and believing prayer he sought mercy through Jesus, and through him God acquitted him from the liability to damnation: he received a divine sense of this in his soul; he loved God because he then knew that God had first loved him, and his love to God thenceforward became the impellent principle of his actions. He at once showed his love to God and his people by uniting with the Primitive Methodists at Belton, and with them he lived and died.

In the year that he became a living stone in God's spiritual house, our people erected their chapel at Belton. This sanctuary, in the middle of a large field, was built in troublous times. Though Sanballat had long been dead, yet he had many moral relations then living at Belton. These deluded men violently opposed the erection, and Brother Bowman was one of those zealous friends who watched the building by night lest the sons of Belial should throw down what had been built up by day. How changed his situation now! In the nightless city, where the wicked cannot trouble, he enjoys the serenities of everlasting rest.

In 1833 his name appeared on the circuit's plan as an exhorter, and soon after he became a local preacher. In 1835 he was made a class-leader, and he was greatly beloved by the souls of his charge. As a preacher and a leader he continued to labour with acceptability until the infirmities of age occasioned his superannuation.

"He was" says Brother Pilgrim, "a superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and gave undoubted evidence of the deep interest he felt in the moral culture of his juvenile charge." He was also a trustee for two chapels and one preaching-room, and was always ready to promote their interests, both by his judicious advice and by his contributions. He seemed to believe that money was put out to the best advantage when deposited in God's bank, on divine security, at Spirit interest, through Christ, to all eternity.

As soon, also, as he had received Christ into his heart, he opened his house for the accommodation of both travelling and local preachers, and they were always made welcome by him and his pious partner; nor did he grow weary in this course of "well-doing," for the preachers were kindly entertained beneath his roof until his spirit returned to God. And in this respect he was a helper of the gospel of Christ. Many an ambassador of the King of kings may say of him and his wife, "They often refreshed me." His reward for these works of love is with him who shall hereafter judge our race, and who, as we learn from Matt. 25th chapter, will make the having done or not done for his cause, the pivot on which our destiny shall turn.

His regard for the Sabbath, too, was exemplary. "During the whole of his Christian course," says Brother Pilgrim, "He had such a reverential regard for the Sabbath that not any worldly contrivance, worldly conversation, or any other subject incongruous to the sanctity of the Lord's day, was allowed in his family." May we all follow him in this respect, and spend with him the Sabbath of heaven in worshipping God and the Lamb!

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN ESSEX,

LOCAL PREACHER, OF WOLSTON, RUGBY CIRCUIT.

WE know very little of the early life of our departed brother, further than that he pursued a course of folly and sin, up to about the twenty-sixth year of his age, when the Primitive Methodist missionaries missioned that part of the country where he lived. He then went to hear them, was soon convinced of his sinful state; sought for mercy; soon found the pearl of great price, and rejoiced in God his Saviour. He now began to feel concerned for the conversion of his partner in life, for whom he prayed, but for whom he was not permitted to see his prayers answered in this life. We hope his death will be the means of bringing her to seek the Lord. About the year 1827, he was thought to be a proper person to be put on the preachers' plan. Many of the journeys then were long, being from ten to eighteen miles from his home. On some of his return journeys he had to pass through Rugby, where he would often arrive about midnight; but having a kind friend there on whom he could call, and with whom he could take those refreshments which exhausted nature required, he was very seldom prevailed on to stay from home all night. And whoever neglected their appointments he was always punctual in attending his. When in good health, neither inclement weather, nor the prospect of having no congregation, could keep him at home. When there was a poor congregation, John would go into the open air and there preach to them. Hence, for his punctuality and simplicity, he was universally beloved by the people. At the time he first began to serve God and the church in the capacity of a local preacher, there was not the same amount of respect shown to this important calling that there now is. As one of the early pioneers of the connexion in this part, he had often to take an early breakfast, then set off on a journey of twelve or fourteen miles, and preach two or three times, with little or no refreshment. He had always something good to say about religion, and would recommend it to any person he came into contact with, and he was the means of bringing many of his fellow-workpeople to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. He knew how to direct others to that dear Saviour who had brought him through the narrow gate. His success in winning souls to Christ caused him to be sought after to take the appointments of a travelling preacher occasionally. In this capacity he laboured in the Farringdon circuit in the year 1856, where I had frequent opportunities of meeting with him. The Lord gave him many souls in that circuit, where he travelled more than twelve months; and when he returned home, he recommenced his labours, as a local preacher, with increased devotedness to the cause of God. He was subsequently requested to take the work of a travelling preacher in the Newbury circuit; and he laboured there very successfully for eighteen months. Brother Cummin says of him:—"There was a goodly number of souls brought to God in these parts, through his instrumentality. He lived the truth, and his conversation was such as becometh the Gospel of Christ. He was a great family visitor, going from house to house endeavouring to teach the people. He lived in the people's affection and esteem. He was often mighty in prayer, and having power with God he prevailed. He thought highly of Christ his Divine Master, and endeavoured in every possible way to promote his cause and interest on earth. Nothing afforded him more joy than to hear of the success of the Gospel, and many who knew him here can bear testimony to his self-denial, fervent prayers, earnest exhortations, and unwearied diligence in the cause of Christ. We were sorry to part with him, but his failing health rendered such a step necessary. He wished to return home and die. I consider John Essex was a true Christian, and that is the highest title of man." After he returned from Newbury his health somewhat rallied, and he laboured on with increasing zeal and earnestness. About a fortnight before his death he was preaching at Brinklow, when he told the people he did not know what was going to happen, but he believed the Lord was preparing him for some important event. He was then as well in health as he had been for a length of time. The last Sabbath of his life he preached at Stretton, where he told them he was planned there again next Sunday at the revival meeting, and he should be there if he was not gone to glory. On the Tuesday following he left his home in his usual health, and very cheerful, but he was seized with paralysis in the field; and was brought home speechless, and apparently unconscious in which state he lay, with short lucid intervals, till the following Saturday, when his happy spirit winged its way to the glory land. I visited him the day previous to his death; pleasure was very visible on his countenance: he pressed my hand, and made an effort to smile, and to say hallelujah. I prayed with him, but he again became quite unconscious. I visited him on Saturday, the 6th of October, 1862, about one hour before his death, but he was quite unconscious. We joined in prayer on his behalf, and in twenty minutes after prayer his happy spirit took its flight. He died in the sixty-ninth year of his age. H. H.

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN JOLLEY.

THE name of the late Mr. John Jolley, of Derby, must now lengthen the list of our departed brethren. More than fifty years ago, God led him, by a way that he knew not, to look on him "who his own self bore our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness." He, and several other thoughtless and wicked young men, had arranged to attend a Wesleyan chapel to make sport. He was to furnish himself with a peruke, and to put it on during the service, to provoke laughter. His companions failed him; but he went alone. But, when he arrived at the chapel, instead of putting on his wig, he listened to "the word of truth, the Gospel of his salvation." He was deeply convinced of sin, and soon after was converted from the error of his ways. He found "redemption in the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of his sins." Having passed from death unto life he loved the brethren, and proved it by uniting with them in Christian fellowship. He became a class-leader, and sustained that office among the Wesleyans till his removal to Derby. At Derby he continued some time in communion with the Wesleyans, and had a class-meeting in his own house, and occasionally a preaching service too. But eventually he thought well to leave his early associates and unite with the Primitive Methodists. He had reasons for this step; but they were local, and need not be recorded.

Having become a Primitive Methodist, he continued to exemplify the principles of Christianity in his deportment, and to work for the extension of the Saviour's dominion. Having respectable powers of mind, and a large acquaintance with the "Holy Scriptures, which are able to make men wise unto salvation," he became a local preacher. He filled that momentous office till advancing age unfitted him for the work, when he retired from it. But still he remained a good member, and a godly man, till summoned to the skies.

His character was remarkable only for consistency and general excellence. He was like Barnabas, a good man and full of faith. His attachment to God's word was great; but he read other books also. He attended the house of God, and endeavoured to sustain the ordinances of religion.

His religious experience, when death approached, was the fitting and certain concomitant of the termination of such a life as his. He seemed to have no particular disease. His body was worn out. He gradually and peacefully sank down to rest. When asked about his spiritual state and prospects, he always responded in such language as, "My peace is made with God;" "I am on the rock;" "I rest on Christ." He sometimes spoke of his own unworthiness; but he had the most assured affiance in Christ. His faith never failed. He wished to receive the Lord's supper before he departed, and it was administered to him. He continued trusting in Christ, delighting to speak on religious themes, and gradually sinking till the 16th of October, 1862, when the weary wheels of life stood still, and his deathless spirit winged its flight to the company of the glorified. He was nearly eighty years of age. May the life of the reader be as holy, and his death as tranquil as John Jolley's; and "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." S. ANTLIFF.

[Six-and-twenty years ago, when I was in the Derby circuit, brother Jolley was not only a local preacher, but a devoted and beloved class-leader among us. He was of "a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price." How old friends keep passing away! May we all be ready when our summons shall come. Amen. Ed.]

MEMOIR OF MR. WILLIAM B. WRIGHT.

MR. WILLIAM B. WRIGHT, was born at Broxholme, in the county of Lincoln, in the year 1811. In early life he was apprenticed to a shoemaker at Ingham, and became an attendant on our connexional ser-VICES in that village. When in his seventeenth year, a younger sister was brought to a knowledge of the Saviour in our Bransby Sabbath-school; and by her pious conversation and affectionate entreaty, during her subsequent affliction, William, when on a visit to his home, was brought under deep concern for his eternal salvation. His visits were repeated and his anxieties increased, until at a prayer-meeting in his native village, he was enabled to believe in Christ to his inexpressible joy. This Divine and glorious change was wrought in his heart in the month of March, 1824, and he immediately joined our society and school at Bransby, where his sister had been converted; but as he was still an apprentice at Ingham, he found it more convenient to withdraw from the church at Bransby, and cast in his lot with the Ingham friends. About two years after his conversion, his name appeared on the Lincoln circuit's plan; and in the capacity of a local preacher he laboured for twenty years with diligence and success; but in consequence of his health giving way, and the school requiring his attention at home, his name was removed from the plan at his own particular request.

At the expiration of his apprenticeship he returned to his native village, and again united with the Bransby society. Shortly after this reunion, the leader, and nearly the whole of the members, became insubordinate, and rebelled against connexional discipline; but as brother Wright stood firm in the hour of trial, he was appointed the leader of the society, by the Rev. H. Sharman, who was then the superintendent of the Lincoln circuit, which office he honourably sustained until removed to the church in heaven. Immediately after his marriage and settlement in life, he opened his house for the entertainment of the servants of his Lord; and a most comfortable and hospitable home it has continued unto this day.

About twelve years ago, his earnest advocacy of the principles and practice of total abstinence gave offence to some of his neighbours, and led to his ejection from his house in Broxholme; but through the kindness of a gentleman belonging to the society of "Friends," he obtained a house and cottage in Bransby, where he was much nearer to the house of prayer. In 1860, both his eldest daughter and the wife of his youth were taken from him by the relentless hand of death, but each of them departed in the full triumph of faith; and in the following year he was united in marriage to her who now laments his loss.

For ten years past his health has been gradually failing and he suffered much from indigestion and internal pain; but at length his disease developed into abscess on the liver, and terminated his mortal life on Sunday, October 19th, 1862, in the fifty-second year of his age, and the thirty-fifth of his connexional membership.

His character may be summed up in a few words. He was a consistent, upright, earnest, persevering, and benevolent Christian; unwavering in his attachment to Primitive Methodism, a liberal supporter of its institutions, and an ardent lover of its ministers. His last affliction was long and painful ; but it was borne with remarkable patience, resignation, and cheerfulness. To him death had lost his sting, and the grave its terrors.

“ O may I triumph so,
When all my warfare's part ;
And dying, find my latest foe,
Beneath my feet at last.” Amos.

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN JOHNSON.

JOHN JOHNSON was born at Carville, in Northumberland, four miles east of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Oct. 18th, 1805. His parents were Wesleyan Methodists upwards of twenty years. He was left an orphan at seven years of age. His father died when he was four years old, and his mother three years after, leaving, besides him, two other sons and two daughters to struggle with the world, bereft of parental aid. To assist in winning bread for the family, John was put into the mine when he was but six years of age, there being no law then, as there is now, to prevent such an impropriety. This robbed him of the opportunity of going to school to receive even the commonest education. One of his sisters took pains to get him to a night school, where he learned to read and write, which he found of great service to him in after life. This was all his education, except what he received at the Sabbath-school, which was an important addition. But as he grew up he became thoughtless, left the Sabbath-school, and gave himself up to gambling,—a vice much practised formerly, and even yet, amongst colliers. But from this ensnaring vice he was rescued while he was yet a youth.

In the summer of 1821 the Primitive Methodists missioned Willington Quay, where one Cuthbert Westgarth was converted, and opened his house for prayer-meetings to benefit the young people. At one of these meetings John Johnson found peace. Thenceforward a great change was observable in his conduct, and though it was said he would not stand long, grace upheld him. He united with God's people, manifested a marked seriousness, read diligently, took delight in out-door services, camp-meetings, and lovefeasts, boldly telling his experience at all opportunities.

At twenty-two years of age he nearly lost his life by a fall of stone in the mine, from the effects of which it was feared he would not recover ; but through mercy he was restored.

In 1829 he was put on the preachers' plan in North Shields circuit. A few years after he removed to Newcastle-on-Tyne circuit, where he continued his labours as an acceptable local preacher. For the last seven years of his life he resided at Westmoor, holding the office of a class-leader, and being otherwise useful to the cause. He loved the Primitive Methodist connexion, and admired its rules and discipline,—so much so, indeed, that he was thought severe and impatient sometimes in enforcing them. His preaching talent was not of the first order, but it was well cultivated. His scanty education was felt as a disadvantage, as he had everything to acquire. But he laboured hard to get theological knowledge, and took pains in preparation for the pulpit. His plain, practical, forcible exhortations were a blessing to his hearers, and especially encouraging to believers. He was a man of prayer, and loved his closet and his Bible. He was attentive to the support of the cause according to his ability. He also honoured the house of God by an orderly and regular attendance. Such was his anxiety to hear the word, that on a week-night, when he was obliged to go to work at eight o'clock, he would harness beforehand, and be seen in his pew in the miner's garb, and go direct from the chapel to the pit.

On the last Sabbath of his life he preached twice, with good effect, one of his texts being Job xiii. 15: "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him."

On Wednesday evening, Oct. 29th, after hearing a sermon at the chapel in his work-dress, as his custom was, he descended into the mine. On his way to his work, standing on one side of an inclined plane, while some waggons were passing, it is thought a dizziness had taken him, and he fell before the last waggon, which went over his body, mutilating him so that it was impossible for him to live long. On a person approaching him and speaking to him, he said he was happy, and wished to lie there and die. But he was taken home, where he died after suffering three or four hours, and being most of the time insensible.

He was forty years a member in the Primitive Methodist connexion, thirty-three years a local preacher, and many years a class-leader. He has left a widow and four sons to mourn his loss. But the Church triumphant has gained what the Church militant has lost. Let us unite in the prayer, "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men."

J. THOMPSON.

MEMOIR OF MR. JONAS SIMMONS.

MR. JONAS SIMMONS, late a local preacher in the Barnsley circuit, was born July 4th, 1832, in the parish of Cluton, in the county of Somerset. We have nothing particular to record concerning his early life, save that at the age of fifteen years he was awakened to a sense of his sinfulness and danger as a lost sinner before God; and after sorrowing after a godly sort on account of his past sins, he was enabled to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and to become a partaker of Divine grace. This saving change was effected in connection with the labours of Mr. G. Grigg, Primitive Methodist minister. Through unwatchfulness, however, and the influence of ungodly companions, his love to the Saviour waxed cold, and he again fell into open rebellion against God, making shipwreck of faith and a good conscience. He remained in a fallen state a little more than five years, when, at the age of twenty-one, he was again induced to return in penitence and faith to the Shepherd and Bishop of his soul. This was in the Pontypool circuit, whither he had removed on account of employment.

At the age of twenty-two he entered into the marriage state with Sarah Dennis, in whom he found a suitable and affectionate wife. From the Pontypool circuit they removed to Tamworth, in Staffordshire, where he began to labour in the capacity of a local preacher. His labours being owned of God in the conversion of sinners, he felt greatly encouraged in his work, and became ready to aid the cause of God according to his ability.

As a coal miner he frequently had to remove to different parts of the country on account of employment, but wherever he went, he took with him his love to the Saviour and the souls of men; and if there was no religious interest in the locality to which he had removed, he forthwith began to preach the Gospel to his fellow-workmen and neighbours, and thus again and again had he the pleasure of establishing infant societies in the places of his residence. This was a very pleasing trait in our departed brother's character; and in many places his name and his labours will long be remembered with gratitude.

He came to the Barnsley circuit a little more than a year ago, and was chiefly instrumental in the re-establishment of a society at Hoyle Mill, the place where he resided.

As a preacher his way was fully open amongst us, and his willingness to labour and his anxiety to be useful, won him the esteem and confidence of his brethren, and led to his being highly respected by the various societies in this station. His death was occasioned by what we usually designate accident, under circumstances of a very painful character.

On the morning of October 31st, 1862, a little after five o'clock, as he and brother G. Moor, an exhorter on our plan, were going to their employment, he had occasion to leave for a short time the regular road to the pit where they worked, when, coming in the dark to the edge of a stone quarry, he was precipitated from the top to the bottom, a distance of about fourteen yards. He was found shortly afterwards by the quarrymen, in an unconscious state, with his right thigh broken, and his skull severely fractured. In this state he was conveyed to his own house, where he expired at ten o'clock in the forenoon of the same day, leaving a widow and three small children to mourn over his sudden removal; and to trust in God for help.

His death cast a gloom over the neighbourhood where he lived, and his widow and aged parents sorrow at their bereavement, and the church laments the loss of one of her labourers; but we are all comforted by the pleasing thought that our loss is his eternal gain.

GEORGE NORMANDALE.

MEMOIR OF MR. GEORGE THURGOOD.

GEORGE THURGOOD, was born at Bradley, Suffolk, October 9th, 1841. His mother died about eight years since, and his father being an unconverted man, George had no religious training, but after the death of his dear mother he began to go with other youths to the beer-shop, and he became addicted to gambling and many other sins, and was greedy in drinking down iniquity. To use his own words, "I was going fast," he says, "the downward road to destruction." But the kind hand of heaven arrested him, and brought him and some of his companions to a prayer meeting at Willingham Green. They did not come many times before George was converted to God. We had a powerful prayer meeting that night at my house, and at the close, one young man, a backslider, fell stiff on the arm-chair, and Sister Ginn cried out, "You don't half believe together;" and we began to pray again, and soon there were seven young persons on their knees crying for mercy, George being one of them. I spoke to him, and urged him to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, for the pardon of his sins. He had a hard struggle, Satan was unwilling to lose him, but at length while trembling greatly, he believed with all his heart in the precious blood of the Lamb, and was instantly made free from sin, and filled with divine love, peace, and joy. This took place on the evening of the 18th day of April, 1859; and, at the same meeting, six others found peace and salvation.

George, from the moment of his conversion, ever stood firm by faith on the Rock of ages, and continued steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, till he passed through death triumphant home. He united with the society at Willingham Green, on the 22nd of April, 1859, four days after his conversion, and was never absent from his class-meeting without being able to give a satisfactory reason; and he always contributed his pence weekly at his class-meeting, for the support of God's cause. Those meetings were the delight of his soul, and his Christian experience was always intelligent, spiritual, and scriptural.

George was the eldest of three brothers, and as they all were saved about the same time, the three praying youths might be seen coming together to the prayer meeting on Sabbath mornings, though they had a mile to come.

Among the many means they used to spread religion around their home was this—they went to another parish and held a prayer meeting in their grandfather's house, and had the unspeakable satisfaction of seeing their grandmother, who was then eighty years of age, converted to God. George used to say to her, "Grandmother, I shall want to meet you in heaven." After she was taken ill, the three praying boys visited her two or three times a week until she departed, very happy in the Lord, to her eternal rest.

George's Christian graces were in certain instances put severely to the test. His father's house being small, and his father and family being only farm labourers, George was obliged to take lodgings at a beer-house for some time after his conversion, and his old companions in sin used to try him much, but he clung to the Lord and he held him up. He obtained a place of service with a gentleman, who with his lady, were professed Church of England folk, and finding that George did not go to the Church, they questioned him on the subject, when he told them that he was a Methodist, and that he attended the chapel at Willingham Green. They peremptorily forbade his going to the meeting, and told him that he must leave their service if he did not go to church. George as firmly told them, that as it was among the Primitive Methodists the Lord had saved his soul, he must and should continue among them, and attend the meetings; so he had to leave their service on that account. He was much observed and admired, by rich and poor, for his industry and upright life. The minister of the church desired him to become servant to him, and made him good offers, when he replied, "You are aware, sir, that I am a Primitive Methodist, and if I come into your service, I shall stick to the meetings and remain a member amongst them, as among them I have got all my spiritual good." The minister remonstrated with him, and told him that he could not allow any of his servants to attend Methodist meetings, but required them to go to church, and that he must do the same if he became servant to him. "Well, sir," George replied, "I cannot then become one of your servants, for I shall never leave the Methodists where I am getting so much good to my soul;" and so he sacrificed that offer too, that he might bear liberty to serve God and his cause according to the dictates of his conscience. He wisely went to an evening school, where he learned to read and write a little, and it being observed that he had a good and improving mind, he was put on our circuit's plan as a "prayer leader," at our December quarterly meeting, 1860, and the quarterly meeting in June, 1862, raised him to the full plan as an accredited local preacher.

His talents as a local preacher were very promising, and his diligence and punctuality in attending his appointments could not be surpassed. He was well received and made a blessing to many. On Sunday, November 2nd, he went to chapel for the last time, and he received a gracious baptism from heaven. He followed his work until Tuesday, November 4th, when, at his employment, he fell in extreme weakness to the ground, and was taken up speechless, and all who saw him thought he was dying. He was taken into his master's house, and when he had recovered so as to be able to speak, his kind master carefully sent him home in his carriage. On the next evening I visited him, and he knelt with us at prayer, and sat up that night till the rest of the family were gone to bed, then he retired, was taken worse, delirium ensued, and he was sensible only at short intervals afterwards. I saw him on the following Thursday, when he was sensible. I asked him if he felt heaven was his home, he said "Yes." Many other friends visited him. When asked to hold up his hand if he felt Jesus Christ precious to his soul, he did so many times. On the Friday before his death, he was able to speak again a little, and he said to his sister, "All things work together for good to them that love God." He could not speak for some hours before his death, but gave tokens of his happy state of soul and his preparation for the better world. He died in triumph on Saturday, November 15th, 1862, aged twenty-one years. We had entertained great hopes of his living to fill an extensive sphere of usefulness, and to be a blessing to many. But he is gone to be with Christ which is far better. Mr. Moore improved his death in our chapel at Willingham Green, on Monday, November 24th, 1862, to an overflowing and deeply affected congregation.

ON DOING GOOD.

[A DISCOURSE, BY MR. THOMAS DAVIES, OF WOLVERHAMPTON.

"And do good."—Ps. xxxiv. 14.

THE Book of Psalms is a manual of devotion; a treasury of rich experimental godliness. Its teachings are capable of informing the minds, regulating the hearts, and moulding the lives of men. Here are solemn warnings, practical directions, wise counsels, abundant promises, and glorious consolations.

In the Psalm from which our present text is selected, and which is supposed to have been written on the occasion of David's changing his conduct before Abimelech, as recorded in 1 Sam. 21 c., there are presented some of the strongest inducements to piety; inducements based upon experience. David was an exile in an enemy's country, and his life was in danger, but, in the midst of his distress, he cried unto the Lord, and "He delivered him from all his fears." Again, the Psalmist shows that they who are devoted to God, are the objects of his special care, and that even angelic hosts are commissioned to minister unto, and protect the heirs of salvation. The inspired penman then proceeds to invite all to partake of the riches of Divine mercy,—to enjoy the goodness of God. And he further asserts, that, although the young lions may lack and suffer hunger through a scarcity of prey, nevertheless, the wants of the souls and the bodies of those who believingly confide in God, shall be supplied, and nothing be wanting to make them truly and abidingly happy. Then, in a most impressive manner, he exhorts to a life of self-denial and practical holiness. “Keep thy tongue from evil,” &c., &c.

I. But we invite attention, in the first place, TO THE NECESSITY OF COMPLYING WITH THE INJUNCTION OF THE TEXT. Various reasons are assignable, why this command should be obeyed. We ought to do good,

1. Because the Bible enforces it.—The child, in consequence of the relationship that it sustains to, and the advantages that it has received from its parent, is required to render obedience to him. Equally so is the creature required to obey the Creator. Christian, your Father, God, through his word, commands you to do good : for you are exhorted to do good as far as you have opportunity to all men ; especially to those who are of the household of faith. To do good and communicate forget not ; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might. Christ himself said—“Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit.” Likewise some of the parables ; as that of the barren fig-tree, and that of the talents, beautifully illustrate our duty, and clearly point out the necessity of doing something for the honour of God, in the extension of his kingdom.

2. To do good agrees with the design of our being.—The Lord has created nothing in vain ; hence, if we direct our attention to animate or inanimate nature, to things possessing life, or those without life, we shall find that they all answer the purposes of him who created them. The heat and cold, the dew and rain, the gnat that dances in the sunbeam, and the worm that crawls on the earth, have each a mission to fulfil, a work to do. Is man, the heir of immortality, the great masterpiece of creation, an exception ? Has he nothing to do ? Is he created for a life of indolence ? No : but for a life of activity and usefulness. It was for this end that man was endowed with his elastic feet, sinewy arms, powerful limbs, moral perceptions, and mental capabilities ; these he possesses for use, not disuse, or abuse. His happiness will be in proportion to their employment. For God has made the vigour of the faculties contingent upon their exercise. The muscle will shrink, if it be never strung ; the arm will soon be motionless, if it be never exercised ; and the mental powers will soon be useless, if not employed. Exercise is conducive to health and happiness. Spiritual activity is essential to the soul's prosperity ; without it the Divine life will soon expire. Man has an existence for a nobler end than to eat, drink, revel, and die ; or to accumulate property. He is created for a life of Christian usefulness. The world is a moral desert, and must be cultivated that it may bring forth fruit unto the glory of God ; and the voice of inspiration declares :—" Son, go work to day in my vineyard." The mechanic the tradesman, and the labourer, employ their powers of mind and body that they may promote their worldly interests. And will not you, believer, with equal earnestness and perseverance, seek to fulfil life's mission.

The salvation of men is the result of Divine power and grace, but yet human agencies are employed. To save souls is the mission of the Church : she is the leaven of society ; and the conversion of the world will be in proportion to the efforts put forth by the Church. Men are used in the saving of men. Every convert is expected to be a converter ; God not only bestows favours upon his people for their own sakes, but blesses some for the sake of others. He looks beyond the immediate possessors of his favours ; these he designs shall not only be the subjects of his goodness, but the diffusers of it. It is the duty of the saved to put forth efforts to rescue the unsaved ; to do good as well as be good.

3. The deplorable condition of the world needs it..

A person that has not carefully investigated the domestic, social, national, intellectual, and religious condition of humanity, cannot form any just conception of its depravity.

At this advanced period myriads of blood-redeemed immortals are enwrapt in the gloom of heathenism, are groping their way to a future state amid the mists, the clouds, and the darkness of superstition. Vast numbers are still within the iron grasp of slavery, and more are being led away and enticed by the deceitful influences of priestcraft and popery.

After all the time and talent, the life and labour, that have been expended in the dissemination of Christianity in this highly privileged nation, there are tens of thousands who are the victims of evil habits, the captives of sin, and the enemies of God. Here, in this enlightened country, the apostles of error are sallying forth with the maliciousness of devils, and in the most alluring forms, seeking to weaken man's faith in the existence and goodness of the Divine Being ; to overthrow the oracles of God, and implant in the soil of man's moral nature the seeds of infidelity and other evils calculated to destroy the present and future happiness of man. The moral plague of intemperance rages so fiercely and extensively as to destroy the characters, the bodies, and the souls of thousands of our race. It is alarming to witness the vast amount of intellect, wealth, character, and life annually sacrificed at the shrine of Bacchus. The effects of drunkenness are beyond representation. Profligacy exists in most of the towns and cities, and in many of the villages of this land. This curse of Britain is practically countenanced by the teachers, the rulers, and the protectors of the people,—the very men that ought to be the first to remove the evil. Prostitutes can be seen on the broad street and narrow by-path; and chastity is being continually sacrificed upon the altar of lust. Multitudes of redeemed spirits are constantly being carried by the stream of Sabbath desecration into the ocean of God's wrath, the lake of fire. What folly and wickedness to waste the Sabbath's precious hours, which are given not only for the rest of the body, but the training of the soul for the higher life of heaven, in some pursuit of business, or pleasure, the reading of novels and newspapers, and the frivolities of parties. "Another evidence of the depravity of the human heart is observable in the deception, dishonesty, falsehood, and the arts of knavery that are generally practised in buying and selling; and also in the state of things which exists between employers and their workmen. The interests of workmen are ignored by employers; and the interests of employers are ignored by workmen. Each seeks to take advantage of the other on every favourable opportunity, and instead of mutual sympathy and confidence, suspicion and jealousy exist." Selfishness is the goddess at whose shrine multitudes worship. Indeed, men of all classes yield to its withering influence. Horse-racing, pigeon-flying, prize-fighting, and gambling; the ball-room, theatrical follies, and public house revels abound. Murders, suicides, and robberies, forgeries and insolvencies, jails, lunatic asylums, hospitals and union houses,—all proclaim the depraved or the wretched condition of humanity.

St. Paul, in Romans iii. 10—18, furnishes us with a most striking and correct portrait of man as he is,—not as he once was, nor as he may become, but simply as he is, a fallen, ruined creature. May God grant that we all may see the necessity of obeying the command in the text, and at once and incessantly trying to do good.

4. For this is a dignified work. "Deeds are great in proportion to their moral effects." The philosopher who, upon the wings of science, soars into the immensity of space, and discovers fresh manifestations of Jehovah's infinite majesty and might,—the statesman, who frames laws for the peace and prosperity of a nation, and who eloquently pleads the cause of its people,—the historian, who chronicles upon the page of history the doings of a generation,—the physician, who is acquainted with the diseases to which human nature is liable, who knows the nature of each, and applies an effectual remedy, so as to relieve the sufferings of humanity,—the philanthropist, who employs his time and talents in relieving the suffering and needy, helping the helpless, restoring the fallen, and gladdening the hearts of the sorrowful,—these all effect a noble work; each does good. But the salvation of a soul is a greater, sublimer work than the discovering of a planet, the framing of a law, the removing of a disease, the recording of a fact, the relieving of the needy, or the defending of the right. For "let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." The man who is the means of the conversion of a single soul does more for humanity and the world than did Newton when he ascertained the law of gravitation; or Columbus, when he discovered a new world; or Stephenson, when he invented the railway system; or than he that taketh a city or subdueth a kingdom. The victories of Alma, Inkerman, or Waterloo, are very little things in contrast with the bringing of a sinner to the Saviour. This is a work whose glory and grandeur words are too weak to express, and mind is too feeble fully to conceive. It not only lays the basis of personal peace, but augments the sum of general happiness, adds to the joy of heaven now, and will add to the bliss of that world for ever. It is such as to heighten the satisfaction of the Saviour, and therefore must be such as to increase the joy of every other holy nature. "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." The great, the wise, and the good, of all ages, from the world's infancy to the present period,—even Moses, the leader of the great exodus; Elijah, the hero of Carmel; David, the royal singer of Israel; Paul, the apostle of the nations; and Luther, Wesley, Whitfield, and a multitude of others, have been occupied in this sublime work.

Doing good is dignified employment, inasmuch as no less a personage than the Creator of all things, the Governor of all worlds, Jesus, the Son of God, was actually engaged in it. Christ was emphatically a philanthropist; he moved along the loftiest path of human activity, for he was always engaged in doing good—good to the bodies and to the souls of men, not only in teaching and preaching, but in healing all manner of sickness and disease among the people. And not only did he do good in alleviating present suffering by consoling the troubled, binding up the broken in heart, and wiping away the tears of those that wept; but in providing for the salvation of men, by the atonement he made for the sin of the world. Christ's life on earth was an active one; so must the Christian's be. A working Saviour requires a working disciple. "For the disciple is not above his Master, nor the servant above his Lord."

Opportunities for usefulness continually present themselves. "The opportunity to do good," says Cotton Mather, "imposes the obligation to do it." If you have the opportunity, you possess the power. There are the distressed and troubled to comfort and console; the suffering and needy to relieve and support; the careless to awaken; the ignorant to instruct; the vicious to reclaim; the backsliding to restore. "Every moment has its opportunity," and every human being is a recipient. Oh! seek to be filled with Divine love, to be clothed with Divine power, that you may “do good.”

We invite attention—

II. TO THE MANNER IN WHICH WE SHOULD DO GOOD.—It is not a matter of so much importance what part of the vineyard you labour in, as that you do labour,—not so much what you do, as how you do it. Whether you break up the fallow ground,—by the faithful reproof of sin, the inviting of your neighbours to the means of grace, the teaching of the Sabbath-scholar, or the distributing of tracts,—whether you scatter the precious seed from the pulpit or the platform, or sow it in friendly hints, or in visiting the sick, or consoling the distressed,—or whether you harrow it in by secret, fervent, agonizing prayer—seek to realize the approval of Jesus: to obtain the commendation conferred on Mary in the Gospel: “She hath done what she could.” “Whether you eat or drink, or whatsoever you do, do all to the glory of God.”

1. But if you are to do good, you must be good.

The efforts of a man destitute of the grace of God will accomplish very little, if any good; for they are not corroborated by a living example. Have you ever thought of the power and the responsibility of example? “Every human being has a character, and all character has influence. As in nature like produces its like, so in Christian labour every action produces its counterpart. An evil example, therefore, produces evil, and a good example produces good.” You must be eminently holy, if you would be extensively useful. Holiness is essential to usefulness. “One thing which gave beauty, force, and effectiveness to the teaching of the Saviour, was that he blended example with precept. His life was one grand embodiment of those principles which he sought on all convenient occasions to press home upon the observation and practice of his followers.” Christians, copy the example of him-whose name you bear; let your doings correspond with your sayings; let others see as well as hear your religion. Precept is good, but example is better. Acts speak more loudly than words. There are few things more impressive and useful than a holy consistent life. Seek the Spirit’s indwelling cleansing power, that you may do good by your lives and language, tempers and tongues. It is grand, and gloriously possible, for each individual believer to testify to the beauty, reality, and power of Christianity, by example and precept. You must

Prudence is the right application of knowledge to practice. Instances of the sad effects of imprudence, can be seen in the ruined character, blasted prospects, and wrecked fortunes of many. For want of this virtue, men have actually done harm while attempting to do good. Prudence dictates the cautious avoidance of evil. Christianity does not exclude its possessors from public view, but places them upon an eminence, from which they are continually observable. The Christian, "is as a city set upon a hill that cannot be hid;" he is subject to the gaze of God, angels, devils, and men. The ungodly are intently and suspiciously observing his movements; are upon the look-out to detect the slightest flaw in his temper, conduct, or pursuits; ready to magnify his failings into crimes, and his infirmities into transgressions. Take heed to your ways, be careful that you do not become a hinderer and not a helper of the progress of religion, a stumbling-block to others.

Seek to improve every privilege, for if you adopt the required means for the accomplishment of the desired object, success may be expected. Remember that things that are proper in themselves are not always seasonable. It is proper to reprove sin, but very improper to administer reproof when the tempest of anger or the storm of passion is raging in the sinner's moral nature; it is wise to tell a brother of his faults privately, but very unwise to mortify and enrage him by public exposure. The periods of great excitement, bustle, and business, are not the best seasons for engaging the sympathies and attention of men to spiritual things; while those of heavy trial, affliction, and bereavement, are much better. As the countenances of men differ, so do their tempers, habits, and principles. A certain kind of food which would be suitable for one man's stomach, would not be agreeable to another's; so the methods to be employed in bringing sinners to perceive their danger and hasten to Christ, are to be adapted to the character and spirit of those to be saved. Act upon the advice of Paul: "Walk in wisdom towards them that are without." It is quite possible to enlist opposition, commit mistakes, and inflict injury, which might be avoided by the exercise of prudence. On the other hand, we must be careful that our so-called prudence does not degenerate into inconsistency. Many persons are too ready to suppose that it will be useless attempting to do good to some people, and excuse themselves from benefiting their souls, by saying it would be unwise, or improper, or would give offence, or would do positive harm. Let all watch against this spirit; for to give way to it would be pleasant to flesh and blood, but very ruinous to the souls of our fellows. How needful that we all strive to "walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise."

3. Work affectionately.

Who can estimate the power of kindness? Have you not witnessed its effects upon animals as well as men? Kindness has caused stubbornness to give way, and opposition to cease; and in conjunction with the Spirit's influence, has led many a guilty sinner to the forgiving Saviour. There is a mighty influence in a loving look, an affectionate word, or a kind act. If you are to be successful in plucking sinners as brands from the burning, you will have to cultivate affection, not austerity. Do not assume an air of authority or superiority over those that know not God ; by cheerfulness and amiability of disposition, seek to win them for Christ. Let them see by your conduct that it is them, and not theirs, that you seek,—that you sincerely love them, and desire their present and future well-being ; indeed, you ought to try to feel for them as if their condition were your own. Especially cultivate and practise kindness towards those who may differ from and oppose you ; patiently and good-naturedly bear any reproachful words or unchristian acts you may have to receive from those who are your foes ; affectionately and forbearingly try to do them good. For a gentle and forbearing manner has often found the way to hearts which have been long bolted and barred against the most powerful attack.

4. The Christian labourer should labour very prayerfully.

Scripture and experience teach us that human effort, if not accompanied by the Divine blessing, will accomplish little, if any, good. The most strenuous efforts, if not under Divine sanction, and followed by the Divine blessing, will be as useless as a well without water, a purse without money, a locomotive without steam. In fact, the world's Redeemer said, "Without me ye can do nothing." In order to gain Almighty strength in human weakness, the approbation and assistance of God, there must be earnest, believing prayer. "For he that asketh receiveth." "Ask in faith, nothing doubting." Prayer is the language of dependence, the very utterance of want, and is the key which, when turned by the hand of faith, unlocks heaven's treasury, in which is deposited all that man needs. It is the channel through which flows the grace of God, the Divine Omnipotency to assist, and elevate, and bless human insufficiency.

If desirous to reap an abundant harvest of precious fruit, you must water the sown seed with sincere prayer ; if wishful to send a wave of salvation through the circle in which you move, you must be frequenters of the closet. Are you anxious that those over whom you have the oversight, shall become the crown of your rejoicing—shall swell the anthem of redeeming mercy, and bloom in the full vigour of immortal youth in yon celestial Eden ? your prayers must be fervent and frequent, agonizing and believing. "For in answer to believing prayer, the Lord will needful blessings give."

"Depend on him, thou canst not fail,
Make all thy wants and wishes known :
Fear not ! his merits must prevail ;
Success believing prayer will crown."

O yes ! For "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Do good,

5. Perseveringly.

To do good is very difficult. Satan will oppose the pious endeavours of those who seek to benefit others. He will most vigorously exert his influence to maintain his kingdom, and will employ his agents to do the same. Human nature is exceedingly corrupt, so that a considerable amount of faith, of patience, and of perseverance, are necessary.

Many have grown weary in well-doing. Reader, have you not been indifferent and indolent? Especially so, when your labours were not rightly appreciated by your brethren, and preference was given to some supposed inferior brother; when your good was evil spoken of, and your motives were misinterpreted? Though in prosecuting your mission mercy, you are exposed to the fierce storms of opposition, and have to climb the Alpine heights of difficulty, yet never think of retiring from active service: the souls of men are as valuable, and the claims of God as binding, as ever. Consider the difficulties that have been overcome, the advantages gained, and the victories won by perseverance. If you grow weary, your prospects will become dreary. Persevere, and success is certain. That sinner, with whom you have striven so much, may by the next effort be won for Christ; that part of the vineyard, in which you have laboured so long, and which has hitherto proved so fruitless, may, by the exercise of patience and perseverance, bring forth perhaps sixty, eighty, or a hundred fold. Give, then, the present to duty, and the future to Providence. "Be not weary in well-doing; for in due season you shall reap if you faint not."

Strive to comply with the command in the text,

6. Immediately.

There is a propensity in men to postpone the doing of the most important present duties to uncertain future periods. Very many necessary temporal and spiritual duties, which ought to be attended to at once, are often delayed and never done. Procrastination has robbed many persons of the most favourable opportunities for fulfilling life's mission. Is it not a lamentable fact, that there are many in hell who would never have been there, and very many on earth who are in the service and suffering of Satan, that would have been in the freedom and friendship of Christ, had it not been for this very thing? Many shudder at the thought of injuring the souls of men, who yet actually do it by postponing their duty.

Friend! heed not the voice of the deceiver; yield not to your natural inclinations by presuming upon time to come. But, take heart like a man, address yourself to your duties, and diligently improve your time and talents. By prudence and forethought, watchfulness and prayer, catch the passing moments as they fly, and turn them to the best account. The past is gone—gone never to be recalled; the future is none of yours; the present is all you have to call your own. Then, "boast not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day" or an hour may bring forth. Thou canst not tell what the next hour may produce; whether sickness or health, grief or joy, adversity or prosperity, death or life. The rapidity of time and the uncertainty of life, ought to prompt to immediate action.

Each day, and in some instances each hour as it comes, brings with it certain opportunities for well-doing, which pass away as those days and hours close, and which never, no never, return again. How important that you enter every open door of usefulness, and whatsoever your hand findeth to do, do it with your might. May heaven help us all ! Amen.

STRUCTURE AND POWER OF THE HUMAN HAND.

OVER the bony framework of the hand are laid the muscles by which the various parts are moved. But our space will not allow us to enter into these, save to point out a few general facts bearing upon their distribution, and the resulting movements of the hand and fingers. We find the thumb to be furnished with by far the greater number. It possesses no less than nine separate and distinct muscles : a proof, this, of its great importance and mobility.

The tendons of the muscle moving the last joints of the fingers pierce the tendons of that moving the second joints of the same digits ; thus enabling the former to act during the action of the latter, and in this manner bestowing a firm grasp. All the tendons passing from the forearm into the hand are bound down at the wrist by a ligamentous arch, so as to prevent all starting or displacement, even during the strongest and most sudden movements.

There is one curious little muscle, of no strength, and moving no important part, the use of which appears to be, to raise the inner border of the skin of the palm so as to deepen its hollow, as in the act of receiving money into the hand. From this action, it has been quaintly designated "the miser's muscle."

Another curious remark has reference to the manner in which the third finger is bound down to its fellows, so that it cannot be moved to any extent without also involving them in its motions. This seems to be useful as pre-disposing to speed and celerity in the act of grasping. The peculiar and independent position of the index finger is remarkable, and is caused by its being furnished with a separate and distinct muscle, as well as the common tendon of the muscle moving the rest. The use of this independent position is very obvious ; this finger being the natural opponent of the thumb, and serving for use in all the delicate and intricate movements to which that digit is applicable. It is also by no means unimportant as an agent of expression ; and requires, therefore, for the due performance of these offices, a wide and unconstrained sphere of motion.

As it is necessary that these structures should be well supplied with nutriment, and as the hand is continually in action, and often in such positions that the current of blood might be liable to frequent and long-continued interruption, there is need of some provision to counteract this danger. We find, accordingly, that all-provident Nature has devised means for an abundant and constant supply, by placing the large arteries securely in grooves of the bones, carrying them under sheltered places, and causing them to divide minutely, and join freely with each other, and with many neighbouring vessels. The two chief vessels of the forearm, dividing in the hand, unite their branches, so as to form two arches, one superficial, and one deep in the palm. From each of these branches pass off, between the bones, out of reach of pressure, and along the sides of the fingers to the tips, where they unite in loops, and give off many fine branches for the nutrition of neighbouring parts. Moreover, it is not only here, but in their whole course, that these vessels give off branches; and these unite, subdivide, and join others, until they form a dense and beautiful network, by means of which all the structures of the hand are nourished.

It has also been arranged by all-seeing Wisdom, that, while the arteries are distributed in the depths of the palm, the veins return along the back of the hand, and are thus in a position entirely free from the pressure and violence to which they would otherwise have been subject during its strong and multifarious movements.

Considering the great number of structures crowded into so small a space, and the many and complicated movements to which the hand is applied, we might have thought it probable that some jarring or irregularity would occur. But the work of the great Artificer is complete. Here, where so many muscles are frequently exerted together to produce rapid and various motions, all is kept clear: there is no creaking of the pulleys, no hitch in the working. The tendons are conveyed along the hollowed surfaces of the bones, in channels guarded by ligaments, and lubricated by the oily-looking fluid called synovia, to the presence of which we owe the free and pleasant motion of our limbs. Without it, every movement would give pain, instead of pleasure, and all our joints would in a short time become useless, or deformed.

With all these beautiful and well-adapted structures, the hand would be as yet imperfect, unless they were governed and directed to their proper functions. This is effected by the agency of the nerves, which are plentifully distributed to the hand, and there serve both for sensation and motion. Thus there are branches, distributed in a peculiar manner, to the muscles, to the sides and tips of the fingers, coming from two large nerves of the arm, and divided at the root of the fingers, in the cleft between two, into branches for the opposed sides. Then there are smaller branches, the minute subdivisions of other small nerves, serving to endow the skin of the palm and fingers with its acute sensibility, and ramifying, together with the small blood-vessels, in the layer of fat and loose tissue under the skin. These nerves are distributed in little projections of the true skin, called papillæ, which are arranged in parallel lines, with intervening hollows, upon the tips of the fingers; but in other places are scattered irregularly. It is in these papillæ that the acute perception of touch resides; and their great number renders the tips of the fingers the most sensitive parts of the body.

And over all this, to preserve the structure of the true skin from injury, and to prevent rough contact from impairing the remarkable delicacy of the sense of touch, is spread a glossy and insensible varnish, flexible and porous, allowing exhalation and absorption to take place; gradually worn away by friction, and as gradually renewed: nay, if frequently rubbed off, becoming stronger and thicker to resist the violence.

In addition to the protection afforded by the cuticle, or scarfskin, just mentioned, the fingers bear, at the back of their tips, a support of a horny nature,—the nails. Of these the office is to protect the tips, and afford a resistance against which they may be pressed, during the act of feeling. For, were there no resisting points, we should be unable accurately to appreciate the properties of bodies, even though aided by the finest and most delicate sense of touch. All would feel alike; the rough would be confounded with the smooth. Even the finest perception would only serve to distinguish very marked differences; and we should be unable to hold any small object with security.

The perception of touch is not bestowed equally upon the whole surface of the hand: it is only on the palm, and on the front of the fingers, that the skin is so exceedingly sensitive. On the back of the hand and fingers it is not by any means so highly endowed; nor is the keen faculty necessary in these parts. It is an attribute of Nature to be as provident as she is perfect: for, as she never bestows her gifts where they are not requisite, so neither does she withhold anything where the possession would be beneficial. Had the back of the hand been as sensitive as the palm, we should have been very frequently liable to pain, from its greater exposure to accidents; and the sensitiveness would have served no good purpose, as from its position this part of the hand could not have been used with any adequate degree of ease or accuracy.

And now, having briefly examined the chief features of the construction of the hand, and gained some idea of the number and importance of the structures entering into its formation, and of their fitness for the production of its complex movements, let us turn for a moment to admire its peculiar and characteristic beauty.

How gracefully do its flowing lines and taper fingers terminate the limb! and how well does its whole aspect correspond to the general contour and physiognomy of the possessor! How full of soft curves, how plump and dimpled, is the tiny infant-hand! As sang poor Hartley Coleridge,—

“How fair, how small, how white and pure!
Its own most perfect miniature:
The baby-hand, that is so wee,
And yet is all it is to be.”

Within its little limits it contains all the elements of future strength,—destined, perchance, to work great deeds.—Even the large, square, masculine hand is not without its own manly beauty, expressive of appropriate energy and force of character. But it is in the fair and delicate hand of woman that we find the best examples of manual grace.

The general proofs of design which have been reviewed do not avail to show how the smallest and apparently most insignificant points of the structure have each its own especial use and aim, while all tend to one final result. To examine these points, nay, even a mere recapitulation, would require a volume.

Some persons have had the temerity to regard the general analogy which exists between the anterior extremities of the lower animals and those of man, as a proof that the elaboration displayed in the latter is a result merely of development, and not the distinct completion of a wise and perfect design. But when we look more closely into these analogies, and find the same general outline of a plan, yet so adapted as to serve purposes widely different in the different animals, and each so thoroughly suit to the habits of the possessor, that none even of our doubters have yet ventured to propose any plan upon which a more useful limb could be formed for any one of these creatures; when we see the fin of the fish, and the wing of the bird, so beautifully adapted for cleaving yielding media, and yet so exactly modified to suit their different circumstances; or the clawed paw of the feline race, so movable, and so carefully adjusted for the purposes of seizing and tearing their prey: the hoof of the ox, cleft to suit the soft soil; that of the horse, hard to beat the firm ground;—when we see these, or any other of the myriad points brought under the notice of the anatomist, can we hesitate for one moment in admitting the design of all this?

Look but at the shape of the hand. Could anything be better fitted for its especial uses? Had it been longer, larger, or broader, would it have been better? Better, perhaps, for an ape, or a sloth,—an animal which uses the hands only as a means of supporting his body, by holding on to the branches of the forest in which he lives: but not better, not nearly so well, for man, whose hand is used for nobler offices; who wants not merely strength in the grasp, but also speed in moving and delicacy in the touch.

Even the comparative length of the fingers has its reasons. This is one of the arrangements most useful to man. Had the fingers been all of one length, we should have been unable to bring their tips into a line (save when they were extended), so as to oppose the thumb: and, with this, we should have lost one of the chief and most peculiar of adaptations to the uses of man.

And is there no design in all this? Is it consonant with the laws of development, that all these minute and secondary points should be so admirably and elaborately fitted for the benefit of the individual? Is there no evidence of design in the admirable sensitiveness of the palm, and the comparative dulness of the back of the hand?—none in the remarkable manner in which the delicate structures are supplied with nutriment, and guarded from injury, even during the most strenuous exertion? Is all this array of fitness, carried on downward to the minutest portion made visible by the microscope, no evidence of design?

Take but the smallest portion of any structure within this little space,—even so little as a strip of skin. Look at its covering, so soft and pliable, yet so impervious to injurious influences; so sensitive to the slightest touch, yet avoiding altogether the painful sensibility of abraded surfaces. What could be better fitted for its office? And is this no evidence of design?—Then look deeper, to the true skin, with its numberless filaments of nervous tissue, and its finest ramifications of the capillary blood-vessels; its structure so exquisitely sensitive, and yet so carefully guarded. Is there, again, no design here?—Nay, then look deeper still. See that numerous collection of muscles, each acting upon its own particular portion of the limb: each separate, and yet acting in unison with its fellow. See how these are governed by that network of nervous filaments; nourished by those fine capillary vessels; guarded by the bones and strong ligaments; and all within a space so small as one little hand. Surely, we cannot but acknowledge that He who is high above all men, who hath heaven for His throne, and the earth for His footstool, hath done this; and done it, as He hath done all things, well!

FOR PREACHERS AND CLASS-LEADERS.

EXTRACTS.

POINTLESS SERMONS.

POINTLESS sermons John Newton pithily compares to a letter put into the Post-office without a direction. It is addressed to nobody, it is owned by nobody, and if a hundred people were to read it, not one of them would think himself concerned in the contents. Such a sermon, whatever excellences it may have, lacks the chief requisite of a sermon. It is like a sword which has a polished blade, a jewelled hilt, and a gorgeous scabbard, and yet will not cut, and therefore as to all real use is no sword. The truth properly presented has an edge; it pierces to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit; it is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart.—The Christian Treasury, 1858.

SERMONS.

THE finest encomium, perhaps, ever bestowed on a preacher was given by Louis the Fourteenth to the eloquent Bishop of Clermont, Father Massillon. After hearing him preach at Versailles, he said to him, "Father, I have heard many great orators in this chapel; I have been highly pleased with them; but for you, whenever I hear you, I go away displeased with myself, for I see more of my own character."—Blair's Lectures.

BENGEL.

WRITING to his pupil Reuss, as to the various readings of the New Testament, he says: "Take and eat in simplicity the bread as you have it before you, and be not disturbed if you find in it now and then a grit of the millstone."—The Christian Treasury, 1858.

During one illness he sent for a student in the institution, and requested him to impart a word of consolation. The youth replied, "Sir, I am but a pupil, a mere learner; I don't know what to say to a teacher like you." "What?" said Bengel, "a divinity student not able to communicate a word of Scriptural comfort!" The student, abashed, contrived to utter the text, "The blood of Christ, the Son of God, cleanseth us from all sin." "That is the very word I want," said Bengel; "it is quite enough," and taking him affectionately by the hand, dismissed him."—Ibid.

BISHOP BUTLER.

It is said that, in his last hours, Bishop Butler, when conversing with his Chaplain on those subjects which could then alone be interesting, thus expressed his uneasiness, "Though I have tried to avoid sin, and to please God to the utmost of my power, yet, from being conscious of my constant weakness, I am afraid to die!"

"My Lord," said his Chaplain, "you forget that Jesus Christ is a Saviour."

"True," replied the Bishop; "but how shall I know that he is a Saviour for me?"

"My Lord, it is written, 'Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out!'"

"True," said the Bishop; "and I have read that Scripture a thousand times, but I never felt its full value till this moment; stop there, for now I die happy!"—The Cottager's Monthly Visitor.

ROWLAND HILL.

HE (the Rev. Rowland Hill) used to like Dr. Ryland's advice to his young academicians: "Mind, no sermon is of any value, or likely to be useful, which has not the three R's in it,—Ruin by the Fall, Redemption by Christ, Regeneration by the Holy Spirit." Of himself he remarked: "My aim in every sermon is a stout and lusty call to sinners, to quicken the saints, and to be made a universal blessing to all."—Life of Rev. Rowland Hill, by Rev. E. Sidney.

One of his (Rev. Rowland Hill's) favourite books was 'Gurnall's Christian Armour,' and he often recommended it. The remark of an old divine, that there is no armour for the back in the panoply of the Christian soldier, was also frequently quoted and enlarged on in his sermons. "The believer," he used to say, "never turns his back upon his foe."—Ibid.

FOR THE FAMILY.

RELIGIOUS VALUE OF OBEDIENCE.

It has been remarked by one of very great experience and knowledge of human nature, that those who have never been taught rightly to obey their parents, find it very hard to submit their hearts to God. Any inquiry into the previous history and character of those added to our churches will amply illustrate and confirm this observation. Be assured that if one has not been accustomed to yield his will to authority, if he has life-long been in the habit of enthroning it above law, he will not readily bring it down to submission when the higher claims of God are placed before him. There must be a conflict first. True, this there is in almost every soul; but in his the conflict is marked and desperate. When the demands of God are urged, the duty of immediately bowing his will, and the submission of his soul to God, are set before him, at once his life-habit of rebellion comes into action, and stands resolutely in his way. He has never been accustomed to submit, why should he? how can he begin now? In a multitude of cases such persons do never submit themselves to God; or if ever, then only after a conflict which is like a death-struggle. I suppose many and many a case of what is erroneously called "deep conviction of sin," and truly of deep and dreadful distress, might be explained by the early life of the man: it is, after all, only the struggle of an unsubdued will; a will never bowed to any authority, coming face to face with a law to which it must bow or be ruined.

Such cannot be the case of one who has from the first been taught to reverence and submit to parental law. He has been trained to obey with his whole heart, and in view of those superior claims, because they are superior. He has been accustomed to submit to this subordinate law; this law which is but a rudiment of the Divine law. Now, when the greater law presents itself and makes its demand, the habit of his life prompts him to yield. These habits are on the side of submission to God. When the law calls for immediate surrender of the soul, when the Creator, the infinite Parent, asks the whole heart, and when the soul perceives the authority which claims the offering,—accustomed to yield, it obeys and consecrates itself to God. There is no long conflict, but, by a speedy and a calm submission, the soul enters into rest quickly. Such are the cases of easy conversion.

I think that I do not go too far, when I say that a Christian parent may not only expect this issue of such training, but may look for more. Under God's blessing, and by his rich grace, he may be so successful that his child shall, so early as almost unconsciously to himself, become a child of God. The habit of submission, formed almost from the first breathing, may be so interwoven with the child's nature, that he may scarcely notice or know the time when he first yielded himself to his Saviour. When the day of the new birth comes, the claims of God seem so clear, and so reasonable, that his heart bows readily and willingly before them. There is no struggle to mark the time; there is no fierce dashing of contending waves; the flowing stream moves so gently as it mingles itself with the will of God, that the very place where the waters met is scarcely to be noted.

All this may be true of repentance; and it is equally true of faith. It will be easy for such a child to exercise faith in Christ. Here, too, the habits of his life come in, not to oppose but to aid him. The foundation of his obedience is the faith which he has in his parents. He obeys because he believes. His obedience rests on his belief. He has been trained to the one through the other. Obedience and faith go hand in hand. So, when the soul is brought into close relationship to God, faith finds a place prepared for it in the soul. When God speaks, it obeys; and when he asks, the soul trusts. Accustomed to trust in him, whom it obeys, when it has obeyed God, it believes his promises, and trusts his grace.

WHAT MAY BE SECURED BY THE TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

"Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old, he will not depart from it." (Prov. xxii. 6.)

THERE is a natural principle recognised here. Nowhere is the close connexion between cause and effect more fully illustrated than in family government and its consequences. Facts that should encourage parental fidelity and unwavering faith, are occurring every day. Of one hundred theological students gathered at one time, within a few years, in one of the schools of the prophets, ninety-eight were the sons of believing parents. What a testimony!

Two fellow-pilgrims to the heavenly city, both of them parents, were conversing in my hearing some days since. The locks of one of them was bleached with the snow of almost seventy winters, and as he spoke of the companion of his youth, who had entered upon her rest a dozen years ago, it was evident that his heart beat with a quicker pulsation at the thought of soon joining her in the heavenly world. "I have five children," said he to his companion, a minister in middle life, "three of my sons and my only daughter give good evidence that they are born from above; the youngest is very virtuous, perfectly moral, but I want to see him experience that great change, without which no man can see the kingdom of God. And," continued he, after a little pause, "I am not without faith that I shall. I have faith in the efficacy of his pious mother's prayers that they will prevail." "I," responded his companion, "am one of nine children, all now in mature life. With two exceptions, we are professors of religion. One of the two appears to be under gracious influences. I have never known the remaining one to be under deep religious conviction; but my father always said he believed he would be brought into the fold." Yes, sainted father, we too believe that you will see all your jewels adorning your Saviour's diadem.

A Christian father was, some time ago, speaking of sending his two sons to college when they should be old enough. "But," said the person whom he was addressing, "do you not fear to expose them to the temptations of college life without the safeguard of piety?" "They will be Christians ; I have no doubt of it," was his earnest reply, given with such manifest confidence as no one would wish to distrust. A short time since, I learned that these two boys, one of whom is expected to enter college next autumn, are both deeply interested in the subject of their personal salvation. Yes, "they will be Christians ;" and may this prove to them "the accepted time," and "the day of salvation."

Forty years ago, there lived in a retired hamlet, a man who made no profession of religion. He never prayed in his family, he never visited the sanctuary. Eight sons and daughters surrounded his family board, and, strange to say, as it may seem, he not only trained them with scrupulous care and fidelity in habits of the strictest morality, but taught them to respect religion and its ordinances. He required of them prompt, unquestionable obedience to parental authority, and used his authority to enforce more careful attention to the precepts of the Bible, than, it is feared, some Christian parents exact. He required them to keep the Sabbath by refraining from play while children, and from all labour as they advanced in years. He expected them to attend church regularly, both in the morning and afternoon. A falsehood, an oath, or any other open violation of the moral law, brought his severe punishment upon the offender. What was the result? Not one of these children was ever known to be guilty of any gross immorality. They are all living to-day, and are respected in the various neighbourhoods where they reside. Not only so—they are all members in the church of Christ, and several of them are regarded as eminent Christians.

If such be the result of training children in the way they should go, by a parent who never himself walked in that way, what may not be expected from simple fidelity, accompanied by the powerful influence of holy example, and with the blessing of God secured by covenant?

Surely, as “a man soweth,” so “shall he reap;” and none may labour with fuller expectation of a golden harvest, than they who cast the good seed of the kingdom into the fertile soil of youthful minds and hearts. “The promises of God are Yea and Amen, in Christ Jesus.” Christian parents, labour on; let your faith never falter. When you gather your children together at the family altar, when you lay your hand in blessing on their young heads, and whisper in their ear your yearning desires that they may love and serve your Saviour, when you teach them the great principles of the Bible,—remember that you are building around them walls of defence which they cannot overleap, to “walk in the counsel of the ungodly,” and to “stand in the way of sinners.”

HEAVEN'S REGALIA.

'T was night; a Christian lady slept,
And dreamed a dream of heaven;
She thought within its pearly gates
To her was entrance given.
She stood upon the sea of glass,
Amid the white-robed throng;
She walked the golden streets, and sang
The everlasting song.
The conquering palm was in her hand,
She tasted bliss untold;
And on her radiant head she wore
A crown of shining gold.
O! clime of glory, no regret
May ever mar thy rest;
Yet sighed the sleeper as she dreamed—
She was not wholly blest.
She marked the flashing diadem
O'er many a princely brow,
Resplendent with the diamond blaze
And the rich ruby's glow.

O'er turquoise fair and princely pearl
The emerald glory streamed;
But in her heavenly crown, alas!
No radiant jewel beamed.
O! that to grace her coronet
One gem she yet might win;
O! could she but return to earth,
And save one soul from sin.
For well she knew what jewels gave
Those crowns so rich a blaze;
They were the souls of sinners shewn
The error of their ways.
She woke, and lo! 't was but a dream,
But in the Book divine
She read who in the courts of bliss
Shall first in glory shine:
That they who unto righteousness
Do many sinners turn,
Like stars in heaven's firmament
For evermore shall burn.—W. H. Y.

THE BOOK OF THANKS, OR THE REMEMBRANCE OF MERCIES.

SOME time ago I read the story of a boy who kept a book, very like the books you used to write your copies in, and which he called his “Book of Thanks!” “Book of Thanks,” do you say, “why, whatever sort of a book was that?” So, too, his cousin wanted to know, who happened one day to see it. He was very nearly getting out of temper with a companion of his, whose name was Ben; and in answer to his cousin's inquiry, he opened it and read, “March 8, Ben lent me his new bat. June 4, when I lost my shilling, Ben made it up to me kindly." "Well," said he, as he turned down the leaf, "Ben is a good fellow after all!" Now, I do not suppose you will have much trouble in telling what this book was for. The boy kept it to write down all the kindnesses which he received from his companions or friends, that whenever he was tempted to get angry with any one of them, he might look to this "Book of Thanks," and that would be the way to make him feel good humoured and happy again.

And had you looked at this book, you would have seen that, at the top of every page there was written, "father, mother;" because, as he said, he was always receiving kindnesses from them; and had you turned to the very first page, you would have found this text, "Every good gift is from above;" "a text put there," to use his own words, "to make me remember that all the kind friends I have were given to me by the Lord, and that while I am grateful to them, I should first of all be thankful to him."

To make him remember was the reason why he kept this "Book of Thanks;" and oh! that every one of you would, if not keep just such a book as he did, yet seek to learn, in whatever way you can learn it best, the lesson which he sought to learn, to remember your mercies; in other words, to be thankful.

We are always receiving mercies; but it is, alas! too true, that we do not always remember them. Some, indeed, never remember them at all. They are like the heath in the desert, upon which the rain falls, as it falls upon other plants, but which shows no sign of welcome to the refreshing shower. Others never remember them till they are taken away, and by that taking away they feel their value as they never felt it before. And then the gratitude of others is like the morning cloud and the early dew, which soon pass away—it never lasts long. And how many forget why all these mercies are given them, forget that God's goodness is intended to lead them to love him, and to serve him, and only remember it when those mercies are taken away, never to be restored!

"Be ye thankful," is the lesson I want you all to learn; and I want you all to learn it while you are young; for, believe me, the longer you live forgetting God's mercies, the more difficult will it be for you to remember them at all. You will get so careless, so indifferent, that his mercies will have the effect upon you that the sun has when it shines upon the clay, it makes it harder and harder; and God will have to say of you as he said of his people of old, "My people have forgotten me times without number." "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."

God's mercies—have you ever thought how many they are? I have sometimes thought that their number is one reason why we feel their value so little, and that those who have but few mercies are much more likely to feel thankful to God for the few, than those who have so many. A poor man was once going in a little boat away from his native home, a small desolate island, known by the name of St. Kilda. He was on a visit to an island very much larger than his own. Some persons in the boat told him of the wonders he was about to see, and were not ashamed to laugh at him for his ignorance, till at last one even went so far as to ask him if he had ever heard of God in St. Kilda? The poor man looked at him. "Tell me," said he, "to what land do you belong?" "I," said the other, "come from a place very different from your barren rock. I come from the land of flood and field—the land of wheat and barley, where Nature spreads her bounties in abundance before us." "Is that," asked the poor man, "the land you come from? Ah, there you may forget God, but a St. Kilda man never can! Elevated on his rock, suspended over a precipice, tossed on the wild ocean, he never can forget his God, he hangs continually on his arm." And, my dear young friends, be sure and remember that whether you have much or little, many mercies or few, you owe them all to God. Ah! and remember as well what One said about those who have much given them, that "unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required."

But let us think a little more about God's mercies; not only how many they are, but what they are. I cannot stay to tell you all of them, I must only mention one or two. Just think of life. What a precious thing it is! What a happy thing it is to live! "Not for all," do you say? Ah! I know it is not for all! I am afraid that there are a great many who are like a girl of whom I once read, who said, as she saw a little bird hopping from tree to tree, seeming so happy, "Little birdie, I envy you!" Still I hope none of you feel like that; and yet if you do, let me tell you that there is a way in which you may find, as that girl afterwards found, that it is a happy thing to live, and never have cause to envy the life of a bird again. For you know that your life is of much more value than the life of a little bird. One day that bird will cease to sing its pretty song, will never more hop from bough to bough, and you will find the poor little thing lying stiff and cold on the hard ground; and that is the end of it. And a day will come, perhaps very soon, when your eye which sparkles so brightly will be dull, your voice silent, your limbs no longer lively and active; and mother and father, with tears in their eyes, will have to say to friends that have called to ask about you, "He is gone," or "She is gone." Yes, not dead, but gone; your body will be dead, but your soul will be gone: for the end of the bird is not your end; you are to live for ever; and only think how long for ever is; ah, and how happy that for ever may be!

"We sing of the realms of the blest,
Of that country so bright and so fair;
And oft are its glories confessed,
But what will it be to be there?"

And what will it be for you to be there? And the youngest of you may be, and may say as you look upward to that bright world—

"Heaven is my fatherland, Heaven is my home."

But leaving that happy life which, if you believe on Jesus, may be yours one day, I might tell you of the many mercies which God gives you in the life which you enjoy now; how he cares for each one of you with a care which never tires, keeping you "from harm by night and by day, and always doing you good." And I might tell you of the provision which he makes for you, of the earth which is "full of his goodness," made gay and beautiful with flowers, all that you may be happy; of the rain which he causes to descend, the sun to shine, "the summer's heat and winter's cold," that you may have "bread enough and to spare." But oh! I must tell you more! I must tell you that you are not worthy of the least of all the mercies which he has given you, for you have sinned against him and broken his holy laws.

Sinned against One so kind! Oh! what a thought is that! It must lead me to pass by other mercies, and speak to you of one greater than all. I have said that you are to live for ever, but how, and where? You are sinners—remember that, and remember that the Bible says, "the soul that sinneth it shall die," die not as the body dies, but more than that,—you know what it means. You know that because of sin that happy life of which I told you can never be yours. "Never," did I say? Yes, never, if it had not been for God's mercy, who loved his sinning children so much that he sent Jesus, his well-beloved Son, "that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

An English merchant was once crossing the wide ocean. On board with him there was a number of slaves, one of whom for certain reasons he very much desired to buy, not to keep him as a slave, but to give him his liberty. It was a large sum of money that the captain of the vessel, who was his owner, wanted for him—so large, indeed, that it would take away all the profits that this merchant hoped to make by the voyage. Still he would give them up; he went to the captain, and agreed to buy him. He began to lay down the money, when the slave, who happened to hear what was going on, burst into the cabin and exclaimed, "What? you an Englishman, and buying me for a slave!" But the merchant looked up kindly as he laid down the last piece of money, and told him that it was quite true that he had bought him, but it was to give him his liberty; he was not a slave now, the days of his bondage were over. The poor man heard his words—"Not a slave now!"—grateful feelings filled his heart, as he looked up to his deliverer and said, "Thou hast taken my heart captive, I am yours for ever."

You know why I have told you this. It is, that I may point you to Jesus. He saw you slaves, slaves to sin, slaves to Satan. He paid a price to deliver you, not silver nor gold—that could not have done it; it was something more precious than that. He gave himself, he died for you; and if God's other mercies will not make you grateful, yet as you think of that death, as you think of God's love—love to you—will you, can you remain indifferent, careless still? Oh, if you think of it as you ought, it is enough to make you all say—

"Remember Thee, and all thy pains,
And all thy love to me!
Yes, while a breath, a pulse remains,
Will I remember Thee!"

"Thou hast taken my heart captive, I am yours for ever!"

Yes! this is the way you must show your gratitude to God for his mercies. In answer to the question, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits unto me?" Your Father in heaven says to you each and all, "My son, my daughter, give me thy heart." Oh! have you given him that? If not, will you do so now? "Now is the accepted time." Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth." Think of his words—"I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me."

I have told you of God's mercies that you should be thankful for them, and that you should show your gratitude by giving him your heart, loving him because he first loved you. But there is something else I want you to think of. I want you to remember that God sometimes shows his love to us by taking away our mercies, and that we have cause to thank him—

"Alike for what his hand doth give,
And what it takes away."

You may not see how this is now, but one day you may have to learn the lesson, and oh! I trust that when that day comes, you may be able to say, "Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in thy sight." And if God, by taking away your mercies, teaches you to love him, then I know you will be thankful.

There is yet another lesson I want you to learn from the remembrance of God's mercies, and that is, that they should lead you to think of those who have fewer mercies than you. God has not given to all alike, and I will tell you why I think he has not,—that those who have much may have to give to those who have little. And so God may make a little boy or a little girl that has many blessings a messenger of mercy to those who have but very few. The little maid that waited on Naaman's wife was God's little messenger of mercy—a ministering child—to the captain of the host of the king of Syria; and all his life long Naaman and his family had to thank God for what that little girl had said—"Would God, my master were with the prophet that it is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy." And oh! if any should have to thank you for telling them of a cure for a worse disease than that from which Naaman suffered—the disease of sin—how happy you would be!

Dear young friends—Think of God's mercies, and ask God to bless your thinking. Call upon him who has said, "Ask, and ye shall receive," to give you his Holy Spirit, that you may be able to say, not only in words, but from the heart, "Father, I thank thee."

"Such goodness, Lord, and constant care,
A child can ne'er repay;
But daily shall it be my prayer,
To love Thee and obey."

W. H. ALBANY.

MISCELLANIES.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

THE Church of Christ is an institution for the glory of God, and the good of man. Pure benevolence has ever been characteristic of the true Church of Christ. The highest philanthropy has prompted her efforts in every period of her history; and in proportion to the Christliness of her members, benevolence must obtain among the features of the living Church. In the days of the Saviour's humanity, he "went about doing good." The good done by him was at least fourfold—spiritual, moral, intellectual, and physical. This last kind of good-doing is that to which we now invite the attention of the reader.

When the Saviour fed the hungry, &c., he not only showed the beneficial tendency of his Gospel, but left us an "example, that we should follow his steps," as far as possible, by regarding, and relieving the material necessities of our kind, as well as their spiritual wants. After the departure of Christ, the primitive Christians copied this aspect of his bright example. There was in the first Church a "daily ministration" to the widows, and most likely to others also who were in circumstances of distress. Paul tells us that he was desired to remember the poor; but such exhortation was needless, for says he, it was "the same which I also was forward to do." In giving directions to his juniors in the ministry, he bade them attend to the wants of the poor, the widow, and the fatherless.

On the churches in apostolic times, the duty of practical benevolence or almsgiving, was frequently and strongly enforced. "As we have, therefore, opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." "But to do good, and communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased." "Pure religion, and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction; and to keep himself unspotted from the world." "But whoso hath this world's goods, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

During the early ages of the Church, almsgiving was a prominent feature. There was a collection weekly at the agape—feast of love, or at the Lord's Supper, for necessitous brethren. Even during the ages of degeneracy, when but few retained true Christianity, almsgiving was largely practised, till it was prostituted in various ways. By it some sought to atone for their past sins; others by it thought to purchase indulgence or forgiveness; others thought of meriting heaven. Many became arrant hypocrites to obtain the bounties of the Church. It may have been to prevent such dire evils, that in modern evangelical communities almsgiving has been comparatively neglected; but we deem it unwise not to dispense blessings because some abuse them. The universal prevalence of such a rule would rob man of every good. We therefore think, that as far as possible, the Christian Church ought to attend to this matter. A religion which ignores man's material interests is not scriptural Christianity.

As a Connexion, we have hitherto done comparatively little in this matter. It must be granted that our means have been very limited; and justice has left little room for generosity; yet more might have been done for the poor among us, and it would have been advantageous to our community if we had considered this matter, and practised it more. Too great commendation can scarcely be given the various stations, for the prompt and liberal relief provided for the temporary, but fearful distress of the Lancashire operatives. Sixteen or seventeen hundred pounds are a noble manifestation of the sympathy and Christian spirit of our people; and considering their circumstances in general, perhaps equal to the efforts of our neighbours,—far exceeding those of the anti-Christian associations in the land. But there are in nearly every society throughout the Connexion cases of distress, which call for the united efforts of our members and officials—cases at times very grievous, which can be much relieved by the exertions of Benevolent Societies, and in no other way half so effectively. But every circuit town might, and ought to have its benevolent society; indeed, every village might be blest with one, where a Primitive Methodist society exists.

There has been one connected with the Canaan Street Society, in the Nottingham First Circuit, many years. Great good has been done by its operations. The past year's proceedings terminated in a more auspicious entering upon the present. More money is at command, and the same spirit of active benevolence remains among the officers and supporters of the society. We subjoin an account of the annual services held in behalf of the fund, which appeared in the Nottingham Review of Jan. 2nd, 1863:—"The annual sermons in behalf of the above society were preached in Canaan Street Chapel, on Sunday, December 21st, by the Revs. A. Clayton and W. Cutts. On Monday afternoon a tea-meeting was held in the large school-room, after which a public meeting was held in the chapel; B. Walker, Esq., occupied the chair. The entire income of the past year was £28 17s., out of which sum 110 cases of affliction and 365 cases of deep distress have received assistance; 475 visits have been made, and nine peaceful deaths were reported. After the report was read, the chairman generously promised a donation of £5. The meeting was addressed by the Revs. W. Cutts, A. Clayton, J. Dickenson, J. Woodcock, and J. Graham. A prominent feature of the meeting was the presentation of an easy chair to the Rev. T. King, which was subscribed for by the ladies of the society, as a tribute of their respect and grateful acknowledgment of his long, arduous, and successful labours as a minister in their denomination. . . . A selection of sacred music was performed by the choir, and contributed greatly to the success of the meeting." We gratefully acknowledge subscriptions from — Smith, Esq., £5; T. Herbert, Esq., £1; J. Bradley, Esq., £1 10s.; J. Heard, Esq., £1; W. Enfield, Esq., £1; Mr. B. Beeley, £2; Mrs. Beeley, £1; J. Higginbottom, Esq., £1 1s.; Mr. J. Metcalf, £1; which, with the sums collected during the year, will secure us about £36 for the present year. The commencement in 1863 was like emerging from moonlight to a glorious day, the means at hand being more than we had last year, which, connected with a regular system of distribution and Christian visitation, cannot fail to produce cheering results.

We find, from experience and observation, that Benevolent Societies are valuable auxiliaries to the Christian Church. They do great good; they evolve the genius of Christianity; they open the way of the ministers; they tend to keep our poor members, increase our congregations, and advance the Gospel of Christ. If it be more blessed to give than to receive, would not Primitive Methodism gain much by attention to this subject? It is well known that during our past history many have gone from us because of the bounties of other churches. It may be said truly they lacked attachment or loyalty to the Connexion, but why should we lose members who may be retained by the adoption of this system? To us it appears not too burdensome; and what a great help it would be, if we had one in every circuit, for the whole station, and the ministers had the privilege of relieving the poor from its funds in their weekly visitations. manifold evils would be obviated. A minister would not then have to pass some poor families from sheer inability to relieve their wants, which has at times now to be done; for say what we will, visits purely spiritual meet not temporal wants, and these are often great barriers to the acceptance and usefulness of family visitations. And further, to our knowledge, many have neglected class, been put off the roll books, and gone back into the world, because not able to support the institutions of the Connexion. By preachers and laymen they have been pressed not to forsake us on that account; but their feelings have been too sensitive and painful to allow them to reap benefits from services they could not support.

True, the calls upon our friends are increasing; but, in spite of these, many are growing rich; and beside them many could yet spare a little for the relief of the poor. Let the officers of the various stations take up the matter in a spirited manner, and, with a continuance of effort much good will be done.

ALFRED CLAYTON.

[It would yield us much satisfaction were we permitted to report occasionally the doings of other benevolent societies in the Connexion, similar to the laudable efforts of our Canaan Street friends. We fear that as a people we are behind our duty in respect of aiding the poor.—Ed.]

STATISTICS.

STATISTICS OF THE GLOBE.—The following curious facts are stated by the Abeille Médicale:—The earth is inhabited by 1,288 millions of inhabitants, viz., 369,000,000 of the Caucasian race; 552,000,000 of the Mongolian race; 190,000,000 of the Ethiopian, 1,000,000 of the American Indian, and 200,000,000 of the Malay races. All these respectively speak 3,064 languages, and profess 1,000 different religions. The amount of deaths per annum is 333,333,333, or 91,954 per day, 3,790 per hour, 60 per minute, or one per second; so that at every pulsation of our heart a human being dies. This loss is compensated by an equal number of births. The average duration of life throughout the globe is 33 years. One-fourth of its population dies before the seventh year, and one-half before the seventeenth. Out of 10,000 persons only one reaches his 100th year, only one in 500 his eightieth, and only one in 100 his sixty-fifth. Married people live longer than unmarried ones; and a tall man is likely to live longer than a short one. Until the fiftieth year women have a better chance of life than men; but beyond that period the chances are equal. Sixty-five persons out of 1,000 marry; the months of June and December are those in which marriages are most frequent. Children born in spring are generally stronger than those born in other seasons. Births and deaths chiefly occur at night. The number of men able to bear arms is but one-eighth of the population. The nature of the profession exercises a great influence on longevity; thus out of 100 of each of the following professions the number of those who attain their 70th year is:—Among clergymen, 42; agriculturists, 40; traders and manufacturers, 33; soldiers, 32; clerks, 32; lawyers, 29; artists, 28; professors, 27; and physicians, 24; so that those who study the art of prolonging the lives of others are most likely to die early, probably on account of the effluvia to which they are constantly exposed. There are in the world 335 millions of Christians, 5 millions of Jews, 600 millions professing some of the Asiatic religions; 160 millions of Mahometans, and 200 millions of Pagans. Of the Christians, 170 millions profess the Catholic, 76 millions the Greek, and 80 millions the Protestant creeds.

MORAL STATISTICS OF LONDON.—The subjoined calculations on this subject appear in a work recently published by the Rev. J. H. Wilson, entitled “Our Moral Wastes, and How to Cultivate them.”—

“In the city, out of a population of 323,772 people, only 60,899 were in church and chapel on the census Sunday in 1851; in Lambeth 61,664 out of 251,345; in Finsbury, 31,575, out of 127,869; in Marylebone, 77,055, out of 370,957; in the Tower Hamlets, 82,522, out of 539,110; in Westminster, 49,845, out of 241,611; in Southwark, 31,879, out of 172,863; and in 1859, according to the evidence taken by a Select Committee of the House of Lords, notwithstanding all that has been done to induce attendance since 1851, there were sixty-eight per cent. absent in Southwark, and sixty per cent. absent in Lambeth, of the adult population capable of attending the means of grace. To show the moral evil which these figures represent, it has been ascertained that if we were to analyse the population of London and compare the number of its individuals of each class, with an ordinary sized town, say a town with a population of 10,000, we should find in the vast metropolis as many persons as would fill about two towns with Jews; ten towns with persons who work on the Sabbath; fourteen towns with habitual gin drinkers; more than ten towns with persons who are every year found intoxicated in the streets; two towns with fallen women, to say nothing of those who are partakers of their sins; one town with gamblers; one with children trained in crime; one with thieves and receivers of stolen goods ; half a town with Italians ; four towns with Germans ; two towns with French ; while there are as many Irish as would fill the city of Dublin ; and more Roman Catholics than would fill the city of Rome. Nor is this all. There are as many public houses and beer and tobacco shops as would fill two towns of 10,000 each, open every Sunday ; and if we allow only 25 customers to each place, as representing the amount of attendance for the day, we have 500,000 people, say half a million of men and women thus occupied, while 374,015 only are attending the house of God ! In London there are 20,000 public-houses and beer and tobacco shops open on the Sunday, and only 750 Protestant churches and chapels for Divine worship."

CONNEXIONAL INTELLIGENCE.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

TUNSTALL DISTRICT.—The Tunstall District Meeting this year was held at Bilston, from April 30th to May 6th. The first day was occupied with an examination of candidates for the list of approved ministers and for the itinerancy. The examination comprised all the subjects referred to in the General Minutes of the Conference of 1862, and resulted in the satisfaction of those who took part therein, that the young men concerned were all called of God to the office they sustain.

On the second day all the chapel trust estates in the district were carefully investigated, and where there was the appearance of neglect, the parties concerned were written to, urging them to be more attentive in future. With few exceptions it was found that these estates were in a flourishing condition, the debts upon several of them having been reduced during the year. The business of the District Assembly of the Itinerant Preachers' Friendly Society was then entered upon ; many candidates were recommended to the Conference Assembly and yearly meeting for membership, and several additional honorary members were received.

On the third day the reports of all the stations were carefully examined, and it was found that nearly all of them had had an increase of members, amounting in the aggregate to 410, and several of them of Sunday school children. The few stations where there had been a declension were written to, urging them to adopt proper measures to bring about a better state of things.

The subsequent sittings were occupied in discussing the legislation sent by various stations, some of which was cordially adopted and recommended to the Conference ; and in the reception of the reports of the Committees, and the stationing of the ministers, &c. Peace and unanimity prevailed during the whole of the sittings of this important gathering.

The religious services were of no mean order, especially the camp-meeting on the Lord's day, when three stands were efficiently occupied. The number of persons who attended has been variously estimated, but, without exaggeration, we think that we may state that not fewer than 20,000 were present. The processioning was very imposing, and the preaching at each stand was of that order which no person, hearing for the purpose of receiving good and worshipping God, could find fault with. The love-feasts held in the evening were powerful, and many souls professed to be saved by Him whose prerogative and pleasure it is to save sinners. Hallelujah ! On the Monday and Tuesday evenings, public meetings were held which gave every satisfaction, and on Wednesday closed one of the most peaceful District Meetings ever held in the Tunstall District. S. MORRIS.

NOTTINGHAM DISTRICT.—The business in connection with the annual meeting of this district commenced at Boston on the afternoon of Thursday, April 30th, when the financial affairs of the various chapels in the district were examined, and found to be exceedingly good and encouraging. This business and that of the Preachers' Friendly Society occupied the delegates until the Friday evening, and the district meeting opened at 6 A.M. on Saturday the 2nd of May.

The reports from many of the stations were highly gratifying, and showed a nett increase for the year of about 400 members.

Five candidates for the ministry passed their examination in a very satisfactory manner.

The religious services were opened on Thursday evening April 30th, by a powerful sermon in the market-place, by the Rev. R. Parks. This discourse was delivered under very disadvantageous circumstances, the speaker being surrounded by the din and bustle of preparations for the annual May fair. But, notwithstanding this serious drawback, the attention of the hearers was secured, and a good influence was realized. At the close of this service the company formed a procession, and sang down to George-street chapel, where the Rev. S. Antliff delivered a sermon, which, in addition to being an intellectual treat of the highest order, was accompanied by a mighty power from above. The subject was the necessity of looking at the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world;" and its manner of treatment was at once profound and simple; so that, whilst it was adapted to delight the most intellectual and refined on the one hand, it was equally capable of being understood and appreciated by the most illiterate on the other.

On Friday evening a temperance meeting was held in the Town-hall, when the chair was occupied by the Rev. T. W. Mathews, General Baptist, and addresses of a most impressive character were delivered by the Revs. R. Parks, S. Antliff, and J. Dickenson, after which several persons pledged themselves to abandon the use of intoxicating drinks.

On Saturday evening many of the delegates and friends enjoyed a trip to sea, and a religious service was conducted on board the steam boat by brother Thomason.

At 6 o'clock on Sabbath morning, the five candidates related their experience and call to the ministry, and were afterwards suitably addressed by brother Dickenson. This was followed by the administration of the sacrament by brothers Parks, Thomason, Antliff, and Parkin, amid the shouts and tears of the assembly:—

"Whilst heaven came down our souls to greet,
And glory crowned the mercy seat."

At 9 o'clock, preaching services were held in four different parts of the town, after which the respective companies met in the market-place, and a powerful address was delivered at the Bridge-foot, by the Rev. R. Parks. At the close of this discourse the united companies proceeded to the camp ground, where a holy influence prevailed, and many felt it good to be there. The services were conducted by brothers Parks, Dickenson, and Thomason. The sermons were pointed and earnest; the one great aim of every speaker appearing to be the conversion of souls. In the afternoon there was an immense gathering on the ground, the number of people being variously estimated at from 4,000 to 6,000. In the evening love-feasts were held in the Town-Hall, George-street chapel, the General Baptist chapel, and the New Connexion chapel. George-street chapel was crowded, and several persons professed to find peace. The pulpits of some of our brethren of other denominations were occupied in the evening by some of the delegates.

On Monday evening a public meeting was held in the George-street chapel, and adjourned until Tuesday evening; and on Wednesday evening brother Antliff improved the death of the late Rev. James Crompton.

On Thursday evening an excellent sermon on "Isaiah's vision," was delivered by brother Parks, in the Wesleyan Centenary chapel, kindly lent for the occasion.

In the business department the greatest harmony and good feeling prevailed, and the delegates very strongly expressed their gratitude to the friends who so kindly and bountifully entertained them during the sittings of the district-meeting. They have returned to their respective stations, with hearts warm with the love of God, and full of the expectation of realizing a rich outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon themselves and their people. J. T. NEAL.

HULL DISTRICT.—Its sittings this year have been held at Barton-on-Humber.

The religious services began on Thursday evening, April 30th, 1863, when the Rev. W. Garner of Hull preached an appropriate and useful sermon.

On Friday evening a stirring temperance meeting was held at the Hall.

On Saturday evening the Rev. C. Kendall, of Grimsby, preached a practical and profitable sermon, after which, he and the Rev. J. Petty, of Hull, administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

On Sunday, the morning being fine, large numbers of people came together from the surrounding country at an early hour. At 6 o'clock an earnest sermon was preached in the chapel by the Rev. S. Oates, one of the candidates for the ministry. At half-past 8 a large number had come to procession through the streets to the camp ground. On reaching the market place, an impressive sermon was preached by the Rev. T. Greenbury. The camp meeting commenced at 10 o'clock. The attendance was large—it was thought there were 5000 persons on the ground at one time. Short sermons were preached by both travelling and local preachers; and in each the essential truths of the Gospel were plinly and powerfully presented to the people, and the crowds present heard the Word with great attention. Public lovefeasts were held in the chapel and Temperance Hall, at which six or seven persons professed to find salvation.

Also sermons were preached in the Independent chapel by the Rev. W. Garner and J. Petty to large congregations.

On the Monday evening a public meeting was held in the Wesleyan chapel, presided over by J. Maltby, Esq., of Louth. The attendance was large. Two candidates for the ministry related their religious experience, and the Rev. J. Petty gave a solemn address to them, and other brethren addressed the meeting.

The business sittings were characterised by peace and concord. The public services, we doubt not, have been an extensive blessing. The hospitality, both of members of our own society, and of those of other communities, is deserving of special remark. May God graciously reward them with a constant sense of His favour in this life, and finally with a home in heaven.

D. INGHAM.

SUNDERLAND DISTRICT.—Our District Meeting Services commenced on Friday evening, May 1st, when a Sermon was preached in Nelson Street Chapel, Newcastle-on-Tyne, by the Rev. J. Spoor, in his characteristic energetic style. There was a good attendance, and a lively prayerful influence gave interest to the occasion. On Saturday evening the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered,—the Revs. H. Yool and A. Dodds officiating. This was a most impressive and profitable service, the addresses bearing the stamp of intelligence, and breathing a devout pathos, and the whole being characterised by a marked decorum.

On Sabbath, May 3rd, the pulpits of our town and country chapels were efficiently occupied by the delegates and the junior preachers. Gateshead, the head of a new-made circuit, was included in our plan, and supplied. The day was favourable also for the brethren who were planned to preach abroad. The open-air services were promptly attended to and supported, each company singing up in procession to Nelson Street Chapel. Not the least interesting of the day's services was the afternoon gathering to hear the young men, who had previously been examined in committee, relate their christian experience and ministerial call. To those who are growing old in the harness, and to those who through infirmity have been obliged to desist from full labour, it is a cheering and an affecting sight to see the ministerial staff strengthened by accessions from the ranks of the young. "As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, so are children of the youth." May the church ever have its quiver full of such, able to "speak with the enemy in the gate." The young men, having witnessed a good Confession, retired to a front seat in the Chapel, and listened to excellent counsel from the lips of the Rev. T. Smith, who addressed them at length on their ministerial duties. The last of the public services was held on Monday evening, May 4th, after a public tea. The meeting, which was largely attended, was much edified by addresses on chosen subjects by the Revs. R. Shields,

C. C. McKechnie, T. Smith, and B. Fenwick; Mr. W. Hopper in the chair. Several choice pieces of music were executed by the organist and the choir, to the great satisfaction of the audience.

There was a general harmony in the business meetings. The delegates were happy to find the district, on the whole, in a prosperous state. The increase for the year is 777. The debts on the chapels within the district have been reduced by more than a thousand pounds. Eight new chapels have been erected, considerably more than one-third of their cost having been raised. Also a manse has been built at Allendale at the cost of £400, and is presented to the connexion free of debt. We trust, also, that inward vital religion is in progress amongst us, and our prayer is for greater enlargement.

THOMAS GREENFIELD

NORWICH DISTRICT.—The services in connection with the Norwich District Meeting commenced at Thetford, April 30th, when the Rev. W. Crown preached at half-past seven in the evening on the subject of prayer. On Friday, May 1st, at six o'clock A.M., the Rev. J. Scott delivered a pleasing discourse on "The Christian's Hope." At nine o'clock the chapel committee met to transact business especially relating to this department of our trust, and was much gratified to find things in so healthy a state as to produce almost universal satisfaction. When the members of the Preachers' Friendly Society assembled in the afternoon at two o'clock, they were enabled to report favourably on questions in which the social interests of several widows and fatherless children are involved. At half-past seven in the evening, a large congregation was much profited in listening to a sermon delivered by the Rev. B. Howchin.

On Saturday morning, at five o'clock, the Rev. W. Hammond preached under the influence of "the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven," by which the delegates were the better prepared at six o'clock for commencing the regular business of the district, which, after a strict examination of the different reports, was found to be in a healthy state,—all the stations, excepting two, reporting an increase. The increase on the district is 419; the reduction of chapel debts, £401 18s. 11d. Many new chapels have been erected during the year, and all of them have been placed in very favourable circumstances. In the evening the two candidates for the list of approved preachers—Brothers Shields and Smith—gave an account of their religious experience and call to the ministry, and having passed through their examination in a very creditable and satisfactory manner, the Rev. T. Swindill delivered an address, explaining the importance and responsibilities of the Christian ministry, and the Rev. T. Lowe followed, giving "the charge" in his usual racy and florid style.

On Sunday morning, at six o'clock, the Rev. T. Swindill preached a sacramental discourse, full of pith, point, and power; after which the sacred ordinance was administered to the delegates and friends by the Revs. R. Howchin, W. Crown, R. Eaglen, and T. Lowe; and all felt during this service that our heaven was on earth begun. At nine o'clock two processions were formed in different parts of the town, passing along the different streets, and meeting in the market place, where Brothers Lowe and Scott delivered addresses, after which we repaired to the Melford common, where two stands were occupied; and it was estimated that upwards of 7,000 persons attended. In the evening two love-feasts were held, one in the chapel, and the other in the British School-room; and truly the Lord was in the midst of us, showing himself "mighty to save."

At five o'clock on Monday morning, the Rev. E. Shields preached on the attracting glories of the cross of Christ. At half-past two in the afternoon, the Rev. W. Yeadon delivered an address on a plot of ground in the centre of the town, second to none in being "beautiful for situation," where, at half-past three, the foundation stone of a new chapel was laid by J. Finch, Esq., a second by Miss Finch, and a third by G. Doubleday, Esq., all members of our society, and staunch friends of Primitive Methodism. At five o'clock a public tea was provided, (most of the trays being furnished gratis,) at which about 200 persons were refreshed. At seven o'clock a public meeting of a high order was held in the Wesleyan chapel, (kindly lent for the occasion.)

On Tuesday evening a temperance meeting was held in our own chapel, when most of the delegates had left for their respective stations, pleased and profited by their visit to Thetford, and all the friends who entertained them much gratified.

JOHN ALLISON.

MANCHESTER DISTRICT.—We have just closed our District Meeting, held at Chester. We were happy to find an increase of about 560 members. In the midst of temporal distress, God has graciously poured out his Spirit on the stations, and comforted his suffering people with spiritual blessings. The District Meeting begs to tender its sincere thanks to the General Committee for its timely and benevolent efforts to relieve the distressed stations in this district, and also to those kind friends who have contributed money and clothing to alleviate the dire distress of our members and hearers.

We are happy to say that the business of the meeting has been gone through in a most satisfactory manner. The religious services and temperance meetings have been well attended, deeply interesting, and productive of much good. The Wesleyans, Congregationalists, Welch Calvinistic Methodists, and Presbyterians manifested their Christian friendship by requesting that our ministers would occupy their pulpits on the Sabbath, which was, of course, readily complied with. In the afternoon a camp-meeting was held near the city; it was well attended, and the word of truth delivered by the various ministers was accompanied with a manifestation of Divine power; and at the love-feast in the evening several souls professed to find salvation.

On Monday evening a public meeting was held, at which the young men finishing their probation related their religious experience and call to the ministry, after which several short and suitable addresses were delivered, concluding with expressions of thanks to the kind Chester friends for the manner in which the delegates had been entertained during the District Meeting. JAMES GARNER.

BRINKWORTH DISTRICT.—Brinkworth District Meeting commenced its business at Salisbury, on Thursday, April 30th, and it affords us pleasure to record our gratitude to God for the success we have been favoured with during the past Connexional year. Most of our stations have improved numerically, financially, and spiritually—a net increase of 257 members being reported for the year. The greatest unanimity of feeling was felt by the delegates, and the religious services were well attended. On the evening of the above-named day the Rev. J. Wright, the District Committee's delegate, in a pleasing manner directed our attention to the song of the redeemed before the throne.

On Friday evening a temperance meeting was held in the Council chamber, by the kind permission of the Mayor, under the presidency of Mr. Yates, of Wilton, and the numerous audience was highly delighted with the excellent speeches delivered.

On Saturday evening four candidates for the list of approved preachers related their conversion to God, and their call to the ministry; and they were faithfully and kindly addressed by Messrs. Wright and Hazell; after which the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered and a heavenly power flowed and melted many hearts. The Saviour was truly in the midst.

On Sunday morning Mr. Powell preached an excellent sermon in front of the Council chamber, after which a fine procession advanced to the camp ground, where suitable sermons were energetically delivered, which were listened to by several thousands of people, who conducted themselves in a most decorous manner, and showed they felt interested in the great truths enunciated. The lovefeast was numerously attended, and while the delegates and friends were relating their experience, we felt God was near, and in the prayer-meeting afterwards several persons found peace with God through believing. The public meeting on Monday was well attended, and effective addresses were delivered; and on Tuesday evening Mr. Harding preached a sermon, and in the prayer-meeting the Lord manifested his saving power. The services at five o'clock in the mornings were truly profitable.

The fraternal feeling manifested by the Dissenting ministers of the city was pleasing, and the hospitality of the friends who entertained the delegates was great; and I pray that the Great Head of the Church may bless them all.

We believe that the religious services in connection with the District Meeting, will be remembered with feelings of satisfaction for years to come, and that the precious seed sown will hereafter be seen germinating and bringing forth fruit to perfection.

EDMUND RAWLINGS.

LEEDS DISTRICT.—The city of Ripon has this year been honoured with the Leeds District Meeting. History records that thirty-eight years ago, there was a similar meeting here in connection with the Sunderland District; but so small and unpretending was its character, that the oldest member living does not remember anything of it. The meeting that has just closed will be recollected, we doubt not, by vast numbers, and with feelings of pleasure too, for life.

The religious services were of a truly interesting and profitable kind. Characteristic discourses were preached on Thursday and Friday evenings, April 30th and May 1st, by the Revs. T. Newell and J. Simpson.

On Saturday evening the Lord's Supper was administered by Brothers R. Smith and J. Maylard. The delegates and friends felt it to be a season of great spiritual profit. The camp-meeting on the Sabbath was a grand and successful one. The day being unusually fine, great numbers of people gathered from the surrounding region, and made the little city forget its normal quietude. The processioning was of a really earnest character. Addresses were delivered at the Market Cross, both morning and noon, and sermons of a varied character, but all of them well adapted to the occasion, were preached by Brothers Crabtree, T. Smith, R. Baxter, Procter, Crossland, Bootland, Newell, Reynolds, Simpson, and Maylard. Two powerful and well-sustained lovefeasts were held in the evening; one of them in our own chapel, and the other in the Independent chapel. The public meeting on Monday evening was the most attractive and imposing of all the services. Mr. Dale, of Leeming, efficiently occupied the chair, and four candidates for the list of approved ministers, related their conversion and call to the ministry. Their relation was brief, clear, and simple, and was succeeded by a very clear, spiritual, and highly appropriate address to them by Brother R. Smith. Speeches of an intensely interesting kind followed, by Brothers Baxter, Newell, Simpson, and Maylard. The meeting lasted till a late hour, and the interest continued to the end. Such a meeting was never held in this city by any religious denomination.

The official doings and sayings of the District Meeting were distinguished by great clearness of perception and admirable courtesy, candour, and impartiality. The only dictator was "rule" and the only force employed was brotherly affection. Though a few decreases were reported, there is a clear increase of 233 members for the year. The amount of chapel debt paid off during 1862 is £456 10s. 8d. Many good District Meetings have been held in this district during the past half-score years, but this has been pronounced to be the best of all. R. TANFIELD.

BRISTOL DISTRICT.—The Bristol District Meeting was held at St. Ives, Cornwall; and we are grateful to God for the very favourable impression made on the people of our town by the visit of our brethren.

The state of the District was found to be progressive spiritually and financially;—chapel debts had been lowered, some good chapels had been built during the year, and others greatly improved and enlarged. The increase of members is 281.

On Thursday, April 30th, the Rev. J. Hibbs preached in the open air to a large and attentive congregation, at six p.m.; at seven o'clock, a temperance meeting was well attended, and the cause was ably advocated by several travelling and local brethren, the chair being occupied by the Rev. R. Tuffin. On Friday, May 1st, sermons were preached at six p.m., in the open air; and at seven, the Rev. J. P. Bellingham delivered a powerful sermon in the chapel; after which, the Lord's supper was administered by the Revs. T.

Hobson and J. Hibbs, when a very gracious influence rested on all present.

The experience narrated on the Saturday by three candidates for the list of approved preachers, shewed the good effects of early training by pious parents; and we trust the appropriate charge delivered by the Rev. J. Butcher will not soon be forgotten.

Sunday and Monday were high days. The mighty processions, the gathering of about 3,000 to our camp-meeting, more than 1,000 to the lovefeast, the pointed and energetic discourses, and the public meeting of thrilling interest, all call for devout thanksgiving to our heavenly Father. Several souls were converted, and many others deeply impressed. The weather was all we could desire; and the St. Ives people, who cheerfully entertained the delegates and other friends, were so pleased and profited by the visit of our brethren, that they felt strong emotion when the time came to separate.

The last services were conducted by the Rev. G. Johnson and Mr. R. Thatcher, who kindly consented to preach on Tuesday evening. I pray that the good feeling among the ministers and the people may continue, that the coming year may be more successful than the past, and that God in all things may be glorified. Amen.

W. HARVEY.

LONDON DISTRICT.—On Thursday, April 30th, the District chapel committee met in the Horse Market chapel, Northampton, at two o'clock, and was exceedingly gratified to find that chapel debts had been reduced to the amount of £1,087 1s. 1d. on the circuits, and £506 3s. 0d. on the missions, making a total of £1,593 4s. 1d.

The religious services were commenced on Thursday evening at six o'clock, when a sermon was preached in the Market-square, by the Rev. T. Penrose; at seven o'clock, the Rev. J. Holroyd preached in the Horse Market chapel. These services were of an impressive and interesting character.

On Friday morning, at six o'clock, two short sermons were preached by candidates for the list of approved preachers. At two o'clock p.m., the members of the Itinerant Preacher's Friendly society met to transact business. At six o'clock, two open air services were held and efficiently sustained; and at seven o'clock a very influential temperance meeting was held in the Lecture Hall, Gold street; the Rev. T. Penrose occupied the chair, and the meeting was addressed by the Revs. S. J. Wallis, W. Baitson, D. Kendall, and W. Antliff. This meeting will not soon be forgotten.

On Saturday morning at five o'clock, two short sermons were preached by candidates for the annual list. The business of the District Meeting commenced at six. An open air service was well sustained in the Mayorhold, at six o'clock, p.m. At seven o'clock three of the candidates related their religious experience, and call to the ministry; and a very appropriate address was delivered to them and the ministers present, by the Rev. W. Antliff; after which, the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered by the Revs. M. Lupton, G. Lamb, and J. Moore; and a very gracious influence pervaded these services.

On Sabbath morning, at seven o'clock, Mr. J. Wilson, of Leighton Buzzard, preached a telling sermon. At nine o'clock, the delegates and friends met at the Horse Market chapel, and processioned to the Market square, where the Rev. E. W. Matthews delivered an address; after which we proceeded to the Race course, where an efficient service was held. At half-past one o'clock, we met again at the chapel, and had a powerful procession to the Race-course, where two stands were occupied, and well sustained; great order was preserved, and a Divine unction attended the services throughout. At six o'clock p.m., two general love feasts were held in the Horse Market chapel, and the Lecture Hall, Mechanics' Institute; a very rich spiritual treat was realized by God's people; and we are happy to say, that in the prayer meeting in the chapel sinners were converted to God. The pulpits of the principal chapels in the town were occupied by the delegates, and the members of other churches will not soon forget their visit to this town.

On Monday evening, a public meeting was held in Doddridge chapel (kindly lent for the occasion); the chair was occupied by the Rev. M. Lupton; and the Revs. J. Ashworth, T. Penrose, G. Lamb, and W. Antliff delivered powerful addresses; the service was edifying and enthusiastic, and the collection good. On the platform were the Rev. J. T. Brown, and the Rev. Joseph Brown (Baptists), the Rev. E. Prust and the Rev. T. Arnold (Congregationalists), who, in short pithy addresses, spoke in the greatest commendation of our services and movements.

On Wednesday morning, the business of the District Meeting terminated, and the delegates left Northampton highly pleased with the hospitality of the friends who entertained them. P. COATES.

EPWORTH CIRCUIT MISSIONARY SERVICES.

—On March 22nd and the next four following days, Missionary anniversaries were celebrated at Amcotts, Keadby, Derrythorpe, and West Butterwick, when sermons were preached and speeches given by the Revs. W. Harland, the deputation, W. Jones, W. Andrew, and the writer. The audiences were large, and at Keadby several souls professed to find peace in Jesus. The proceeds of the meetings were £17 16s. 5½d., being about £4 10s. more than were realized at the same places last year.

Recently we held our first missionary services at Eastlound, and obtained the sum of £1 18s. 7d. Two of our members here, besides taking collecting boxes, have devoted an apple-tree each to the Mission cause. May these dear friends be faithful to the grace which prompted their deeds, and then sweeter than earth's sweetest fruits will be their eternal reward; and through these apple-tree sacrifices may immortal souls be brought to feast on the twelve-fruited "Tree of Life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." P. MILSON.

PILLAWELL STATION, BREAM'S EAVES.—The Fourth Anniversary of this chapel was held March 22nd, 1863, when one sermon was preached by the writer, and two by Mr. J. Orphan, Wesleyan, who has done us very excellent service. On the 23rd, about 170 persons took tea, after which Mr. Orphan and others deeply interested the meeting with telling and effective addresses. The proceeds of the anniversary are about £8.

Allow us to say that this chapel was begun about six years ago, as the result of true christian philanthropy, kindled in the hearts of a little band of earnest working Primitive Methodists, then worshipping in a cottage. Some friends in the circuit said, "You'll never raise it." They replied, "Give us official permission, and we'll try." And by the united perseverance of a few only, their noble intentions and praiseworthy perseverance were crowned with the heart cheering satisfaction of the opening of a neat rural sanctuary in the spring of 1858, under the superintendency of the Rev. O. Pullen.

The erection of this house of prayer soon led to the establishment of a Sabbath school; and otherwise the cause so prospered as to require an addition of fourteen feet to the length of the chapel, and the erection of an end gallery. This enlargement was effected about five months ago; and this is now about the largest and neatest chapel in the Station. The one-third of cost required by rule, both in building and enlarging, has been obtained. Much praise is due to the trustees, society, and choir, all of whom have unitedly and liberally persevered in the enterprise, and shown a becoming respect for the order and neatness due to the sanctuary of God.

GEORGE DOBSON.

OSWESTRY STATION, BAGLEY.—March 10th, 1863, was a festive day to the Primitive Methodists of this village. For some time our efforts had been retarded through the incommodiousness of the chapel, which had become very dilapidated. J. Dodds, Esq., having kindly given five additional yards of land, the services in connection with the laying of the foundation stone of a new chapel were held this day. The Rev. R. Pattinson gave out a hymn, and called upon the writer to pray; after which Mr. J. K. Lea presented a silver trowel to Mrs. E. Parry, with which she laid the stone in the name of the Holy Trinity, at the same time making a few appropriate remarks on the good she had received through the labours of the servants of the Lord connected with the former chapel, and praying that the present one might become the spiritual birthplace of many souls. She also placed a liberal donation on the stone. The second stone was laid by S. Ward, Esq., who also gave a donation. A very excellent address was delivered by the Rev. R. Pattinson on the objects and labours of the Connexion, after which a collection was made. The company then repaired to a tent, where tea was provided by the friends of the cause. The public meeting after was presided over by Mr. J. K. Lea, and addresses were delivered by the Rev. R. Pattinson and the writer. The collections of the day, with the proceeds of the tea meeting, amounted to £17. A. GLEGG.

HORNSEA STATION, BEWHOLME.—Many years ago a society was established in this village. Here J. Oxtoby sowed the good seed of the Word with his usual success. One, who has since been a most useful and efficient local preacher, was converted under his labours. Twenty-five years ago, notwithstanding somewhat formidable difficulties, a chapel and school-room were erected under the superintendency of Brother R. Langham. A Sabbath school was at once commenced, which has borne fruit to the glory of God. Two local preachers now on our plan, and several who are members of the society, were trained in it. For a length of time the chapel has been too small, and we have had to say to persons who wished to take seats with us that we had none to let. We have, however, at last raised and slated the roof, turned the inside of the chapel, and put a gallery over the school-room. The chapel will now seat 120 persons, and is an ornament to the village. Our re-opening services were held March 15th and 22nd. Mr. F. Rudd, of Beverley, preached on the former, and T. Whittaker on the latter Sabbath. A tea meeting was held on Good Friday,—which was a high day to the friends. At the public meeting, Mr. D. Horsfield, of Tund, presided, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. Stabler, R. Huntsman, J. E. Jones, and T. Whittaker. The total cost of the alteration is about £90. We shall raise about half the amount, which will leave us a debt of £105 on the trust premises. Praying that we may have an enlarged church in the enlarged house, I am yours, T. WHITTAKER.

PRESTEIGN CHAPEL SERMONS.—The first Anniversary sermons for our new chapel at Presteign were preached on Lord's-day, April 5, 1863, by the Rev. James Arnold, of Brierley Hill. On the following Monday about 300 persons attended the tea meeting. After tea, a public meeting was held, James Nott, Esq., in the chair. Interesting addresses were delivered by J. Davis, G. Middleton, J. Edwards, J. Arnold, J. Middleton, and H. Leech; and at these services the sum of £60 was obtained, and upwards of £30 were promised for the next anniversary. The thanks of the meeting were voted to J. Nott, J. Edwards, E. Newell, and J. Davies, for their donations of £5 each, and to all the contributors. H. LEECH.

BRIDGEWATER MISSION, CATCOTT BUTTE.—The anniversary of the Sabbath school connected with this place was held March 29th, when two sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Hayman; select pieces were recited and sung by the children, the congregations were large, and the presence of the Lord was manifested. On Friday, April 3rd, the children were regaled with cake and tea. Tea was also provided for adults, and a goodly number sat down. After tea a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. J. Cox, superintendent of the school; and addresses were delivered by the Revs. W. Hayman, J. T. Pitthouse, E. Stephens, and H. G. Button; also by Messrs. W. Cox and J. Parsons. The meeting was of a very interesting character. The proceeds were £2 15s. 5d. E. STEPHENS.

NORTH WALSHAM STATION.—It gives us great joy to be able to report progress on this station. For several months past there has been a fine, steady work going on in North Walsham, and several other places; so that at our quarterly meeting, which was held March 16th, we found, on taking an account of our numerical position, that we had a net increase for the year of 132; though we only report 80 to the District meeting. Our missionary revenue, also, has been considerably in advance of former years. We have peace in our borders and prosperity in our palaces. The work is still extending, and our prospects for the future are bright and cheering.

O. JACKSON.

NEWBURY STATION.—It is with feelings of pleasure, and gratitude to God, that I inform you that the revival that was commenced at Aldbourne, Wilts, in November, 1862, still continues. The Lord has poured out of His fulness on the inhabitants, and the Church there is looking bright as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners. Preachers and members are rising into spiritual strength, and exerting all their living energies for the conversion of souls. The Almighty has graciously owned and blessed their labours, and many persons have been arrested, convicted, and converted. Houses of wretchedness and misery have been transformed into homes of fervent prayer and spiritual praise. Many who were the willing slaves of sin and Satan have become children of the world's Redeemer, washed in His most precious blood, cleansed and sanctified. "Surely this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." In February, 1863, Mr. Cummin, my worthy superintendent, called me from planned appointments to hold a week's special protracted services there. We therefore commenced on Monday, the 16th, in true Primitive Methodist style, by singing through the streets the well-known and beautifully adapted hymn, "There is a fountain fill'd with blood," and on arriving at the chapel we found a goodly number of persons collected together. I preached, and the Lord was with us. Also, we held similar services on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings. Hell seemed moved, but we were determined to fight our passage through. On Friday, I took my stand in the open air, lifted up the banner of Calvary, and pointed out Jesus as the way, the truth, and the life. We afterwards sang to the chapel, and I preached from the parable of the Prodigal Son, and Glory! Glory! one poor prodigal's heart was broken, and he arose and went to his Heavenly Father. On the Saturday night we held a fellowship meeting. It was a season of refreshing, it was good to be there; prayer was turned into praise, and in the prayer meeting after, the cry for mercy was again heard. The Almighty bared His holy arm, and three precious souls were rescued from the paws of the destroyer, hallelujah! On the Monday following, I preached to the young converts. The word was accompanied by Divine power; three others ventured their all on Christ, and they were filled with love and joy unspeakable. On the Saturday following, I attended the funeral of one of our oldest local brethren, who, for upwards of twenty years had been a firm and substantial pillar of the church at Aldbourne, a faithful leader of God's Israel, and a valiant soldier of Jesus. He is gone to receive his eternal pension among the sons of glory in the better land. After the funeral, I preached in our chapel on the Christian's triumphant victory over death. It was a solemn season: tears of heartfelt sorrow were shed by the members of the congregation; and the tears of repentance in the case of one sin-sick soul were turned into the smile of gladness. At Peasmore, also, the Lord has manifested his power to save, and in many other places the great work of soul-saving is moving on: may it continue for Christ's sake. Under the blessing of the Most High God, we attribute our prosperity at Aldbourne to the united and untiring efforts of preachers and members in holding cottage prayer meetings. May all our churches be up and doing, expecting rich blessings, praying and labouring for great things. May all our preachers, leaders, and members be sanctified wholly, and filled with all the fulness of the Spirit, is the prayer of the writer.

H. PORTNALL.

LITERARY NOTICES.

A System of Theology. By JOHN LOCKE. Sixth Thousand. London, 1862. Entered at Stationers' Hall.

WE have here a handsome volume of upwards of five hundred pages, octavo, by a respected Wesleyan minister, now at Salisbury, on no less important a subject than the grand and glorious doctrines and institutes of the Christian religion. In a very modest preface the author thus sets forth his design:—"This book has been written for the purpose of furnishing the English reader with a methodized arrangement of the first principles of the oracles of God. Many have written more learnedly, critically, and elaborately upon theological topics, and their contributions are of incalculable value. But to many in the middle classes, and to almost all the labouring classes, these are sealed books. They are hard to be understood. They require more time to study than those who are engaged in secular pursuits during the great part of the day can command; consequently, their treasures are unknown and unappreciated by those classes, which, so far as the author's knowledge extends, are the immense majority in the Christian community. This work is intended to make the chief topics of revelation easily comprehended by those who have but few books to read, and but little time to read them." The subjects embraced in the system of truth discussed by the author are: the existence of God—the Holy Scriptures—the nature and attributes of God—the Trinity—creation—providence—man—the covenant of grace—the work of grace—moral duties—Christian institutions—death—the resurrection—the final judgment—hell and heaven. There is a copious index at the end, and each chapter is headed by a detailed analysis of its contents. The style of the work is popular, the doctrines maintained are Methodist, and to general readers, and even divinity students, the book has much to recommend it. We cannot but rejoice that books of this order are on the increase, as they will certainly tend to neutralise the mischief which the light reading, and especially the sceptical sciolism, of this generation, are operating among some sections of society. We extend to Mr. Locke the right hand of fellowship, and wish him abundant success in this effort, and all his efforts, to diffuse sound Gospel truth and scriptural holiness in the land.

History of the Development of the Doctrine of the Person of Christ. By Dr. J. A. DORNER, Professor of Theology in the University of Berlin. Division II., from the End of the Fourth Century to the Present Time. Vol. III., with Appendix, containing a Review of the Controversies on the Subject, which have been agitated in Britain since the Middle of the Seventeenth Century to the Present Time. By PATRICK FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Author of "Typology of Scripture," &c. Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark, 38, George Street. London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co.

As will be seen by the title page, now quoted, this is the last volume of Dr. Dörner's learned and elaborate resumé of the doctrine of the person of Christ. It completes the historic survey of this very important subject, and is followed by a deeply interesting appendix from the able pen of Dr. Fairbairn. We have only to repeat our former recommendations of this invaluable theological treasure, and to express our conviction that Dr. Dörner has not first given the good wine, and when men have well drunk then that which is worse, but that he has kept some, at least, of the good, if not the best, wine until now. Would that all our preachers had access to the volumes of Dörner, and the more so, as correct views of the person and work of our adorable Saviour were never more required by the ministry and the churches than now. We cannot too highly appreciate the service rendered to the Christian public of Britain by this enterprise of the Messrs. Clark. May they be amply encouraged to prosecute the career which they have so worthily marked out for themselves!

Theological and Homiletical Commentary on the Gospel of Luke. Specially designed and adapted for Ministers and Students. From the German of J. J. VAN OOSTERZEE, D.D. Edited by J. P. LANGE, D.D., Professor of Divinity in the University of Bonn. Translated by SOPHIA TAYLOR. Vol. II. Edinburgh: T. and T. Clark. London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co. 1863.

The former volume of this commentary came down to the end of the 12th chapter of Luke's Gospel; this takes up the remainder of the book. The work is critical, but practical; profound, but plain; philosophical, but pious. Oosterzee and Lange hold a high position among German critics and theologians, and well were it if all their countrymen of lofty name and pretension, were as worthy of confidence and admiration. The lady translator is allowed by competent judges to have executed her task with unusual ability and tact; and we have great satisfaction in renewing our recommendation of this valuable work.

The Christian Ambassador: a Quarterly Review and Journal of Theological Literature. No. II. May, 1863. London: R. Davies, Sutton Street, Commercial Road, East. Price One Shilling.

Our readers need not be informed that the issuing of this number of the "Ambassador" has been unavoidably delayed by the fire which took place some time since upon the premises of our binder. However, it is now ready, and our friends are advised to obtain it as early as possible. The titles of the papers are—The Life and Writings of William Cowper—The Pentateuch: Queries and Averages. No. 2—Howard—Thoughts on the Inspiration of the Bible. No. 2—Colenso on the Pentateuch—The Image of God in Man—Africa: its Explorations and Claims—The Logic of Life—The Rest of the Mystics—and Brief Notices of Books.

Of the many sketches of the lives of Cowper and Howard it has fallen to our lot to read, we do not remember any that afforded us more satisfaction. The characters of the men were widely different in many points, but there were points of very marked similarity between them; and the authors of these papers have sketched them both with admirable precision and discrimination; giving to each his proper position, and doing homage to the piety, the poetry, the philanthropy, the higher phases of humanity, exhibited by both. The thoughtful perusal of these papers will be found no common treat. The somewhat dry articles on the Pentateuch and the Inspiration of the Bible will afford much valuable aid to youthful students. There is displayed great mastery of the questions involved, and great aptness to teach, by both the writers. The Logic of Life is a neat and telling address; the Image of God in Man is a good theological piece; Africa is distinguished by the peculiar style of a brother who has made himself familiar with the subject, and some interesting information is contained in the paper, which is comparatively brief. But the principal paper of the number is the one on Colenso on the Pentateuch. It is no exaggeration to say that this paper is a master-piece. We query whether the recalcitrant bishop has had a more complete exposure, and the fallacies of his absurd books a more searching examination, anywhere, than in this article. This one paper is well worth the price of the complete number. Let all our readers possess themselves of it forthwith.

Journal des Familles. No. 1. London: W. Allen and Co., 9, Stationers' Hall-court.

If our younger friends are learning, or are wishful to learn the French language, this is the thing for them. It is illustrated with some very good wood-cuts, the subjects of which are chiefly selected from English and French history. The articles are moral in tone, and adapted to the tastes and capacities of the young.

Sketches of Port Natal: its Scenery, Climate, Products, People, History, and Present Wants. By WILLIAM THORPE, Minister of the Gospel. London: R. Davies; and Jarrold and Sons; all Booksellers; and all Primitive Methodist ministers. Price 6d., 9d. and 1s.

THERE is no apparent danger that Africa will sink into utter neglect for the present, if the English press and the English platform are to be regarded as indicators of English thought and sentiment. We believe no great anniversary meeting has been held in London, or perhaps in the provinces, this year, without Africa being made a prominent subject of remark thereat. Indeed, we have latterly become so accustomed to hear about the sons of Ham, the curly-headed negroes, the slaves of the Southern dis-united states, the travels of Livingstone, the gorillas and M. De Chaillu, and the Zulus and their disciple Colenso, that we begin to apprehend that Africa and its sons are absorbing in one way or other quite their full share of public attention. Not that we regard this as at all a matter of regret; on the contrary, we believe that the sable African has been so long and so shamefully neglected, or despised, or abused, that it is but a reasonable thing that he and his temporal and spiritual interests should now command a large measure of the sympathy and attention, which the philanthropists and Christians of Europe and of the world have at their disposal. We are glad to find that among the Primitive Methodists there stirs a feeling of concern for the highest interests of the natives and colonists of Port Natal. We hope it will not all escape through the platform and the press, but rather that these will keep calling attention to the subject, and exciting among the people a deeper and still deeper sympathy therewith; until the time to favor Natal, yea, the proper time be come. Only let the men and the money be found, and we thoroughly believe Primitive Methodism will be able to effect immense good in that colony, and that its missionaries will not be thrown from their balance by questions as to the hare chewing the cud, the number of persons who could stand before the door of the tabernacle in the wilderness, or the rapidity with which the family of Jacob might multiply; but that they will be more likely to convert the Zulus, or the Kaffirs, as well as the European settlers, than to be perverted by them.

The present little work is very neatly got up, is printed in a good bold type, so that readers of all ages may examine it; and, moreover, it contains sixty-three pages of valuable matter on the subject to which it is devoted. It is quite a "Hand Book" to Port Natal. The geography, the natural history, the ethnography, the history, and the moral and religious state of the colony, are brought out very clearly. We cordially recommend the work to the early attention of our readers, and hope it will be found, as doubtless its author designs it shall be, a means of stimulating the Primitive Methodist Connexion to the discharge of its obligations to this important colony of the British empire. An appeal to the superintendents, the teachers, and the scholars of our Sabbath schools, in behalf of our contemplated Natal mission, very appropriately closes the work. May the blessing of Heaven attend this effort! And may our Conference and the Connexion be guided aright in regard to our mission to Africa!

OBITUARY.

Died at Lurgan, County Armagh, Ireland, on the 30th of April, 1862, Miss ELIZABETH ROBINSON, in the twenty-third year of her age. Her happy death has proved that the labours of the Primitive Methodists in remissioning Lurgan have been blessed by the Lord. Being appointed to preach at Lurgan, on October the 20th, 1861, I preached from Jeremiah xii. 5; "How wilt thou do in the swellings of Jordan?" Our departed sister was there, the word was accompanied by the Holy Spirit, she was cut to the heart, and was led there and then to lay her weary soul on Jesus Christ. She felt his pardoning love shed abroad in her heart, and her subsequent life and conversation gave full proof that her profession was a glorious reality. She joined our infant society, and lived to see much good done. On the 14th of April, 1862, she took to her bed, complaining of a pain in her head and side. On the 22nd of the same month, she told her mother she was going to die, and embracing her, said, "I'm going to glory; will you meet me in heaven?" She gave directions about her funeral, and marked some hymns in our new revival book, which she wanted to have sung at her funeral. The Rev. I. S. Nullis, preached her funeral sermon to a large congregation of weeping friends.

A. M'KINLEY.

Died, May 2nd, 1862, at Gosforth, in the Newcastle Circuit, Mr. MATTHEW HANKIN, late of Sunderland. He was born at the above village, June 3rd, 1834. His parents were, during his youth, irreligious, and of course his moral and religious training was neglected. The consequence of this was the usual indulgence in vice, and when about sixteen years of age he was much addicted to gambling. But it pleased the Lord, during the year following, to smite his heart under the ministry of our people, who at that time remissioned Gosforth. He was then deeply convicted as a sinner, and he sought and found redemption through the blood of Christ. A real change was thus wrought within him, to which his subsequent life invariably witnessed. After his conversion he became a teacher in the Sabbath school, and actively engaged otherwise in doing good. He became a diligent student of the Scriptures and theological works, so as to be enabled candidly and calmly to reason with those that opposed the truth; and through the sweetness of his disposition, and the soundness of his Christian principles, he was beloved by all with whom he was engaged in life, and respected by the public generally. Five or six years ago he came to Sunderland, where he sought for a situation suited to the state of his health; and, after enduring some privations, he at length found one in a mercantile office, where he acquired the full confidence of his masters. In Sunderland he became a diligent and valuable Sabbath school teacher, was punctual and regular in his attendance at the means of grace, officiated as a second leader for four years, and was much respected by all who knew him. At the commencement of 1862 his health began perceptibly to decline, so as to necessitate him to return home to his mother at Gosforth, where, in the middle of March, he took his bed. Consumption had marked him for its prey. His Christian principles, however, fully sustained him. He assured his friends that he was all right with the Lord, and on the morning of his death, after enduring much suffering, he could say, "Come, come quickly, Lord Jesus!" He thus fell asleep in Jesus in the twenty-eighth year of his age. J. LIGHTFOOT.

JOSEPH PAYNE, an old, consistent member at Belper, died in the Lord on Tuesday, May 6th, 1862, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. I preached his funeral sermon at Belper on Sunday, June 1st, when three persons remained to seek the Lord. J. BARFOOT.

HANNAH JONES, of Buckley, Chester Station, was born January 20th, 1843. She attended our Sabbath school from a child; and when about thirteen years of age, she received a change of heart while attending some revival services. From that time she was a member of our society, and lived as a Christian. While there was no great show of a profession, everything in her daily actions savoured of Christianity. She was given to reading, and one of her chief treats was our magazine. She was reserved in spiritual matters, but ever attentive to the means of grace. In April, 1862, her health failed, and for six weeks she rapidly sank. She expressed full confidence in Christ, and an assurance of pardon. On the 6th of May, she fell asleep in Jesus, aged eighteen years. J. CROMPTON.

ANN CLAMP, of Coalville, Ashby-de-la-Zouch Station, departed this life May 9th, 1862, aged fifty-seven years. She was one of the first Primitive Methodists at this place, and for upwards of twenty years was identified with God's people, and for that period she was a steady follower of Christ. For many years affliction was her portion. Eighteen years ago she lost her husband, who left her with five children to mourn his loss. But in the midst of all she was consoled by believing in him who has said, "Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will deliver thee." On behalf of her family she prayed and wept before the Lord, and to her great satisfaction she lived to see three of them members of the Christian Church. Her youngest son is the assistant class-leader of the class to which she belonged. At her class-meetings she always mourned over her littleness and her unworthiness, and seldom could she express herself to her own satisfaction; with tears she would say, "The Lord knows my heart." A few days before she died she was visited by our superintendent, the Rev. J. W. Howell, and the writer, who had been her class-leader for many years. She then referred to the time when she was converted to God, and blessed God that she still enjoyed his favour. Her hope was in the crucified One, and it bloomed with immortality and eternal life. In her latest moments she exclaimed, "Is this death? O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" and gently fell asleep in Jesus. May we meet her in heaven! T. STARKEY.

SOPHIA BAILY, of Westbromwich Station, was born May 21st, 1803, and departed this life on May 10th, 1862, aged fifty-nine years. Sophia was the subject of early religious impressions, and although her mother was a good woman, whose prayers to God were earnest and constant for the conversion of all her children, it was not till that mother, on her dying bed, called all her children around her, and was in the act of commending them severally to God, that deep and lasting impressions were made on the mind of our departed sister. From this time she began in earnest to seek the Lord, and not in vain. By faith and prayer she found redemption in the blood. When her fetters were broken she sang sweetly,—

"My soul is now united
To Christ, the living vine," &c.

Having now given her heart to God, she joined our people at Oldbury Green, Dudley Circuit, where, for many years, she continued a consistent member, and was greatly respected. Providence now removed her to Great's Green, in this the Westbromwich Circuit, where she finished her earthly course. On arriving at this place she at once joined society, and continued a member till death removed her. Her sufferings were very painful, but she bore them with patience and resignation to the will of God, often exclaiming, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." To all who visited her she gave every evidence that all was right. The last time I saw her I left her rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, and singing,—

"The wings of love, and arms of faith, Would bear me conqueror through."

Her death was improved by Brother Lissimore, when many deep and lasting impressions were made. May all her sorrowing family meet her in glory. Amen.

M. NICHOLAS.

Died at Hampstead Norris, in the Newbury Circuit, May 16th, 1862, SARAH KENT, in the eighty-third year of her age. She was a consistent member of the Primitive Methodist Society, about thirty-one years. Her house was open for the reception of the Primitive Methodist preachers for many years. She was always glad to hear of the prosperity of the Society and connexion to which she belonged; and, when too infirm to attend the means, would always inquire what kind of a meeting the friends had witnessed. She spoke of death, for several months before she departed, with great composure of mind, and even joy of soul. Her last illness lasted only one week. She had but little pain; she appeared to have nothing to do but close her eyes and sleep in Jesus. D. KENT.

ELIZABETH HAND commenced her mortal existence at Ellaston, a small village in the Ramsor Circuit, on the 26th of December, 1831, and terminated it on the 16th of May 1862. At an early age she was taken by the hand of pious parents to the Sabbath school, and she there learned to read the story of a Saviour's love to lost and ruined man. She was always, what may be termed strictly moral in her conduct; but until she was in her twentieth year she remained a stranger to true and vital religion. For a long time prior to obtaining forgiveness she laboured under conviction of her need of a Saviour.

At length, after long hewing out for herself cisterns, broken cisterns, which could hold no water, she repaired (after having heard a sermon preached by that man of God, Anthony Hawley), to the fountain of living waters, and drank, and was satisfied. She went home rejoicing in the God of her salvation. Subsequently she came to reside at Hanley, in the Tunstall Circuit, and united with us in church fellowship.

Her illness was of short duration; but her sufferings were of a painful nature; but under all she was patient, and resigned to the will of God. In answer to questions regarding her eternal safety, she replied with a firmness that could leave no doubt, that "All was right."

A little before her departure she fixed her eyes on the ceiling of her room, and raising her hand beckoned with her finger, as though she saw some guardian angel ready to escort her happy spirit to the realms of the blest, and in a few moments she went to join the blood-washed throng. E. JACKSON.

JONATHAN FOSTER died at Mickleton, in the Barnard Castle Circuit, May 17th, 1862, in the forty-ninth year of his age. He lived in sin until under the ministry of the Gospel he was convinced of the error of his ways, and was brought by faith in Christ to realize the remission of his sins, and the regeneration of his nature. He maintained a consistent Christian deportment, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord; shedding a happy influence in the sphere in which he moved. His occupation was that of a lead miner, which brought on the affliction that proved fatal. For several months he was confined to his house and bed. During his affliction he saw and regretted that he had not been so faithful in the service of God as he might; but he, nevertheless, held the Saviour with a firm faith, and felt the peace of God which passeth all understanding to keep his heart and mind. When the final moment of his existence arrived he raised his eyes, his hands, and his heart towards heaven, and expired with the name of Jesus upon his lips. May his widow and family follow him, as he followed the Saviour! H. PRATT.

RUTH BEESTON was born at Biggin, in Belper Circuit, October, 1780. She was converted amongst the Wesleyans, and remained with them nine years. When the Primitive Methodists visited Biggin, she liked their mode of worship, united with them, and remained firm and consistent to the end of life. She was warm in temper, but very kind in disposition, and a dear lover of God and His people, as her actions showed. Wicked people believed her to be a Christian. The Society having no place in which to preach she opened her door for Divine worship in 1833. Preaching is yet held in the house from which our sister has departed to the Church above. Her affliction—cancer in the leg—was very painful, and continued more than twenty years. Patiently she bore it, however, assured that God doth all things well. She was frequently tempted by Satan. One day, feeling that she was losing ground, she requested her daughter to read and pray with her; and, while she did so, the enemy was defeated, and our departed sister was enabled to rejoice in the God of her salvation. She often spoke of the country where the inhabitants never say they are sick; and repeated the hymn commencing with, "Jesus, love of my soul." She frequently spoke of Christ and religion to others, and exhorted those around her to do the same. On Lord's day, May 18th, soon after the close of the preaching service, she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, aged eighty-one years. J. B. ROGERS.

Died at Normanton, in Chesterfield Circuit, May 22nd., 1862, A. BARKER, aged seventy-one years. In the year 1822 he was led to God through the instrumentality of the Wesleyans, joined their Society at Birchover, the place where he then resided, and continued with them a consistent member until he removed to Normanton, where he united with the people of his choice, and was a liberal supporter of the cause. The Wesleyans having given up the place, the Primitives entered it, when he became one of the first members, helped on the cause according to the best of his power, and continued a pious useful member to the day of his death. He was greatly respected by his leaders, was sound in the faith of the gospel, and glorified God with his body and soul, which were the Lord's! He enjoyed the blessedness of the man whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is covered. His delight was in the law of the Lord, and in it did he meditate day and night; and he was like a tree planted by the side of the waterbrook that bringeth forth his fruit in his season, and whatsoever he did prospered. It was so both temporally and spiritually. His path resembled that of the shining light which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. He was diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. He made it a standing rule to relieve the poor and distressed. He was liberal to the cause of God. He sowed his seed in the morning, and in the evening he withheld not his hand. He sowed liberally and reaped plentifully. He began life in poverty, and ended it in plenty. He was never puffed up with pride. He was clothed with humility like a garment. He was grateful for what he possessed, and in every thing gave thanks, and especially for having been made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light. The Bible was his favourite book, his precious treasure, and he made it the rule of his life. He read it three or four times a day in his family. He was constantly in a state of readiness, waiting for the coming of his Lord. He for some time felt his end drawing on, and there was a sweet heavenly calm around him; a bright prospect of the better land was before him; and, as he neared it, his son asked if all was right, when he replied, "I am ready when it shall please the Lord to call me." His end was peace. J. BARKER.

Mrs. ELIZABETH PADGET of Walkington, Hull First Station, departed this life, May 22nd, 1862, aged seventy years. It was her privilege to have had pious parents, and to have been early conducted to the house of God. From a child she was remarkable for her quiet, kind, and serious demeanour; and until her conversion to God, which took place late in life, she was a most consistent and exemplary moral character. She and her husband for many years frequently attended our chapel in the village, and were kind to the cause. It was not, however, until about five years ago that she was brought to experience a change of heart, when, through the social discourse of the Rev. H. Woodcock, she was enabled to understand the way of salvation by faith, and to lay hold on the atonement of Jesus Christ. Immediately she joined the small society, and proved a great ornament and helper. Her neat and comfortable home was always open for the ministers and friends of the cause, because she esteemed their company a privilege and pleasure. Her house was our Bethany home. Often tired in body and depressed in mind, I have gone to a friendly meal, and by her kindness and conversation, have been greatly invigorated and encouraged. Truly she was a mother in Israel. Up to the last missionary anniversary she had a missionary-box, which, notwithstanding her years, she carried round the village, and to several places surrounding, and with her own generous and liberal offering she raised a noble sum. Hers was a liberal soul; and it devised liberal things. On the day above mentioned she rose at her usual time in the morning, and was proceeding to attend to her household duties, when she was seized with an apoplectic fit, which in nine hours after terminated fatally. She never spoke nor opened her eyes after the seizure. But although her verbal dying testimony is wanted there is the sweet testimony of a holy life. There rests not a doubt, in the mind of any in the village, of her eternal peace. Farewell, sister spirit, till we meet again in heaven.

W. WHITBY.

Mrs. ELIZABETH MARKS of Sandford, on the Sherborne or Yeovil Mission, departed this life to be with Christ, May 24th, 1862. She was one of the first fruits of our labours on this station. In the year 1840 she united with us in church-fellowship. She was a person of deep piety. Her self-denial was great. For some years, while in service, she contributed largely towards the support of a widowed mother and God's cause. Our missions shared deeply in her sympathies, and year after year she assisted them according to her ability. She was a good wife, a very indulgent mother, a kind neighbour, and a generous and consistent Christian. Her sufferings the last few months were very acute, but in patience she possessed her soul. She often said, "It is the Lord; let Him do what seemeth Him good." Calmly at length she fell asleep in Jesus, aged forty-nine years. W. JUGGINS.

MARGARET HOUSTON, of Lympit Hill, in the Oswestry Circuit, was born in the month of October, 1819, and departed this life May 24th, 1862, in the forty-third year of her age. She was brought to God among our people, and continued a consistent member until the day of her death. In the year 1844, she was united in marriage with him who now deeply deplores her loss, (and who is an acceptable and useful local preacher of long standing in this circuit). Her sufferings at the latter end of her life were great, but while the power of speech remained, she often expressed her confidence and trust in God. She left behind no dying testimony as to her future prospects, infinite wisdom ordered it otherwise, but her consistent life, her love to the Saviour and his cause, while in health, her submission to the Divine will under affliction, and her Christian character so well sustained for many years, give us the assurance that her happy spirit lives with God.

J. H. LEA.

MARY WHITE was born at Scaths, Lincolnshire, February 24th, 1838. At an early age she was sent to our Sabbath-school, and regularly attended until they appointed her to be a teacher. She was obedient to her parents, sober-minded, and of a cheerful disposition, yet destitute of the life and power of religion. In the year 1857 she removed to Hull, and began to attend the West street chapel; she there heard the word, and felt herself enslaved by sin, but desirous for freedom; she wept, prayed, and cried for mercy, and by faith in the atonement she obtained forgiveness.

At the expiration of two years she returned to her native village, but symptoms of decline were apparent in her fair but frail system. When feeling herself nearing the shores of eternity she always manifested a submissive disposition, and often said, "To live would be well, but to die would be better." She exhorted her parents to meet her in heaven, and said, "I shall soon be at home. It is victory! It is victory! All is well!"

On Saturday, May 24th, 1862, she fell asleep in Jesus in the twenty-fourth year of her age, and the sixth of her membership. May her parents and sisters meet her in the better world. S. BIRCH.

HANNAH WALMS, late of Little Smeaton, Pontefract Station, was converted to God under the ministry of the Primitive Methodists more than thirty years ago, and her union with our society has been unbroken, except for a short time when the services were withdrawn from the place. She had an ear for music, and delighted in harmonious singing. She was regular in her attendance at the means of grace while health permitted, and was often present in spirit when unable to attend in body. Although she was in humble circumstances, she was a regular contributor to the circuit's funds. Her death was sudden; she had been out of her cottage the same day. Still she appeared to be conscious that her end was near, and observed to her husband, "I shall not see May out." Nor did she; for after years of affliction here she departed to be for ever with the Lord on the 29th of May, 1862, aged seventy-eight years. W. BENNETT.

Mrs. SALISBURY was born at Heathyclose, in the county of Derby, in the year 1776, and died at Church Broughton in the Burton-on-Trent circuit, June 2nd, 1862, aged eighty-six years. In early life she was led by her pious mother to the Wesleyan Chapel, Boylestone, and when very young was convinced of her state as a sinner. At the age of seventeen years she was united in marriage to Mr. John Salisbury, of Sapperton. She, with her husband, removed to Church Broughton, where they remained until death. There being no Primitive Methodists in Church Broughton, they attended the Independents' service at Heathtop for a short time, but on hearing of a camp-meeting at Ramsor, Mrs. S. attended. On hearing brothers Hugh Bourne, and William Clowes preach, she was so struck with the earnestness of the preachers, and the adaptation of the means employed to rouse the church and convert sinners, that she immediately resolved, this people shall be my people. At the close of the camp-meeting she invited the above brethren to accompany her to Church Broughton, which they did. In a short time after brother H. Bourne formed a class at Church Broughton, and appointed John Salisbury leader. Mrs. S. then united, and she remained a very steady member until death removed her to the Church above. The benevolence and liberality of Mr. and Mrs. S. alone with Christian lustre; their house was a home for itinerant and local preachers about half a century. In the early days of Primitive Methodism in these parts friends were few and far between, but the preachers could always return from missionary tours to brother Salisbury's hospitable dwelling, and be hailed with a smile. My own earliest recollections of my mother are fraught with the lessons of morality and religion which she sought to impress upon my youthful mind, and to her endeavours, under God, I attribute to some extent my own early acquaintance with divine truth. Her instructions, her cautions, her encouragements, her example, her prayers at the family altar, and readiness to support the cause she had espoused, were salutary in their influence, and now sweetly embalm her memory. She was at chapel the Sunday previous to her death, and heard the preached word with great attention. The following Tuesday she was taken ill. Shortly after she died without a struggle or a groan. J. SALISBURY.

Died at Rockland, June the 4th, 1862, Mr. GEORGE GREENGRASS, in the thirty-sixth year of his age. By the good providence of God our departed friend was born of parents who loved and feared the Lord. His mother died when he was a child, but his father lived to see him arrive at manhood. Thus placed beneath the genial influence of piety from his birth, our brother was mercifully preserved from numerous evils into which many others, less favoured, unhappily fall; and there can be little doubt that his early home training gave to his after character that symmetry and stability for which he was so distinguished. In very early life he attended the Sabbath-school, became very diligent in his attention to his duties, and on anniversary occasions took a prominent part in the proceedings. In due time he was raised to the office of a teacher, and by his firm attachment to the school, and his diligent and constant efforts to promote its interests, he rendered himself a very valuable one. His connection with the Church of God began at a very early age. Twenty-six years since, when the Rev. R. Key was stationed on this circuit, a children's class was formed of which Mr. Greengrass and several others became members, but on Mr. Key's removal, the society of juveniles was scattered. But our brother was soon united again in a teacher's class, led by our highly respected friend Mr. Fielding, and from that time to his death he continued his union with the people of his early choice. The exact date of his conversion to God I have not been able to ascertain, but that the change essential to salvation had been wrought in his heart by the power of the Holy Ghost, no one acquainted with his every-day life will be disposed to doubt. The exalted views he held of the love of God in Christ, and of the preciousness of the atonement—as the sinner's only hope—together with his firm trust in that atonement for his own personal salvation and acceptance with God, and his constant readiness to blend his sympathies and aid with every movement calculated to lessen the woes of our fallen humanity, unmistakably proved that his record was on high. His was not a fitful Christianity, but a heavenly principle, deeply imbedded in his innermost mind. He carried his religion with him into the world, and there he wisely exhibited a pattern of piety, which, blended with his upright dealings, truthfulness in his engagements, and general urbanity of manners, have secured for him a large circle of friends in whose affectionate remembrance his name will long live respected and honoured. He conducted himself in his own household worthy of the responsible position of its head. During the whole term of his married life he manifested the greatest care and solicitude for the comfort of her with whom he had united his destinies; and his early removal will cause a void in that afflicted bosom which no earthly sympathy can fully supply. As a father he was affectionate and kind, caring both for the temporal and spiritual wants of his children, diligently applying himself to the duties of his calling, that he might secure for them an honourable position in society. He educated them, gave them pious counsel, prayed for them, and set before them an example they may safely imitate. That our dear brother should have been so early removed hence—just at the time when to human appearance his presence in the Church, and especially in his family, was most needed—is to us among the inscrutable things of him who ordereth all things according to the counsel of his own will.

For some months we could see that a serious change was taking place in him, wasting his strength in the midst of his manly vigour, and bringing him to the gates of death. But in the midst of failing nature he manifested no terror, no alarm; in patience he possessed his soul. He thankfully received the visits of friends, and sometimes when they were with him was exceedingly happy. To one friend he said, "Faith worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope, and hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost given unto us." On one occasion when the clergyman of the parish visited him, and at his request knelt and prayed with him, he became unspeakably happy, and praised God aloud. To his dear partner, he said, "Come what will I am all right. There is a blessed promise for me, 'Leave thy fatherless children with me; I will preserve them alive.' And there is one for you also. 'I will be a Father to the fatherless, and a Husband to the widow.' Look up and trust in God, and you will be provided for.' At length the final hour came, and calm as sets the sun in a cloudless sky, he slept in Jesus. "He was not, for God took him." "Devout men carried him to his burial," and the Sabbath-school teachers and children and a large concourse of friends assembled to pay a last tribute of respect to departed worth. His death was improved by the writer in the presence of a crowded congregation, and he trusts good was done. That the bereaved family, the writer, and his numerous readers may join our friend in heaven, is the sincere prayer of

D. DUNNETT.

Died at Cockswells, Penzance Station, June 9th, 1862, ELIZABETH MOORSHEAD, aged fifty-four years. For fifty-one years she lived a strict moralist, respected by her neighbours, and beloved by her family, but a neglecter of salvation,—scarcely ever attending a place of divine worship. About four years ago our people missioned Cockswells, and erected a chapel there to which she was induced to go; and being brought in contact with the truth it aroused her slumbering conscience, flooded her mind with light, captivated her alienated affections, and won her to the Saviour. Leaving a service held in the chapel three years ago she retired to a room in her own house, to pray, resolving never to give up until God had sealed a pardon on her heart. Her family knowing this sent for brother H. Thomas (who subsequently became her class-leader) to pray with her. The battle began! Satan struggled to keep her, but faith grasping the promise marshalled all the moral powers of her being, and the Captain of Salvation coming to her help, the foe was driven back, the enemy was conquered, and she triumphed. She soon joined the society, and up to the time of her death was a happy and exemplary Christian. She was not afraid to die; for several times during her illness she said to the writer and other friends who visited her, "Absent from the body I shall be present with the Lord." And she died, trusting in the Saviour, leaving a large family to lament her loss.

J. HAWKINS.

MARY, the beloved wife of William WEAVER, of Carregtrofu, Oswestry Station, departed this life on the 20th of June 1862, aged seventy-seven years. She suffered much for the last five weeks of her earthly pilgrimage but not a single murmuring word was heard to escape her lips. Shortly before her decease, her weeping husband asked if she was happy. "O yes," she said, "quite happy!"

MONTHLY SUMMARY.

Our Summary this month must be both shorter and longer than usual. We must say but little of men and things in general, that we may be able to say more on the great work of patriotism, philanthropy, and Christianity, which at the time of the year at which we write—the middle of May—engrosses so large a share of the attention of this mammoth metropolis, London, and, indeed, of good men in general, throughout our land, and throughout all Christendom.

We do not need to say much here of the great Metropolitan Missionary meeting of our own denomination, which was held, May 12th, in the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's monster Tabernacle, and which despite the very unfavourable weather, was attended by some 5,000 persons from town and country, as the report issued by the General Missionary Committee will be accessible by the time this Magazine shall be published. That report, containing a full and correct account of the proceedings, may be obtained of the travelling preachers for the small sum of four-pence, and the profits of its sale will be devoted to the missionary cause. We anticipate, therefore, that most, if not all of our readers, will secure and read it. But, in fulfilment of a previous promise, we now proceed to give a synopsis of the proceedings of the other great Societies whose anniversaries have already been held this year in London. Some additional facts of the same order may have to be over till our next issue.

1. We begin with the British and Foreign Bible Society:—

The 59th anniversary of this society was celebrated on Wednesday, May 6th, in Exeter Hall. The Earl of Shaftesbury occupied the chair, and was supported on the platform by many prelates, noblemen, and gentlemen.

The Rev. S. B. BURGESS read the report of the committee for the past year. It said the year had had its peculiar features of encouragement and responsibility. The committee had to announce a diminished income, but they did that in common with other large religious societies whose resources had been affected by the distress in Lancashire. The operations in France had been varied in character. There was an increasing distrust of Popery in many districts, and pretended miracles had in no slight degree embittered the thoughts of many against the system. The leaven of Protestantism was also working in the minds of many who perceived that it redeemed religion from the odium of a mere ecclesiastical traffic, and placed it on the true basis of a service rendered by the heart to God. On the other hand, there were circumstances which had tended to check the circulation of the Bible during the past year; and amongst these was the pressure of commercial distress. The labours of colporteurs had yielded smaller results than in previous years. In some localities strenuous efforts had been made to arrest the work of circulation. The pulpit and the press had been employed against Protestantism; the fears of the superstitious, especially in the rural districts, had been worked upon; and the Bible had been branded as the symbol of anarchy and misfortune. The issues from the Paris depot in the past year amounted, nevertheless, to 83,893 Bibles, and the number of colporteurs was from 63 to 96. The total circulation in France was now raised to 5,000,000 copies. The circulation of the year in Belgium was 4,749 volumes, making the issues since 1835, 272,000. In Holland the two antagonists of the society were Popery and Rationalism, and the work of distribution had been opposed by both in the last year. The issues from the depot at Amsterdam within the year amounted to 21,151 copies. In Germany the three great centres of Bible circulation were Cologne, Frankfort, and Berlin, and the issues for them amounted to 293,770. The Cologne agency included North Germany, where multitudes had shown that they appreciated the work. The population for which the Berlin agency had to provide the Scriptures extended from the shores of the Baltic to the Adriatic, and from the Alps to the Danubian Principalities; and much good had been done in those vast territories. Fifty-six colporteurs had been employed in Germany during the past year. No pleasurable reference, it was observed, could be made to Austria. Two years ago it was announced at the anniversary of this society that the restrictions were rescinded by imperial rescript, and that free and open scope would be given to the agents of the society. Results had proved that the language of congratulation was premature. The rescript had by no means given the liberty which the committee were led to expect. Every effort had been made to induce the Austrian Government formally to allow the introduction of the Bible, but without effect. The agent of the society had had frequent interviews with official persons, and respectful memorials had been addressed to the Minister of State in whose department the matter was; but the Government had maintained a long and vexatious silence. The circulation in Denmark during the last year was 16,130 copies; in Norway, 19,582; in Sweden, 93,000; in Russia, 19,500. The committee had endeavoured to prosecute their labours in Italy with all the vigour and appliances at their command; but the results in the past year were not equal to those announced in the last report. There were retarding causes still operating with prodigious force in many parts of Italy. In some districts the power of the priests was supreme, and the people were held in a state of profound and absolute subjection to ecclesiastical despotism. The amount of ignorance prevalent in Italy was appallingly great, and among large masses of the people there was a total inability to read. Another retarding cause was political excitement, which had not yet subsided. Political rather than religious solicitude agitated the minds of those whose highest welfare the society wished to promote. It must further be borne in mind that the development of the work necessarily depended on the amount of agency. There was extreme difficulty in obtaining men duly qualified by piety, zeal, and prudence, for the duties of colportage. It was the increased desire of the agent, Mr. Bruce, to strengthen his staff of colporteurs, who had to traverse such an immense territory, and to go amongst so many millions of people. During this year the issues in Italy amounted to 27,000 Bibles and Testaments. The number of colporteurs employed was 29, and their labours embraced Northern, Central, and Southern Italy, and the island of Sicily. There was a bright side to the picture of Italy. Some of the priesthood there were arguing in favour of the free circulation of the Scriptures, and the utterances of a free press and other causes gave assurance that a power was at work which would eventually ensure a wide diffusion of the Scriptures. The important depot in Malta provided for Bible distribution in Africa, Egypt, and Syria, as well as in Malta itself, and nearly 9000 copies had gone forth from it in the past year. A valuable report had been received from the Society's agent at Constantinople, containing evidence of success as regarded the circulation of the Scriptures. The agent declared that a careful retrospect of the year was in all respects well fitted to encourage the hearts of those who longed to see Mahommedanism supplanted by the religion of the Cross. The circulation of the year amounted to 16,406 copies. The Minister of Instruction and Worship for the principality of Wallachia had just issued an order that public worship in the churches should be conducted in the spoken language of the country instead of an obsolete dialect, which was unintelligible to the mass of the people. This change could hardly fail to produce a good effect on the diffusion of the Word of God. In Greece the use of the Bible was permitted in all the national schools, and adopted in nearly one-half; and this, also, was a cause of congratulation. The issues of the year in that country amounted to 1,396. Proceeding to India, the report said the work of the society there was necessarily dependent on the co-operation of missionaries and native converts, and in proportion as these multiplied would there be additional facilities for diffusing the Scriptures. That subject had been pressed on the different auxiliaries, and the committee rejoiced to observe that although their hopes were far from being realized, there was now apparent from year to year an increased circulation of the Scriptures, combined with encouraging testimony to its good effects. The issues of the year at Calcutta were 29,500; at Allahabad, 13,000; at Madras, 76,000; at Bombay, 9,160. The returns from Ceylon were not yet complete; but the entire circulation of Ceylon in the past year could not be less than 137,000 copies. In China there were some features of progress and improvement. The issues of the year at Shanghai were 35,190 copies, chiefly Testaments; at Canton the number was 9,000, and at Hong-Kong, 9,341. As regards the South Sea Islands, during the past year the complete Bible in the Tahitian language had been finished and placed at the disposal of the London Missionary Society. The Bible in the language of Samoa had also been completed. The translation of the Scriptures into the language of Savage Island was proceeding satisfactorily, and its translation into the Tongee language had been completed. In the last report it was stated that ample supplies of the Scriptures had been recently despatched to Madagascar. Before the arrival of those supplies Mr. Ellis convened a meeting of the missionaries in Madagascar to consider in what manner the distribution should be effected. It was ultimately determined to adopt the policy of demanding a price for every volume, confining the gifts to those who were really unable to purchase, and the committee rejoiced at that decision. When the supplies had arrived the work of distribution immediately commenced, and so numerous and eager were the applicants that within three days nearly 2,000 copies were issued. The Society would be prepared promptly to undertake the preparation of any editions of the Scripture, at whatever cost, which might be required to give effect to the missionary operations now so auspiciously renewed. It was also stated in the last report that a Bible had been forwarded for presentation to the King of Madagascar, accompanied with a letter. That gift was received most favourably, and the volume was in frequent use in the Royal palace. The following letter of acknowledgment had been received from the king:—

“My Lord and Gentlemen,—I have duly received from the Rev. William Ellis the very handsome Bible which you were so good as to send me, with the letter by which it was accompanied. I thank your Lordship and the officers of the committee of the great institution over which you preside for the good wishes expressed in your letter towards myself, and for the interest you manifest in the prosperity of my country, as well as for the holy book you have forwarded to me; and more particularly for the generous supply of the sacred Scriptures which you have sent to my people, by many of whom they will be highly prized and carefully read. I desire to ascribe to Almighty God the position which I occupy in Madagascar; and as I believe that nothing will conduce more to the prosperity of my people than a wide extension of Bibles, I shall encourage the most free circulation of the Scriptures throughout Madagascar, and I wish religious teaching and Christian worship to be without hindrance or interruption among all classes of my people. I am your sincere friend,

“RADAMA II.”

With respect to the Southern States of America, it was remarked that previous to the war they drew their supplies of Bibles from New York. When that source of supply was closed by the war, the Bible societies in the Southern States applied to the committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society to supply the place of New York, and send the requisite supplies. With this demand the committee felt bound to comply; and he was sure that every Christian patriot in the Northern States must approve of that decision. They sent such supplies as were needed, waiting for more prosperous times for payment; and they hoped that the circulation of the Scriptures would tend to mitigate the fierce passions stirred up by the war. In response to an appeal, the committee had voted 10,000 Bibles and 50,000 Testaments for Virginia, on the understanding that they should be distributed with thorough impartiality as between white and black. These terms had been accepted by the agent of the Virginia Society. In the concluding part of the report mention was made of the death of the late Archbishop of Canterbury, who was spoken of as an earnest, cordial, and unswerving friend of the society; and the meeting was congratulated on the fact that the Archbishop of Dublin had cordially consented to be enrolled in the list of vice-presidents. As regards the deficiency in the funds, the committee expressed their confidence that when the commerce of the country should have recovered from the shock which so seriously affected it, the income of the society would again manifest the growing liberality of the Christian Church. The following is a general statement of the transactions of the society during the year:—The receipts of the year ending March 31, 1863, applicable to the general purposes of the society, have amounted to £84,263; and the amount received for Bibles and Testaments has been £73,727 4s.; making the total receipts from the ordinary sources of income £157,990 4s., being £9,693 17s. 4d. less than in the preceding year. To the above must be added the sum of £703 1s. 8d. for the Chinese New Testament Fund, and £57 13s. 1d. for the special fund for India; making a grand total of £158,750 18s. 9d. The issues of the society for the year are as follows:—From the depôts at home, 1,518,469; from depôts abroad, 615,391—total, 2,133,860 copies. The total issues of the society now amount to 43,044,334 copies. The ordinary payments have amounted to £144,946 7s. 1d., and the payments on account of the special funds to £5,592 13s. 8d.; making the total expenditure of the year to amount to £150,539 0s. 9d., being £5,539 1s. more than in the preceding year. The society is under engagements to the extent of £94,285 9s. 9d. The termination of the report included a congratulatory reference to the agency of the Bible-women, of whom it was said there are 190 now employed.

The meeting was addressed by the Archbishop of York, the Earl of Harrowby, Dr. Tidman, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Bishop of Mauritius, the Rev. Emilius Bayley, the Rev. Charles Vince, the Rev. Luke Wiseman, and the Bishop of Melbourne.

2. We shall next give the proceedings of the Religious Tract Society:—

The sixty-fourth anniversary of the Religious Tract Society was celebrated at Exeter Hall on Friday evening, May 10th. The audience was much larger than usual, completely filling the edifice, including the spacious platform, and gallery. Thirty or more of the front seats of the platform were occupied by ministers of the several evangelical denominations, Episcopal clergy greatly preponderating.

John Gurney Hoare, Esq., the treasurer of the society, took the chair, in the absence of Sir F. Crossley, Bart., M.P., who had addressed a letter to the secretary, which was read, expressing deep regret that he could not be in town on the day of the meeting.

The proceedings were begun by singing and prayer, the Rev. T. J. Davidson leading the devotions of the assembly.

The Chairman said he felt personally disappointed because of the absence of the hon. baronet who had been announced to preside, of whom he had often heard, and had hoped on that occasion to make his personal acquaintance. Few men had done so much as Sir Frank Crossley for the spiritual as well as for the temporal interests of the people amongst whom he lived. Probably many present knew something of his benefactions; but perhaps even those would scarcely believe that within the last year he had purchased a large estate at a cost of some £200,000, and had placed it in the hands of trustees, in order that the comforts and privileges he had provided for the people about him might be perpetuated in future days. (Cheers.) All the friends of the Tract Society would regret the absence of such a man from the chair of this annual meeting. (Cheers.) This was the sixty-fourth anniversary; and what a solemn thought it was that probably not one of the great multitude now before him had taken part in the first meeting of the society, and that only a few of them would be present at the annual gathering thirty years hence! How many even might be taken away before the very next meeting! (Hear, hear.) Should not this thought stimulate to present labour for the spiritual welfare of men, and to earnest prayer for the blessing of God to rest upon it? Great things had been done by this society under the smile of Heaven, and it continued to pursue the course it had always done, and might anticipate, therefore, the same success in days to come. Every one of the books and tracts of the society contained the truth as it is in Jesus, the comfort and support of every Christian heart. The doctrines of the Gospel were always stated plainly and fully, while avoiding those subordinate questions respecting which the best of Christians held different opinions. (Hear, hear.) The operations of the society during the past year had possessed several features of peculiar interest. The Great Exhibition last summer was the centre to which the thoughts and activities of multitudes were drawn, and this society took advantage of the opportunity to circulate its tracts and handbills far and wide, assured that they would not be diffused in vain, especially when their distribution had been accompanied by silent prayers. The dreadful war in America, which had devastated vast regions of country and hurried tens of thousands of immortal souls into eternity—taken when fired with passion to their final doom; even here the society had helped, for grants of tracts and books had been made to both the contending armies; and who could tell the instruction and comfort the truth they contained might have been, and doubtless had been, to numbers of the wounded and dying soldiers? (Hear, hear.) Turning to the distress in Lancashire, it was again found that the society had been enabled to do a very useful work. So many as 10,000 books and 300,000 tracts had been circulated in the cotton districts in the course of the year; these had been most gladly received, and read by many who in the time of prosperity were not accustomed to peruse such publications. He felt it to be a cause of much thankfulness that the Bible and religious book circulation of the present day was so extensive; but how much greater it might be if more individual effort was put forth! Those who could not give to the society, or even engage in tract distribution, could pray for a blessing to rest upon the institution.

Dr. G. H. Davis, the secretary, in an interesting speech, stated the main facts of the report, which, in a still more summary form, were the following:—

PUBLICATIONS.—During the year ending March 31st, 1863, the society published 55 new tracts, and a packet of 8 book-tracts; 28 books, including a new edition of Howe's works, by H. Rogers, Esq.; and a complete answer to Dr. Colenso's attack upon the Pentateuch, by the Rev. T. R. Birks; 5 periodicals—the "Leisure Hour," the "Sunday at Home," the "Tract Magazine," the "Child's Companion," and the "Cottager;" and various miscellaneous publications, — making a total of 410.

CIRCULATION.—The number of publications issued from the depository during the year is forty-one millions, five hundred and ninety-two thousand, one hundred and thirty; and if to this be added the probable issues by foreign societies, the number will reach forty-seven millions: making a total circulation in sixty-four years of one thousand and six millions.

FOREIGN OPERATIONS.—In France the society has paid for the reprinting of various old tracts, and the publication of six new tracts, for the free circulation of 200,000 tracts, and 50,000 Almanachs des bon Conseils; and for a large number of libraries from the Paris Sunday-school Union and the Toulouse Book Society. It has circulated 76,645 tracts in Belgium; 120,000 in Sweden; 237,000 in Stuttgart; and more than a million in other parts of Germany. It has published 120,000 copies of 17 different works in Italian, besides 80,000 copies of the Amico di Casa. It has also published 13,000 tracts in Bulgarian, 8,000 in Arabo-Turkish, and 3,000 in Armenian. In the vernaculars of India it has printed over 600,000 books, tracts, and periodicals, and 200,000 in Chinese. In Africa it has enlarged its operations at the Cape, and in America has spread its publications through all the British possessions.

GRANTS.—Its grants have amounted to £13,573 2s. 8d., towards which the public has contributed in subscriptions, donations, &c., £9,063 10s. 10d., and £1,965 10s. 8d. in legacies. These grants include 6,840,330 publications, valued at £6,839 2s. 4d., made to various societies, congregations, and private persons in the British Isles.

FUNDS.—The receipts from sales amounted to £84,272 12s. 6d., and from benevolent sources to £11,029 10s. 6d., making a total of £95,302 3s.

3. We now turn to the Sunday School Union:—

The annual meeting took place in the evening of Thursday, May 7th in the large room at Exeter Hall. Long before six o'clock the large edifice was filled to overflowing with the teachers and friends of Sunday-schools, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. The platform was occupied with ministers and gentlemen of all evangelical denominations, gathered from many parts of the country as well as of the metropolis; and the entire proceedings were in the highest degree interesting and animated. Precisely at six o'clock the officers of the Union came upon the platform, and the meeting was begun by singing the hymn "Once more with joyful greeting,

We crown another year," to the tune "Bradford," and the Rev. Robert Robinson offered prayer.

Henry Lee, Esq., of Salford, in the absence of the President, the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, M.P.—who felt obliged to be in his place in the House of Commons to vote upon the Prison Ministers Bill—was requested to take the chair. On doing so, he said he should not detain the meeting by a speech, as without preparation he could not address it with either satisfaction to himself or profit to the audience. He had, however, deep sympathies with Sunday-school teachers, regarding them as "the flower of Christian chivalry," and rejoiced in their work.

W. H. Watson, Esq., the senior secretary of the Union, read the report which had been adopted by the annual meeting of members. The following are a few of its points:—

"It has afforded the committee pleasure to witness the growing interest in the religious education of the young manifested in various parts of the world, and they have readily responded to every appeal made to them for assistance in carrying out that object. That help has generally been rendered in the form of grants of books, and the Committee have been enabled thus to assist schools at Rouen, Paris, Neuchâtel, Canton de Vaud, Western Africa, Bombay, Madras, Calcutta, China, Queensland, South Australia, New Zealand, Jamaica, and Canada West. There are at present in France 660 Protestant Sunday-schools, with about 33,000 scholars. Various publications have been issued by the society for the use of both teachers and scholars, and the expenditure for the year had amounted to 22,565 francs. At the request of the Paris Sunday School Society, Mr. Charles Reed attended their recent anniversary, and addressed a meeting of four thousand children. It was a most delightful and encouraging occasion. The police who had charge of the building were so interested in the proceedings of the day, that they voluntarily offered the fees to which they were entitled, to the funds of the Union. Reference was next made to Mr. Woodruff's interesting efforts in Switzerland and Italy, and a comprehensive glance was taken of the schools in the colonies and in the Bahama Islands. Deep regret was expressed because of the continuance of the American war, with its many attendant evils, and it was said: May the God of peace speedily hush this fearful storm into a calm, and the prayer of the prophet Jeremiah be graciously answered—'O thou sword of the Lord, how long will it be ere thou be quiet? put up thyself into thy scabbard; rest, and be still.' A detailed account was next given of the recent convention in London, which was attended by 443 Sunday-school teachers and officers. With reference to the school collections for the relief of the Lancashire distress it was stated that £3,419 12s. 2d. had been received and distributed. The committee thought it their duty to exhibit the publications of the Union at the International Exhibition, and it afforded them much pleasure to find that the commissioners had awarded to the Union a medal 'for superiority in the compilation and publication of educational works and apparatus.' The sales at the depository have amounted during the year to £17,064 3s. 3d., showing a decrease on the year of £136 4s. This decrease has been caused by the diminished circulation of the periodicals of the Union, and the surprise of the committee is that the decrease is no greater, considering the distress which has fallen on the Sunday-school population, especially, of our land. It has, however, led the committee to consider whether that circulation, large as it is, may not be greatly increased. The sales of the present year already exhibit generally an advance on those of the last year; the increase in one case, indeed, that of the "Child's Own Magazine," being to the large extent of 12,000 copies monthly. The committee have found it necessary to increase the trade capital, by adding to it out of the profits of the year the sum of £500. The increased circulation of the "Youth's Magazine," at its reduced price, has encouraged the committee to continue its publication. The committee have resolved to establish a Scriptural museum, and will be happy to receive donations of any objects tending to illustrate the Scriptures. The expenditure on the benevolent account of the Union, including the balance of £36 12s. 3d., due last year, has amounted to £2,139 4s. 11d. This amount has been increased by the cost of erecting the gallery in the lecture hall, the other expenses of the convention, and the printing connected with the appeal on behalf of the distress in the cotton districts. 329 lending libraries have been granted during the year, at a sum below the retail price of £539 7s. 2d. The schools thus assisted contained 72,763 scholars, of whom 45,782 were Scripture readers. 44 teachers' own libraries have also been granted, for which the teachers paid one-half the retail price, which would have been £150. The income of the benevolent fund has been £2,011 18s. 3d., which would thus have left a deficiency of £127 6s. 8d., had not the trustees of the Sunday-school Society requested the committee to accept a transfer of the remaining funds of that institution, amounting to £454. This transfer will enable the committee to carry on a measure which they have already commenced, the making grants of books to small, needy schools in various parts of the country, and which will speedily absorb the fund thus unexpectedly placed at their disposal. The operations of the training class have been continued regularly during the year; and Mr. Hassell has delivered a course of educational lectures. An additional panorama has been painted, and with the previously existing ones has been in constant request. The model of the Tabernacle has also been occasionally exhibited. The last report contained a statement of the number of schools, teachers, and scholars within the metropolitan district. That return had been prepared with great labour and care, and is believed to be substantially correct. The result is that the Sunday scholars of the metropolis do not amount to 200,000, or 1 in 15 of the population, while in some parts of the country 1 in 5 of the population are Sunday scholars; or to put the case in another form, two-thirds of the youthful population of London are destitute of the advantages which Sunday-school instruction has been found to yield."

4. The Wesleyan Foreign Missionary Society:—

On Monday, May 4th, the annual meeting of this society was held in Exeter Hall. Jas. Heald, Esq., one of the General Treasurers, presided. The hall was crowded. The proceedings were commenced by the singing of the hymn commencing—given out by the Rev. Dr. Hoole, who then read a portion of the third chapter of St. John. The Rev. W. L. Thornton engaged in prayer.

"Eternal Lord of earth and sky,"

The Chairman said—I cannot look on the organization of this society, and of other kindred societies, but as means which God has been pleased to appoint by which the hosts of his Israel shall unfurl the standard of truth; and in every direction, in every form, and in every opening that presents itself, to endeavour to circulate throughout the earth the glorious tidings of the blessed Gospel of our salvation. It seems to me, the present diversified operations and organization of the Christian Churches are in the order of Providence, and I am not quite sure that we are not fulfilling our duties more efficiently, and securing the advancement and enlargement of Christ's kingdom on the earth, far more certainly, extensively, and manifestly, from year to year, by these organizations than could be accomplished by individual exertion. The great object which Christian Churches have in view is an object common to all—the enlargement and extension of the visible kingdom as well as the spiritual reign of our Lord and Saviour. I co-operate as a Wesleyan Methodist with the Wesleyan Missionary Society, as representing to-day the great body of Wesleyan Methodists throughout the world, for I do not wish to lose sight, my friends, of the fact that we are, to a great extent, a representative assembly. You are all the avowed and attached friends, and, I believe, most, if not all, of you now present are supporters of the Wesleyan Missionary Society's funds. Well, what have we to depend upon in the form and character of funds, but such contributions as are presented by willing hands as the expression of devout, earnest, and attached hearts. I look upon it as the special glory of these societies that they furnish us, on the one hand, with an indication how far these Christian objects are held in proper estimation by our friends throughout this country, and throughout the world. But when I turn to our own connexion and our own society, I ever remember, as I wish to do, becomingly and humbly, that we are but a people of yesterday; that we have not been gathered together out of the world's mighty and noble. No princely revenues are poured into our treasury. We are the fruit of the Gospel ministration, and the blessing of the Divine Spirit attending it; we have been called and raised up to be a people who were not a people, and called beloved who were not beloved; and we are gathered together as a part of the spoils which have been won by the Cross of Christ to Him who died upon that Cross. And what are the returns that we are prepared to present as a gratitude offering; as proofs that we have not believed in vain? Well, I look for such evidences, and I find it in undoubted and growing attachment to, and fervent love of, the people to this cause. Touch it! Damage it by any means whatever, and we should see the feeling of the Wesleyan Connexion displaying itself in the most unmistakable manner. I maintain it is the most popular of our institutions which contains the elements of all; it gives work to every agency created by the operations and successes of Wesleyan Methodism. The streams continue to flow, we scarce know how, into the treasury of the Lord, and marvellous it is that while we have just passed through a year of unprecedented privation and distress throughout the manufacturing districts, your secretary will have the pleasure of reporting to-day that God has taken care to provide by one means or another that the funds of the society shall not be diminished, and that there shall still continue (and I take it as a token of good for the future) to be supplies for his servants while they are prosecuting this work of faith and labour of love. While they are not forgetting the divine injunction, "Be ye, therefore, steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord;" it shall be proved to them, that such work "shall not be in vain in the Lord." I am struck every time I come to London to see the change which takes place in the ranks of the Society's friends; but my comfort is this, that our work is as verdant as ever, and as full of promise. Spring in every direction seems to bloom upon it; and God is vouchsafing us, at the same time, the joy of harvest; we are gathering fruit as we go on sowing; and we shall go on, I trust, in harmony with the prayer to which we have listened, and under which the hearts of this assembly seemed melted and united together. We are anticipating scenes of brighter glory and of nobler triumphs until the world shall ring with halleluhs: "Hallelujah, the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!"

The Rev. Dr. Hoole read the Financial Statement and General Summary, from which we extract the following:—

POETRY.—OVER THE RIVER.

OVER the River, they beckon to me,
Loved ones who've crossed to the further side,
The gleam of their snowy robes I see,
But their voices are lost in the dashing tide.
There's one with her hair of shining gold,
And eyes the reflection of heaven's own blue,
She crossed in the twilight grey and cold,
And the pale mist hid her from mortal view.
We saw not the angels who met her there,
The gates of the city we could not see;
Over the River, Over the River,
My mother stands waiting to welcome me.

Over the River, the boatman pale,
Carried another the household stay,
His silver locks, waved in the gentle gale,
And dearest father was borne away;
He laid down the staff, and waved his hands,
And fearlessly entered the phantom bark,
We felt it glide from the silver sands,
And all our sunshine grew strangely dark.
We know he is safe on the further side,
Where all the ransomed and angels be,
Over the River, the mystic river,
My honoured parents are waiting for me.

For none return from those quiet shores,
Who cross with the boatman cold and pale,
We hear the dip of the golden oars,
And catch a gleam of the swelling sail.
And lo! they have pass'd from our yearning hearts,
They've cross'd the stream, and are gone for aye,
We may not sunder the veil apart
That hides from our vision the break of day.
We only know that their barks no more
May sail with us o'er life's stormy sea,
Yet somewhere I know on the unseen shore,
They watch, and beckon, and wait for me.

And I sit and think when the sunset and gold,
Is flushing river and hill and shore,
I shall one day stand by the water cold,
And list for the sound of the boatman's oar.
I shall watch for a gleam of the flapping sail,
I shall hear the boat as it gains the strand,
I shall pass from sight with the boatman pale,
To the happy shores of the better land.
I shall know the loved who have gone before,
And joyfully sweet shall the meeting be,
When over the River, the peaceful river,
The angel of death shall carry me.—Sent by S. SMITH.

BIOGRAPHY.

MEMOIR OF MR. ISAAC BAKEWELL.

ISAAC BAKEWELL was born at Lane End, now Longton, in Staffordshire, August 15th, 1807. From early life he was the subject of Divine and gracious impressions, which, it would seem, preserved him from those acts of flagrant immorality which blight the hopes and ruin the character of too many young persons.

At the age of fifteen, he removed with his parents to Oldham, Lancashire, where for some time he attended a Sabbath-school in connection with the Established Church. About this time a very sad event took place, which made a deep impression on his youthful mind. One evening his brother Joseph, while in the act of ascending a coal pit, after his day's work was done, was wound over the beam, and killed on the spot. This painful bereavement led Isaac to reflect more deeply on the shortness and uncertainty of human life, the length and solemnity of eternity, and the necessity for that change of heart, without which no man shall see the Lord. But in the buoyancy of youth, these impressions gradually wore off, until one Sabbath, whilst standing in the street, his attention was arrested by the lively singing of the Primitive Methodists, who were at the time missioning this town. Our departed brother was induced to follow them to the chapel, where, under a sermon preached by the late Rev. John Garner, he was led more clearly to discover the heinous nature and dreadful consequences of sin, to see and to feel that in heart and in life, by thought, by word, and by deed, he had broken God's holy law, incurred his displeasure, and become liable to the sentence of eternal death. Nor was this conviction a mere evanescent feeling: it did not pass away "like the morning cloud or the early dew;" it was a thorough conviction, a godly sorrow for sin, leading him to bow in humble contrition at the footstool of mercy, and to seek forgiveness through the merits of a crucified Redeemer; and this priceless blessing he did not seek in vain.

Immediately after experiencing this change, he united with the people, who, under God, had been the means of his salvation, and he was soon called upon to use the talent he possessed for the good of others. In the choice which God makes of the agents to be employed in his work, the truth of the sentiment is fully illustrated, that—

“He draws from human littleness
His grandeur and renown.”

When, therefore, “the Lord sets apart him that is godly for himself,” it becomes the duty of his church to call forth the talent of such, however humble it may be. In harmony with these views, brother Bakewell was appointed to the important office of class-leader, in the Primitive Methodist Society, which office he sustained with great credit for a period of thirty-one years. The manner in which his unpretending efforts in this department of Christian labour were prized, especially by those over whom he was placed, fully attests that he did not run in vain, nor spend his strength for naught.

As a leader in the society at Lees Road, he stood high in the estimation of his brethren, the members of his own classes, and the society at large. He was very punctual in his attendance, and cherished a lively and warm affection for those placed under his care. Anxiously did he watch over their spiritual interests, and frequently and fervently did he pray that they might be kept till the day of final redemption. On his deathbed, when one of his members asked him what he should say to his class-mates on the following Sunday, he said, “Tell them that it always made me ill when they neglected their class.”

As a Christian, we do not hesitate to say that his piety was most exemplary. He seemed to have imbibed much of the meekness and gentleness of his Divine Master, and to carry the fragrance of religion with him wherever he went: even ungodly persons, who had known him for years, were heard to say, after he was gone, “Well, Isaac Bakewell was a good man.” Surely no higher eulogium can be pronounced upon a frail, erring mortal than this. Some men are renowned for their brilliant genius and their lofty attainments in knowledge; others for their heroic deeds on the battle-field; but our departed friend was admired for his piety—he was a Christian, which is “the highest style of man.”

His death, which was somewhat sudden and unexpected, was peaceful and triumphant. About a fortnight before his departure, he attended the funeral of the late Mrs. Ashworth, one of our Lees Road members, who I am happy to say died in the Lord. The same evening, after his return from the funeral, he complained of being ill; the day after he was confined to his bed. On the following day, feeling rather better, he got up, and went to see after some work at the mill where he was employed. But his work on earth was done; his heavenly Master had sent a messenger to call his servant home, to the higher and more delightful employments of the paradise above. The day after his return from the mill found him again in bed, suffering from inflammation, and in spite of all that medical skill could do, he gradually sank.

During his brief illness, he was visited several times by the Revs. J. Garner, J. Travis, and the writer; and we can bear testimony to the fact, that the religion which he professed in life did not fail him in death. Resting upon Christ he could say, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil." On one occasion, his wife coming into the room, he said, "Oh, Mary, don't put me off;" she said, "Hast thou had a glimpse, Isaac?" The dying man replied, "I have got what I wanted;" and hearing that some of his class-members were in another room, he said, "Tell them to sing,

'Praise God from whom all blessings flow,' &c.

I can set the tune; the Lord has given me a new voice." To his weeping sister he said, "Your loss will be my infinite gain. I shall soon get my reward; my mansion is prepared, and I am going to receive it. O the value of religion now." A short while before he breathed his last, he exclaimed, "I see now what I never saw before; I see religion from beginning to end: 'all things work together for good to them that love God.'" Thus did this good man die, on November 15th, 1862, in the fifty-sixth year of his age, having been a member thirty-three years, and a class-leader thirty-one. May his widow, the reader, and the writer meet him in heaven.

JOHN DUMBELL.

[Little did we think when last we saw the cheerful face of our dear brother, that that was the last time we should see him on earth. But we shall see him before the throne. Isaac Bakewell was, we believe, one of the best men we ever knew. We were much shocked by the news of his decease; but the Lord does all things well. May his bereaved widow have grace given her according to her day. And may the many who loved our dear brother on earth all meet him in heaven.—Ed.]

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN JONES.

JOHN JONES was born at Oakley, Bedford circuit. His parents being members of the Baptist church at Stevington, he was early taught the way to the house of God. He there received impressions which were never erased from his mind. In the year 1850 he became a scholar in the Primitive Methodist Sabbath-school at Oakley, in which his behaviour was always good. He remained a scholar four years. His father, being anxious that he should be taught the same doctrines which he believed took him from our school to the Baptist school at Stevington; but his preference for his old school was strong and manifest, and as soon as he had reached the age when he was at liberty to choose for himself, he returned to the Primitive Methodist chapel to listen to the truths therein taught. There the Spirit of God wrought with the word preached, and he was led to cry for mercy: he believed in Christ, was made happy in a pardoning God, and remained so until his decease. He soon became a teacher in the Sabbath-school, and there laboured with zeal to instil into the hearts of the children the word of God, and to show them the necessity of salvation through Christ Jesus.

The quarter-day board thought it saw in him capabilities for preaching the Gospel, and he was put on the plan to take appointments; but he did not labour long, for disease began to prey upon him. He therefore requested the quarter-day to remove his name from the plan, which with great reluctance was done. For more than twelve months he had to struggle with pain, nine months of which time he was confined to his home. But he murmured not, nor charged the Lord foolishly. The power of religion manifested itself in the calmness of his manner and in the words that he spoke: he even thanked God for affliction. I visited him in his affliction, and we talked of soul matters and of his prospects for another world; and he could say, "My title's clear; I have no doubt about going to heaven, nor do I wish to get well, only that I might labour in the school, or preach the Gospel again."

As his end drew nigh, his hopes brightened. The children of his class visited him in his room to take their farewell of him. Before he left the rough sea of life he had a sweet calm, during which he saw the glories of heaven. He remained two hours in this state; his pains being over, he said, "If this is dying, it is nothing to die!" He also said, "I can see a light; O that beautiful light!" and shouted, "Come, Lord Jesus, and shine forth more brightly." With his father's hand in his, he said, "Don't think that you have a son in the pit, for I am going to be with Jesus for ever and ever." He ceased to talk, and soon ceased to breathe, on the 18th of September, 1862, aged twenty-two years. He was carried to his last resting-place amid great sorrow, the teachers and children of the school walking to the grave. On the road we sang that solemn hymn, "Farewell, dear friend, a long farewell," &c.

THOMAS HULATT.

MEMOIR OF MR. NATHAN TAYLOR.

NATHAN TAYLOR was born at Spon Lane, in the West Bromwich circuit, on December 27th, 1831, and died at the same place on November 4th, 1862. It is pleasing to remark that our departed brother was brought to God while young. I find recorded in his diary the following statement:—"Joseph and Elizabeth Taylor were my parents. My father and mother had eleven children, and of the seven that were reared I was the fourth son. My mother was a woman of sterling piety, and trained up her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Among the earliest things I can remember was her constant, earnest prayer for the conversion of all her family. I recollect her hands being often placed on my head, while her prayer ascended up to God with all the fervency her soul could feel, imploring the Angel that redeemed me to bless the lad; and the impressions I then had I have never lost." Nathan was never known to launch out into open sin, but from his earliest childhood the fear of God was before his eyes. He was brought to God by the agency of the Wesleyans, when eleven years of age. He attended some revival services at Wesley Chapel, West Bromwich; and at the evening service the power of God was wonderfully displayed in the conversion of about twenty youths, among whom was our dear brother. Rejoicing now in the liberty of the children of God, and feeling assured his sins were all forgiven, he could sing,—

"Before the throne my Surety stands,
My name is written on his hands."

He never lost the evidence of his acceptance with God; but amid all life's sorrows and joys he could say, "For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

He continued with the Wesleyans up to the year 1856, when owing to some convictions in his mind as to certain things connected with church government, &c., he thought he should be more happy and useful elsewhere. He joined our people at the Lyng, where he continued an honour to the cause of God till death removed him from earth to heaven. During the six years he met at Lyng he sustained the following offices—class-leader, Sabbath-school teacher, society steward, and a member of the circuit committee; and the duties of one and all he honourably and faithfully discharged.

As a Christian, he was a good man. Brother John Barton says, "I was converted to God the same night as our departed brother, and have been very intimately acquainted with him ever since. I never knew him swerve from the truth, and never heard him engage in light, unprofitable conversation. He always manifested the felt conviction, 'Thou God seest me.' I believe he lived in the high enjoyment of entire sanctification." There was no noise or bustle with brother Taylor; but his experience was deep: Christ lived in him the hope of glory.

As a leader, he was beloved by all his members, whose constant happiness and good he ever perseveringly sought to promote. Faithfully discharging his duties, he would warn, rebuke, and comfort them in God. A short time before his death, he said, "Tell all my members to live near to God, and to meet me in heaven."

As a teacher, he was regular and constant, always at his post; and in this department of labour was made very useful. He was a lover of all the means of grace; you would not see Nathan's place empty. The language of his heart was, "I had rather be a doorkeeper," &c. He not only attended the house of God, but to the utmost of his ability supported the same. The affliction which terminated his useful life was as peculiar as it was painful. The family ascribe its origin (humanly speaking) to a severe cold which he took when returning from the circuit committee on the damp evening of October 6th. The cold brought on a rheumatic complaint, to which he was rather subject; but from this he rallied, and got out as far as West Bromwich on November 1st. But on his return home cold fastened upon him a second time, which brought on congestion of the lungs, which, accompanied by nervous debility, reduced him to extreme weakness and helplessness, from which, notwithstanding the medical skill brought to bear upon his case, he never rallied. From Lord's-day, October 26th, to November 4th, his sufferings were most extreme. But although given up by his medical attendant, he did not think his affliction would terminate in death, until November 3rd, when he fully resigned himself to God. At this season of extreme weakness, the devil made a severe attack upon him, and his faith in God was powerfully tested.

It appears that years ago, our brother had some powerful convictions about preaching; but being doubtful whether it was right or not for him to preach, he having a stammering in his speech, he did not do so. And now the enemy wanted to try a last effort, by telling him he had not done what he ought to have done; and to use his own words, he said, "Well, if I have not preached Christ in the pulpit, God knows why I have not done so; but I have preached him in my life." He then requested the enemy to bring up all he could, and put it in one scale, and, said he, "I will bring the blood of Christ, and put it in the other, for I know I have done but little:—

" 'I nothing have, I nothing am,
My hope is in the bleeding Lamb.' "

He also called upon God, and said, "Lord, thou knowest that from the time I gave my heart to thee till now, I have never wickedly departed from thee." But the cloud now broke, and during the remainder of his stay on earth not a cloud arose on his mind. In an overwhelming ecstasy he exclaimed, "I see heaven open; I have not to go there to know what it is—God has showed me—O what sights, what sounds, and old friends!"

A short time before his death he shouted out and said, "I am safe! I am safe!" calling upon all that were about him to sing his favourite hymn, in which he himself engaged with all his soul—

" There is a land of pure delight,
Where saints immortal reign."

He continued to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, until Tuesday, November 4th, when about five o'clock his happy spirit escaped to the mansions of light, to be lodged in the Eden above. Devout men carried him to the grave, and a very large concourse of the members, both of our own and other churches, met to pay their last tribute to departed worth.

On Sunday night, December 21st, the writer improved his death at Lyng Chapel to an overflowing and deeply affected congregation, when we trust some lasting good was done. In his removal the Church has lost one of her best young men, both as a Christian and a supporter. He has left a widowed mother, four brothers, and two sisters to mourn his loss. May they and we meet him in heaven.

MAURICE NICHOLAS.

MEMOIR OF MR. THOMAS MATHER.

THOMAS MATHER was born at Alnwick, Northumberland, June 1st, 1813. His parents being members of the Presbyterian Church of that town, he was early taught the rudiments of Christianity, and trained to a regular attendance at the house of the Lord. At twelve years of age he had to leave home to serve with a gentleman at Bamborough. Subsequently he served an apprenticeship to a joiner, at the close of which he came to reside at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where he formed an acquaintance with certain persons who were ultra-liberal in politics and sceptical in religion; and, to some extent, he unhappily proved the truth of the apostle's words, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." He did not, however, wholly cast off the fear of God, or become the victim of "presumptuous sins."

Some years after his marriage and removal to Bedlington, a domestic bereavement was rendered the means of awakening him to serious thoughts about his soul, and to a distressing conviction of his guilty estrangement from God. In this miserable state of mind he remained for a considerable period. About ten years ago he was induced to attend some revival services, which were being held at Bedlington by the Rev. J. H. Rutherford, at which he found peace; soon after which he began to attend the preaching of the Primitive Methodists, and, entering more fully into the liberty of the children of God, he united with the society. In the year 1855 the writer became acquainted with brother Mather; and, finding him anxious for "instruction in righteousness," had the happiness of being serviceable to him, and of witnessing his advancement in the knowledge and love of God.

On his removal a second time to Newcastle, having no acquaintance with either the ministers or the members of the Primitives, and being of a retiring disposition, he associated himself with a Church to which he was, in some degree, favourably known. But after a while he found his way to William Street Chapel, Arthur's Hill; and became, at length, one of the first and most efficient teachers of a new Sunday-school, a branch from William Street in a neglected neighbourhood, which has been, and still is, very prosperous. His good sense, general information, scriptural knowledge, "meekness of wisdom," humble kindness, and quiet, regular earnestness, qualified him above many for Sabbath-school work. He could always be depended upon both in regard to attendance and everything that he took in hand, for his heart was in the work. It scarcely need be said that he was much beloved by the children, and warmly respected by their parents and by his fellow teachers. A select class of senior female scholars was formed some time ago, of which he was appointed the leader, in addition to his ordinary Sunday-school duties. The class clave to him as to an affectionate father. He was, also, the assistant leader of one of the classes of the society at Derby Street, was very useful in the prayer-meetings, and occasionally addressed the congregation, with good effect, in the absence of the appointed preacher. His liberality in supporting the cause is deserving of remembrance. It was not necessary to ask him for money when anything was to be done requiring it. He sought to do good. Moreover, he had a "good report of them that are without," and was respected by his observers while attending to the business of his worldly calling.

But he was suddenly called away from all his friends and useful occupations. On the 5th of November, 1862, while at his work at Hebbron, he came in contact with the crane, and fell twenty feet, causing a concussion of the brain, which, fifteen days after, issued in his death at the Newcastle Infirmary. During nearly the whole of that period of suffering he was delirious; but he talked almost incessantly about the spiritual affairs of the Church and of the Sabbath-school, imagining himself to be among his Christian companions and the dear children of his charge, thus unmistakably showing the state of his heart. "Blessed is that servant whom his lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." May those he has left emulate his example, and in due time overtake him in glory.

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN TANNER.

"How blest the righteous when he dies!
 When sinks the weary soul to rest:
 How mildly beam his closing eyes!
 How gently heaves th' expiring breast!"

SUCH was the dying experience of the subject of this sketch, the late JOHN TANNER, of Southampton, who exchanged mortality for eternal life, November 11th, 1862. He was born at East End, near Lymington, October 15th, 1814, but was soon deprived by death of his mother. He was then placed under the guardianship of his grandmother; but at the age of twelve years he had lost both his father and grandmother, who had gone the way of all flesh. He was then thrown upon the wide, wide world, without a knowledge of God as his Father or Friend; and in this darkness and ignorance he remained till about the year 1841, when he was arrested in his downward course of sin and death by the mighty power of God. And such were the discoveries of his depravity and sin which were made to him, and so boisterous were the waves of guilt that swept across his soul, that he was nearly dashed upon the dark rocks of despair; and in this state of mind he continued for some time, till under the ministry of the late Rev. J. Crabb he was led to Christ, and by faith in his blood he realized salvation from the guilt, the power, the love, and the practice of sin. And so thorough was the change wrought within him, that he felt "old things had passed away, and all things had become new."

He remained unconnected with any section of Christ's Church till 1844, when he, with his wife, joined the Wesleyan Methodists at Southampton, and continued a faithful member till 1855, when for reasons best known to himself he withdrew, and cast in his lot with our society—a step he never regretted. He was often heard to express his thankfulness to God for leading him to join us. Being anxious to do good, and possessing superior natural abilities for teaching, and a large fund of acquired knowledge of men and things, especially of the Holy Scriptures, with genuine piety, he was soon requested to occupy a place on the plan; and after due consideration he consented, and became an acceptable and useful local preacher. Ever receiving the work given him as from the Lord, he shunned not to declare "the whole counsel of God." Hence in the pulpit he was lively, earnest, faithful, and original; and though his congregation could not always follow him in all his train, of thoughts and arguments, yet he was generally well received, and when planned the people could depend on him. At the death of the late W. Walker, he was prevailed on to become the leader of his class, which office he filled to the entire satisfaction of those placed under his care.

But while he felt and laboured for the salvation of those advanced in life, he was deeply interested in the well-being of the young: he was therefore, one of our most efficient and useful Sabbath-school teachers, having the charge of the select class of youths; and such were his stores of knowledge, his aptness to teach, and his love for those he taught, that he secured to the school the most of his scholars till they were grown up young men; and some of his class helped to carry his mortal remains to their last resting-place.

His removal from us was rather sudden and unexpected, although his health had failed of late. His sufferings were great during his last illness, the nature of his disease being such as to render lying down impossible, and talking difficult and dangerous; but he bore all without murmuring, exclaiming, "The will of God be done." I visited him several times, and ever found him resting by faith, without a doubt, on Christ as the Rock of his salvation; and with all the emphasis he could command, he said to me, "I am safe! I am safe!" At another time he said to those who were with him, "It is my Father's good pleasure to give me the kingdom ;” and in this frame of mind he continued till his fettered soul was loosed from its clay tenement to dwell in the “house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.” His earthly remains were followed to the grave by a large number of friends, including preachers, leaders, members, Sabbath-school teachers, and scholars. May they all, with his wife and each member of the family, meet him in heaven. Amen.

MEMOIR OF MR. FRANCIS HUMPAGE.

FRANCIS HUMPAGE was born at Darlaston in 1783. Before his conversion to God he was exceedingly ignorant, and he gave himself up to all kinds of sports and worldly amusements, greedily pursued a sinful course of life, and remained careless about eternity and its realities. It was while the Wesleyans were singing over one of their deceased members, that conviction laid hold on him. While he listened to them, death and the magnitude of its consequences made an effectual impression upon his mind. He felt that he had sinned against God, and exposed himself to Divine vengeance. His heart was filled with sincere sorrow ; he groaned beneath the burden of his guilt, and earnestly sought salvation. His grief on account of sin was excessive ; he could find no rest either night or day : it was even thought by many that his reason was dethroned, and he had become insane. However he heard of a prayer-meeting to be held at Wednesbury, and at the time appointed he went there. Severe was his mental struggle ; but he believed with his heart unto righteousness ; and God turned his-mourning into rejoicing. This was a matter that created no small stir among his former companions in vice, among whom he was the ringleader. So great was the change wrought in him, many of them believed that there was something in religion worth seeking ; but others said he would soon give it up. But for nearly fifty years he held on his Christian course, and loved and feared God above many. And as far as we know he kept his Christian character unspotted from the world.

On the sixty-fourth page of the history of our beloved Connexion, we find him mentioned as meeting with our society in Darlaston, on the introduction of Primitive Methodism into the mining district of South Staffordshire. He also became a local preacher, and laboured extensively to raise and establish societies in the surrounding country. Being strong in constitution, he would frequently travel forty miles a day to carry the word of life to the destitute, enduring hunger and opposition ; for the love of God cheered and supported him in all his exertions. He was a man of very plain manners, but all who knew him considered him sincere in his intentions and pure in his motives. This made up for the bluntness of his address. His preaching was plain and earnest ; he had a good knowledge of the plan of salvation, and could properly direct heavy laden sinners to Christ. He also was mighty in prayer; he had power with God, and prevailed. God made him the honoured means of doing much good.

For a few of the last years of his life he was partially blind, which was a great affliction to him, but he bore it without murmuring. He frequently reverted to bygone days, and to those good men who laboured with him in the early days of the Connexion, who were dead and gone to their reward, but with whom he hoped to be reunited in heaven. He was powerfully supported by Divine help in the affliction that terminated his life. When his physician intimated that his end was near he was not dismayed, but he told him he should go to heaven, and spoke with the utmost confidence of the faithfulness of God. On the 14th of November, 1862, he departed this life, aged seventy-nine years. So joyful was his prospect, that he exclaimed, "A bright angel is come from heaven to clothe me with white robes for ever." His end was peace.

MEMOIR OF MR. BENJAMIN WILKES.

BENJAMIN WILKES was born at Darlaston in the year 1811, and like the generality of men he lived according to the course of this world, deceived by sin and pursuing iniquity; but not without remorse of conscience and frequent alarm. In his twenty-fifth year, through the labours of the Wesleyans, he was brought to feel himself as a lost sinner, and burdened with guilt he earnestly sought and found redemption in the blood of Jesus, and could sweetly sing—

"His blood can make the foulest clean;
His blood avails for me."

He at once joined the Wesleyan society, and continued a member for about thirteen years. About the end of this time he felt a very strong desire that a new chapel should be erected nearer to his residence; but very strong objections were raised to this, and our people at the same time being engaged in building a chapel at Gun Village (which was much nearer his home), he comfortably withdrew, and joined us. And he continued a member until death removed him from the Church on earth to mingle his song with that of the ransomed millions before the throne.

For several years past our brother suffered much from asthma and rheumatism, which frequently laid him aside for weeks and months at a time. In such attacks many expected he would never survive; but contrary to his own and his friends' expectation, he rallied again and again. However, at last dropsy set in as a result of his other complaints, and soon rendered him extremely weak and helpless. During his affliction he was frequently visited by the writer and several ministers and friends, who always found him trusting in his God, without uttering one word of murmuring. His affliction was painful, but he said, "I'll bear it all, because he bore the cross for me. I shall soon see him as he is ; if this earthly house fails, I've a better yonder. Oh, to be there, to sing the song, to wear my crown, and see the King in his beauty. Bless God, I'm sure I shall. I have my title-deeds, and all is right." To visit our departed brother was indeed heaven on earth. Being all right, and every day expecting his change, on October 15th, 1862, he passed through death triumphant home, and is now "far from diseases and decline."

I may just add, brother Wilkes was a good man. He enjoyed and exhibited in his daily walk and conversation real religion. As a class-leader he was loved by all his members. He loved the means of grace, and when well would never miss any of the services ; we have seen him there at great risk. He liberally supported the house of God, and when Zion prospered, his soul rejoiced. As a husband and parent, he was kind : he felt a great desire to see all his family converted ; but though that was not seen on earth, God will doubtless answer the many prayers he offered up, and we trust all the family will meet him in heaven.

In his removal the Church has lost a good supporter, but our loss is his gain. He has left a wife, three sons, three daughters, and a mother, also many friends, to mourn his loss. May they all be saved on earth, and meet him finally in heaven. The writer improved his death at Gun Village, on November 16th, to a very large and respectable congregation, when many lasting impressions, we trust, were made.

MEMOIR OF MR. CORNELIUS SPITTLE.

CORNELIUS SPITTLE, the son of John and Mabel Spittle, was born at Lye Waste, August 2nd, 1824. His parents were ungodly people, and lived after the course of this world ; consequently Cornelius was brought up without the fear of God before his eyes, and with an unrestricted license to follow the corrupt propensities of his carnal nature. After some years, his mother was brought under Divine impressions, and obtained salvation amongst our people, and joined the society, of which she has been a member up to the present. The conversion of his mother occasioned a great change in their family affairs. The baking and washing, which were usually done on a Sabbath, were now done on other days, while the house on Sunday presented a clean and comfortable appearance. His mother now on a Sabbath repaired to the sanctuary, to mingle in the holy and happy services of the day. These things produced an influence upon the mind of Cornelius, and led him to think there was something good in religion : yet he still pursued the downward path. At times when he returned home, after indulging in drink and at cards, his mother would speak to him, and her words were as briars and thorns in his flesh that he could not pluck out. But still he went on sinning, and consequently smarting, until the year 1849, when his feelings and convictions resulted in a resolution to alter his life and amend his doings.

He now joined the Sabbath-school, and became a teacher. Being naturally of a shy and timid disposition, he does not seem to have disclosed the feelings of his soul to any person who might have led him to salvation; nevertheless, privately he endeavoured to feel after God. Hence he would either retire to bed before his brother who slept with him, or he would stay up until all the family had gone to rest, that he might pray and wrestle with God in secret. Brother John Richards perceiving an alteration in his conduct, invited him to class; and he came and joined. But being so reserved, it was difficult to understand his real feelings, until one Sabbath when the late Squire Harvey was appointed to hold a lovefeast at Lye Waste; in opening the speaking Brother Harvey related his own experience and conversion, and as he told his thoughts and feelings while under repentance, Cornelius perceived a strong resemblance in them to his own; and surprised and astonished, he listened and wondered. As brother Harvey went on to tell how his light and faith increased until he came to Jesus and was made happy, Cornelius's mind followed him so closely in struggling for mercy, that he there and then got into liberty while brother Harvey was speaking, and I believe got up in that meeting and told his experience. When he left the meeting he was neither afraid nor ashamed to tell his friends what God had done for his soul. Now he openly took up the cross, and declared himself a determined follower of the Lamb. After some time, his general conduct, his prudence, and his piety pointed him out to his brethren as a fit and proper person to become the superintendent of the Sabbath-school. To this office he was appointed, and he sustained it for years with credit to himself and with great benefit to the school. It is right to state that on several occasions when the time came for electing officers for the school, and he was proposed to continue in his as superintendent, he refused to serve until some of his other brethren had shared the honour. But whether superintendent or teacher, the prosperity of the school for years, under the blessing of God, mainly depended upon his piety, wisdom, and labours. For several years he was secretary or steward to the trustees of the Lye Waste Chapel. For eight years he was assistant leader to brother B. Brown, to whom and to the class and society generally, he was a great blessing. In speaking to young members, he always urged the importance of the inward assurance of sins forgiven, and he was well qualified to lead them to Calvary, and to the Fountain for sin and uncleanness.

Among other things he was well adapted for visiting the sick and dying, and opening to them the plan of salvation. His attention to members who had neglected class or had otherwise become remiss, was great. In these works of faith and labours of love he was rendered a great blessing. He likewise possessed a peculiar talent for reconciling little differences that sprang up amongst the members or teachers. A child in temper and kind in language, the effect of his labours in this department was very great; while those labours won for him the general esteem of all. His path was sometimes made very painful to him by the wicked and drunken conduct of his father. About nine years ago his father broke up their home, sold the furniture, and spent the money. Cornelius then took a house, bought goods, and made a home for himself and his infirm mother, whom he supported. But even then the conduct of his father was sometimes very persecuting and painful; but Cornelius had decided for God, and during the storm he sheltered beneath the cross. Although of a very humble and teachable spirit, and a very shy and timid natural disposition, yet in the cause of his God he was as firm as a rock and as bold as a lion; here his natural timidity vanished, and his brow was as brass and his forehead as flint.

Some four years ago his health sensibly gave way, and for the last two years of his life he was completely incapacitated from following his labour, and his constitution and strength gradually sank. But his religion lived and blossomed, and brought forth in its season. His circumstances at times were very trying, but he never murmured. The close of his life was not marked with particular ecstasy of feeling, but with a calm and unshaken faith in God. The last day he lived he spoke little, but seemed inclined to sleep, and about nine o'clock on Sunday night, November 16th, 1862, he fell asleep in Jesus. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

MEMOIR OF MR. THOMAS COPE.

THOMAS COPE, of Woore, Burland circuit, was the son of William and Elizabeth Cope, and was born at Onnely, near Newcastle, Staffordshire, in the year of our Lord 1819. Thomas's early life was not marred by many of the extreme follies of youth; but in the spring of his days he attended the house of God. Nevertheless though moral in his conduct, he subsequently saw and felt the necessity of a change of heart. One Sabbath in the year 1840, while sitting under a sermon preached by Miss Woodhouse, at the opening services of Onnely Chapel, conviction for sin deeply impressed his mind, and from that time he gave his heart unreservedly to God, and shortly afterwards joined the society. The brethren soon ascertained that he was possessed of respectable mental powers, and was adapted for usefulness, and urged him to try to preach. He was then put on the preachers' plan, and laboured in that post until the year 1842. Subsequently he removed to Woore, in the Burland circuit, where he sustained the important offices of class-leader and local preacher for twenty years. Long and numerous were his journeys, especially in the early years of his labours, but due attention to his appointments distinguished him all through life. If he was well people were never in doubt about his attendance; and several souls under his preaching were converted to God. He was acceptable in every place in the circuit. He was an industrious man; he knew that drowsiness would clothe a man with rags, and that he who provides not for those of his own house denies the faith, and is worse than an infidel; he knew that God requires that all his servants should be diligent and active in that which is good, "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." And he employed his time and gifts for his Master's glory.

Thomas Cope lived at home. Some men can show off at a distance, but their influence wanes considerably as they near home. Not so in his case: he was the pattern of the village where he lived, and was regarded as a father in the place. No matter how dark the night, inclement the weather, or untimely the hour, he was at the call of his neighbours, and would say, the King's business demands haste. And in the sick chamber not a few broken-hearted sinners has he pointed to the cross, and not a few saints has he cheered while fighting life's last battle. His Christian character was unquestionable, being compatible with the principles of the New Testament. He was kind and courteous in his manner, humble in his disposition, and evangelical in his views. He was a faithful husband and an affectionate father. His instructions and prayers will be long remembered by those he has left behind.

The testimony of the Rev. H. Wheeler is:—"I have no hesitation in saying that brother Cope was a good man; he was an unassuming Christian. Destitute of all parade, he laboured in an unobtrusive way to fulfil the work which God had given him to do; he had none of those superficial adornments so much admired and sought after by many, but he had what was preferable, the love of God shed abroad in his heart, of which he was enabled to give evidence in a consistent and a useful life. The light of his profession was not a painful glare, neither was it a feeble glimmer: it was a steady flame, waxing brighter as it shone; and now that the spark of life is quenched in death, I doubt not that our brother has a place amongst the luminaries of the glory land."

His affliction was short, but very severe; but he bore his sufferings with Christian patience and resignation; no murmur ever escaped his lips. On being asked the state of his mind, he said, "All is right; my acceptance is clear;" and he sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, on the 20th day of November, 1862. He has left a widow and three children, and a large circle of friends to mourn his loss. But he has experienced a blissful translation from ignorance to knowledge, from faith to sight, from hope to realization, from warfare to triumph, from weariness to rest, from sorrow to joy, from earth to heaven.

JAMES LAWTON.

MEMOIR OF MR. OWEN RAWLINGS.

OWEN RAWLINGS was born April 7th, 1842, and died at Bedford, November 23rd, 1862. He was endowed with good mental powers, made proficiency at school, and his youthful days gave promise of power in his maturer years. Unhappily, at a very early period of his life, he became conversant with the exciting literature of corrupting novels; and but for the arrest of conviction, aided by affliction, he would most probably have been added to the numerous list of interesting youth, of both sexes, who are consumed by the aboundings of this vile and trashy reading.

After his conversion, he burnt all the novels he possessed; and ever afterwards felt a perfect abhorrence of these enfeebling and deluding tales. The Bible and theological works now engrossed his whole attention, and his thoughtful mind grasped with great avidity some of the more profound of these, such as Butler's "Analogy," and kindred writings. Had his life and health permitted, other things being as they were, there is every reason to believe that he would have become a sound theologian and an able preacher of the word. Mentally and religiously he was a youth of great promise. He received his first religious impressions in the Baptist Sabbath-school, Bedford. His convictions were deepened and confirmed under the ministry of our missionaries, in the open air, and he found peace in believing while attending our services.

Having joined society, he soon became an acceptable and useful Sabbath-school teacher, and sustained the work well as long as the state of his health enabled him to attend, which, for some time before his death was only very occasionally. He was a valuable member of our youths' Bible class; and, when he could not leave his room, he desired that the class should meet there, that he might share the advantage of its devotion and instruction. The whole class and its conductor, Mr. John Panter, were more than willing to meet his views; they felt it to be a joy and a privilege to do so. His whole soul thirsted "for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord;" and while he drank deeply of "the water of life," the class found that "the river of living water" flowed freely out of his heart to theirs. He was a beautiful spiritual illustration of that Scripture, "there is that scattereth and yet increaseth," and one amongst many other witnesses, that the most useful member of a Bible class is that one who most devoutly and earnestly seeks his own personal profit, and not he who seeks to impress the class with a sense of his self-conceited superior intelligence. The latter has been the bane of many a Bible class; the former sort, I trust, in much arger numbers, have been as Owen Rawlings was,—a great blessing to their fellow-pupils.

He knew that his affliction must terminate in death ; and he was not without those painful exercises of mind which it may easily be conceived would be peculiar to an intelligent youth of his description, yet he bore that affliction, and those exercises, for four years or more, with Christian fortitude and submission ; and shortly before his death, when he was very low in the waters, he said, “ I count it all joy, that I may win Christ, and be found in him.”

After bearing ample testimony to the grace of God that was in him, he promised his friends, that, should he not be able to speak, he would wave his hand in token of his final triumph. He had lain for some twenty-four hours without making any communication to his attendants, when he lifted up his hand with all his remaining strength, and immediately upon this, and about half an hour before his departure, those present with him in the room were conscious of an unusual manifestation of the Divine presence, and observed that his countenance was quite lit up with a heavenly smile, which so affected a pious sister who was present, that she could not help smiling also, even in these solemn circumstances. Were not the beautiful thoughts of the poet then a realised fact ?

“Bright angels are from glory come,
They are round my bed, and in my room ;
They wait to waft my spirit home ;
All is well.”

Were the remarkable words of Pope in any degree expressive of the unutterable ecstasies of the departing spirit ?

“Lend, lend your wings, I mount ! I fly !
O ! Grave, where is thy victory ?
O ! Death, where is thy sting ?”

His father, who had been sorrowfully bowed down under the sufferings of his son, and who, after many nights of wearisome watching, had retired to rest, woke up at the same time, the subject of the same Divine manifestation ; and when the announcement of his son's death was made to him, he was thus prepared for it, and enabled to rejoice in it. Thus were the well-known lines of Young, amply verified, as they had been many times before, and will yet be again—

“The chamber where the good man meets his fate,
Is privileged beyond the common walks of virtuous life,
Quite on the verge of heaven.”

In conversation on the subject of improving his death, he remarked to us, that he should like it to be especially impressed upon the congregation, that, in the case of the believer, the dissolution of the body is not death ; that it is a change of clothing—2 Corinthians, v. 2, 3 ; a removal from one habitation to another—2 Corinthians, v. 1; a going to sleep—1 Thessalonians, iv. 13, 15; but not death. The words of the Redeemer to the mourning sisters at Bethany, John xi. 25, 26, seemed to be expressive of his enlightened views upon this solemn subject, and they were accordingly made the groundwork of a funeral sermon, December 7th, 1862; and the remarks made thereon were listened to by a large congregation in Hassett Street Chapel, with deep emotion and devout attention. His life was useful; his death was blessed; may this record of both be made a blessing. Amen.

EDWARD BISHOP.

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN HARRIS.

JOHN HARRIS departed this life at Poole Keynes, in the Cirencester Circuit, December 7th, 1862. He was brought to God through the agency of the Primitive Methodists, nearly thirty years ago; and for about twenty-six years he sustained the office of a local preacher. In this capacity he laboured assiduously, and to some extent, successfully, until within a comparatively short period of his decease. The truths which he delighted to make known to others, supported him during his affliction, and in the hour of death. The writer visited him a short time before he entered Jordan's swelling stream, and found him resting on the Rock of Ages, rejoicing in hope of future glory; and when death came he welcomed it with a smile of holy triumph, and thus passed away from earth to heaven. "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ."

J. FORD.

MEMOIR OF MR. ALFRED CLARKE GASKIN.

THE subject of this sketch was a native of Nottingham, and in early life united with our people in that town. He pursued the even tenor of his way when wars and tumult's waves ran high; and when large numbers of more advanced members were led away by a violent faction, he retained his youthful attachment to the people by whom he had been brought to God. After several years' consistent membership with the Society at Canaan Street, he joined the infant cause at Hockley, when that chapel was purchased from the Wesleyans.

In consequence of the badness of trade in Nottingham, Brother Gaskin removed to Lincoln, in the year 1840, and at once identified himself with our Portland Place interest. Primitive Methodism was far from popular in this aristocratic city at that period, but our deceased brother espoused it with all his heart, and nobly consecrated his talent and influence to its support and extension. During his twenty-two years' connexion with us in Lincoln, he successively and creditably sustained the offices of leader, Society steward, Circuit steward, Sunday school teacher and superintendent, trustee and chapel steward; and for some time he laboured as a local preacher, but an infirmity in his throat compelled him to decline public speaking.

His last affliction was severe and protracted ; slow in its advances, but certain in its aim. For ten successive months he was unable to perform labour's allotted task, but he was not confined to the bed of languishing until a few days previous to his death. In the last interview I had with him, he spoke fully and emphatically of the imperfections and shortcomings of the past, and with equal confidence and emotion of the perfection and glory of the future, summing up the whole in the declaration of the Apostle, that, as he had borne the image of the earthy, he should also bear the image of the heavenly. Early on Monday morning, December 15th, 1862, without a struggle or a sigh, he escaped to the mansions of light, in the forty-fifth year of his earthly sojourn.

The character of our departed brother may be summed up in the following brief remarks :—

1. He was an industrious man. From his early youth he had been inured to toil. When only four or five years of age, his father went to America, leaving him to fight the battles of life for himself ; and he fought them bravely, thereby procuring for himself an honourable status amongst the working classes of his country.

2. He was an honest man. Honest in deed, and word, and thoughts ! You always knew what he meant ! There was no disguise, or double-dealing about him. His straight-forwardness made him some enemies, for he possessed a little hastiness of spirit, and had not the happiest way of expressing himself when he could not see eye to eye with his brethren, but we all believed that he meant right, and charity prompts us to cast the mantle over his imperfections.

3. He was a religious man. We do not set him up as a model of religious perfection, for he had his failings, and he knew them—he lamented o'er them, and obtained forgiveness for them. As a member of the Christian church, he loved, supported, and attended her ordinances ; he rejoiced with her in prosperity, clung to her in adversity, and shared in her extensive labours. He was also religious at home. His children knew there were laws to be observed, and an authority to be revered, and they were daily summoned to the domestic altar, from whence ascended a father's earnest supplication to the throne of God. And God amply rewarded him, by converting his two sons in the days of their youth, one of whom is now engaged in our itinerancy, and the other is labouring acceptably with us as a local preacher in this the Lincoln circuit.

That each of these two sons, with their widowed mother, may meet their departed father in the land of pure delight, is the sincere prayer of

D I V I N I T Y .

THE PRODIGAL SON.

(Luke xvi., from 11 to the end).

A DISCOURSE BY THE REV. GEORGE WARNER, of Oxford.

THERE are persons who affect to reject the Bible's claim to Divine inspiration, because, as they say, it is a dull, dry, and unentertaining production. They profess their appreciation of the virtuous sentiments of our poets, without taking the trouble to ascertain that the poet's purest principles, his boldest figures, and most gorgeous images, are all borrowed from God's own book. There are many inimitable passages in this most blessed volume, and one is almost ready to think that the man must have let out his reason, blighted his affections, and sent his humanity away, whose heart remains unmoved by the clustering beauties brought together in the touching tale of the prodigal son. I need not read it through, all who have a Bible and can read, and have read anything in it, have read the parable of the prodigal son. Doubtless one design Christ had in view, in this parable, was to convince the grumbling Scribes and Pharisees, that they had no reason to murmur at his concern for "publicans and sinners." For, that "the common people heard him gladly," terribly affected their spiritual pride. Another design was to show the Jews that they need lose nothing, by his throwing wide the gates of the kingdom of heaven to the whole Gentile race. But the parable was given for us: it has a message and a meaning for us; it is verily "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." While it touches the finest springs of our nature, it most aptly applies to our spiritual condition; the sinner's character is here delineated, his madness and folly are at once made manifest. And oh! what a moving representation have we here of the abounding charity, which dwells in the infinite heart of our ever compassionate God. May it induce you to return to his beloved embrace, for Christ's sake. We purpose to notice the prodigal's wandering, return, and reception.

I. THE PRODIGAL'S WANDERING. He is a representative character, a representative of every unconverted sinner. His course was downward, and such is the course of all wanderers from God: they go down; down from bad to worse, and if God's Almighty arm prevent not, they will never stop till they reach the nethermost hell. His ruin commenced with—

His dissatisfaction with parental government. "Give me," said he, "the portion of goods that falleth to me." He was tired of home, although doubtless in the bosom of that family there was everything to engage his heart. But his father's counsel and prayers, and his mother's affection and tears seem to have lost their hold upon him. He desired the patrimony which custom allowed him, that he might be his own master, hold the reins himself, and follow the bent of his own vicious inclinations. There is many a prodigal who doesn't like parental government—who rejects the judicious counsel of a pious father, who is a grief to the soul of his praying mother. There are many more who feel dissatisfaction with the government of "our Father who is in heaven." God governs the world in infinite wisdom and love, but they don't like it. They don't like the restraint the Bible lays upon them; when it denounces their course, and says "the end of these things is death," they wish it were not so. Yet there is everything in submission to God's government which should delight the heart. There is a full pardon for all past offences; the Spirit's witness that the work is effected; a guarantee of all needful good while here, and a seat in heaven when the toils of life are past. And the backslider here knew that, and yet he was dissatisfied with it. Solomon says, "Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes." "Ah!" you say, "that's the advice for me; I shall take that." Stop a minute: he's speaking in irony; hear the other part of it, "but know thou"—don't forget that—"for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." You don't like that; then "thou art the man"—the prodigal. May God convince you of it. His ruin was accelerated by—

His emigration. "He gathered all together, took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living." The famine came, want pinched him, and it is significantly said, "No man gave to him." How true to life! How many have seen themselves in this glass. If a man were to come to this city, with ten thousand pounds to spend, and put up at an inn, he would have plenty of blood-suckers round him, who would drink his health, toast him in a bumper, and sing, "He's a jolly good fellow," while the money lasted; but when it was gone, how then? Many a one in some such circumstances has found that "no man gave to him." In a prodigal course, I have seen beauty fade, and the body literally rot through sin, and there has been no old companion to give a crust, or offer a prayer. Methodist preachers might pray, and a broken-hearted mother was left to share her hard-earned crust. Not long since, in London, a polished scoundrel, called a gentleman, seduced one of our beautiful but frail sisters; they ran a brief, glittering, erratic course of sin; and then he threw her on the stream, and she died of starvation, and a broken heart, at the gates of a union workhouse. There is no true love among the wicked. But thou art the prodigal; you have taken your portion of goods—that wondrous body, and still more wondrous mind—and you have wasted them in sin and Satan's service. I don't know whether famine days are come yet, but they will come. Just now, on the bed of death, with a mis-spent life behind, and the judgment-day before, there will be a famine in the land—a famine in thy soul—a want of forgiveness, peace, God's favour; and to which of your companions will you turn? Oh! that you would now return to your Father's house. His next step was—

His engagement with the foreigner. “He joined himself to a citizen of that country, and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.” Here he had servitude the most galling; employment the most complete drudgery, and most degrading; poverty the most pinching; and at the same time he is represented as being lost, and in madness and death. He never thought he should come to this. My friend, it is to be feared you have joined yourself to a worse citizen than this. The Saviour says, “He that is not with me is against me, he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad.” If you have not come home to your God, you are still the bondsman and servant of hell. Some of you have done some dirty work for the devil; tongue, hands, feet, head, all have been employed for him, and an opening hell and everlasting woe are the wages of your toil. “He would fain have filled his belly with the husks which the swine did eat,” and you have endeavoured to fill your mind with a less satisfying portion. When the minister has come, and offered the water, wine, and milk of the Gospel, you have turned from them as swine would from pearls; but when the public house company, the licentious novel, the card table, the dance, and things worse still have been presented, you have endeavoured to satisfy your minds with these miserable “husks.” May God forgive you, and give you an appetite for higher things. Awake, then, to your true condition. You are lost like the sheep in the wilderness, but thank heaven the Shepherd is after you. You are poor, though you may have your interest at the bank, and parchment deeds may tell you own your broad acres. If you are a wanderer from God you are poor, for

You are mad, and no madness is equal to living on the crumbling verge of hell, with no guarantee but that the next hour you may feel its quenchless flame. You are “dead in trespasses and sins,” and are hastening on to the death that never dies. May God give you to see and feel these things.

II. THE PRODIGAL'S RETURN. Afflictive circumstances brought him to himself. “He came to himself,” amid the pigs and poverty; but was mad, while associated with women and wine. The company of swine was more favourable to thought than midnight orgies and bacchanalian revels. If you ask me to choose my company from the associates of the tavern, or the tenants of the pig's cote, I say my preference is for the latter; they are equal to their nature, but the former are frequently a disgrace to it. But has not God afflicted you? Are not you restored from a serious state of affliction? What were your thoughts, feelings, and vows in it? Has not God crossed your purposes, and thwarted your schemes? God is reasoning with you; he seeks to bring you to himself. In the prodigal's return we have thought, decision, and action.

Thought. "He came to himself." I judge he rushed madly on, scarcely allowing himself time to think, till he found himself a swineherd in the field; there he began to think, and he began to grow wise again. It is likely that thought would be busy on the present, past, and future. His present circumstances were anything but satisfactory, and as he looked himself down he would no doubt think aloud, "I didn't think of coming to this, when I left home." Like many a prodigal son or daughter who has left a good home, and gone to London, or Manchester, or Liverpool, or somewhere, perhaps some night he has been turned out of the public house where he had spent his last shilling, or she, seduced and ruined, has found herself upon the streets, where with burning brain and desolate heart, the cry was wrung from the soul, "Good God! what a plight I'm in." Ah! and then the past. He says, "I was happy once, when at home." You never should have left it, young man. There are many young men and women who go from home when they leave their parents; they should have stayed a few more years, in loving obedience, till they had mind and muscle to grapple with the shams and sophistries of this wretchedly selfish world. They were happy once. So was my poor backsliding brother here; but as one said to me the other day, "It's all gone now." There was hope gleaming in the future. "My father!" O that magic word! It's likely he thought there may yet be hope. "My prodigality may not have withered the affection of my father's heart." One of our ministers was once walking by Whitehaven workhouse, and felt impressed to apply for admission to visit the sick there. He was shown to the sick wards, and among others a fine, intelligent looking young man drew his attention. By loving conversation he drew forth his history. He was a prodigal from a Christian family in America; he had left his widowed mother and loving sisters, and had worked his way to England in a vessel; consumption seized him, and he was left in Whitehaven workhouse to die. Brother Simpson pointed him to Christ, and he found peace through the blood of the cross. Simpson then wrote to his mother, telling her of the circumstances of her son—that he was on the borders of the grave, but that he had hope in Christ. The next mail brought back a letter from the mother, with one enclosed for her son Charles. Such a letter as could be written only by a mother—a Christian mother—a widowed mother. When in it his mother told him how her food had often been wet with tears; what sleepless nights she had passed—her hours of agony, her pleadings in prayer, at the thought of the course of her son, the tears gushed from his eyes, as he clasped his hands in agony, saying, "God be merciful to me a sinner; she is a mother yet!" His sins had not destroyed his mother's love. And thank God, your prodigal course has not destroyed God's love and pity for you. There is a rainbow of hope o'er you, for God has a Father's heart yet.

Decision. With thoughts of this character in his mind, he says, "I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." What! go back in this plight, and humble yourself! You, who left home in such a different position! "Yes, my position is bad now—it cannot be worse; I'm perishing for want, while 'my father's servants have bread enough and to spare.' I WILL arise,"—that's right, there is strength in that I WILL, especially when one knows the source of his strength. Ah! go back, and say you have done wrong, and in doing that, you only say that you are wiser than you were before. You'll find your father better than you think, and he'll be sure not to put his penitent prodigal in a servant's place. Ought not the thought that God is waiting to receive and pardon you, to lead you to decide to go to him? You have had some thought about it, but you have never come to decision. The reason why many who profess to be seeking God, don't find peace with him, is that they are not fully decided; "for in that day that they seek him with the whole heart, he will be found of them." Say then, "I will, I WILL arise;" but say it in the strength of God's grace, and you will soon find yourself in his beloved embrace.

Action. "He arose, and came to his father." He not only thought about it, felt about it, decided on it, but this led to action. He not only said, "If there be strength in my weakened and weakening body, I'll return," but his limbs were put in motion, with his face towards his father's house. Surely you wanderers from God will come to him; you will arise now, he calleth you. You, who are weary of your course, and heavy laden with sin, come to him, and he will give you rest. Do you say you cannot? Oh, but you can, for he invites you, and complainingly says, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." The man with the withered hand was told to "stretch it out:" he did not say there was no strength in it; but, in his simplicity, believed there was strength in Christ's word, he made the effort, and found strength in action. So will you. Come, "Just as you are without one plea." Say in faith—

"Yes, from this instant now I will
To my offended Father cry;
My base ingratitude I'll own,
Vilest of all thy children I:
Not worthy to be called thy son,
Yet will I thee my Father own."

III. THE PRODIGAL'S RECEPTION. And here we have a word to say on the waiting father and the received child.

The waiting Father. "When he was yet a great way off, his father saw him." He was waiting for him, looking out in expectation, and desiring his return. He knew his inexperience and recklessness would lead to ruin, but fatherly affection said, "When my son comes back a penitent, he'll find a home here." He has cost him many an anxious thought, and many an ardent prayer, and had he known his address, he would have had the assurance of a welcome home. Did you ever consider that phase of the Divine character which represents Jehovah as "waiting to be gracious?" He waits, desires to save, and has given you a thousand invitations, with as many assurances of welcome, if you will but come. A young woman left her pious mother, and ran a course of licentious folly; but her mother was ardent in prayer for her reclamation and return. And when these mothers get into an agony of prayer for their children, they take hold on heaven. This prodigal daughter was led to attend some revival services, and there found the sinner's friend. Of course her first thoughts were then of home. She loathed the sins by which the devil had led her towards hell, and with her face towards home fled thither. She reached it in the night, went softly to the door, and tried it—it was on the latch—she went in, and found a home. The intelligence spread that the prodigal had returned—had returned reclaimed—and that when she came home she found the door on the latch awaiting her. Some expressed surprise that the door should be left, and whether you approve the mother's course or not, she explained it as she said, "I know all about that door, I saw to the door every night; I believed from the first that God would send back my child, and I said in my heart when she does come back she shall not find the door barred against her." Thank God your sins have not barred the door of mercy against you. God has left it on the latch for you, and if you knock it shall be opened; if you ask, you shall receive; if you seek, you shall find; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

The received child. In the far off land he had determined frankly to confess his sins, acknowledge his guilt, and ask for a servant's place. So as his father ran to meet him, and fell on his neck, tenderly embracing him, he began, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son." It seems as though the Father said, "There, my son, that will do, say no more; all I wanted to hear you say was that you had sinned against heaven—there now, that will do. Now bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet; and bring hither that fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat and be merry: for this my son was dead, and is alive again, and was lost and is found." Perhaps another fact may best illustrate this part of the subject. Some years since, an individual was called upon to visit a dying man, whose prodigal habits brought him to an early grave. In a street occupied by the baser sort, he found him on a straw bed in a garret. There he lay suffering from the effects of his riotous life. The friend drew near, and said softly, "I am sorry to see you in such a condition. You seem very near the eternal world. How is it with your soul? are you prepared?" The young man looked sullen, and made no reply. The friend said, "I am come as a friend to see you, and talk to you about getting prepared for heaven. My visit is that of a friend." At this the emaciated man rose up and wept. He said, "My dear sir, is it possible that a gentleman like you should come to visit such a wretch as I? O, sir, I am a ruined man! I am the son of a nobleman from the country, who keeps his mansion in town. I was educated according to my rank, have spent a large fortune, broken up my constitution, and am disowned by my father's house. O what a wretch! I have nearly broken the heart of my father, and ruined my own soul." The friend told him of God's love to sinners, and quoted promises which offer pardon to the vilest. He asked in agony, "Can there be mercy for such a wretch?" In prayer he found peace, and afterwards said, "I am now happy in God, and shall get to heaven." He then sobbingly said, "There is one thing that I should like to be assured of before I die, and that is that my deeply injured father has forgiven me." The friend inquired, "What is your father's name and address? I will go to him immediately." The dying man told him. The good man set off to the mansion, ascended to the front door, and rang the visitor's bell. A servant answered the bell, and inquired, "What is your business please?" "My business is with his lordship, and is of the utmost importance." "Your name, please?" "Dawson." "What, Dawson?" "Dawson, the Methodist preacher." He was shown into the visitor's room, and his lordship came in. Mr. Dawson said, "I hope I see your lordship well. Everything about this beautiful mansion appears calculated to promote human happiness, but,"—here the aged nobleman interrupted him by asking roughly, "What do you mean by BUT?" Dawson answered, "I am sorry to find that you have a son, who is far from being comfortably circumstanced with regard to this life." "Sir," replied the displeased father, "if you mention him here, I will order you through that door in a moment." Mr. Dawson said, "I must inform your lordship, at all events, that he is now dying a humble penitent. I have visited him, pointed him to the Saviour, and he has obtained forgiveness of God, and requires only one thing more, and that is to know that you, his much injured father, will pardon him before he leaves the world." The aged father was suddenly overcome, and covering his face with his hands, he wept. Starting to the bell, he rang it violently, and said to the servant, "Order the carriage to the door immediately—be quick." Dawson and his lordship rode together, and they were quickly by the bedside of the sufferer. At the father's approach the son sat up, and clasping his bony hands, said, "O my father, God has forgiven me my sins, and I am dying, and hope to go to heaven; and I want to be assured of your forgiveness before I die. O forgive the injury I have done." The father embraced the ragged emaciated son, kissed him, and said, "Yes, my son, I freely forgive you." The son said, "Now I am satisfied," and died in his father's arms. Oh, prodigal, God is infinitely willing to pardon you. Infinitely more so than was this father to receive his rebel child. Do you say, "Can it be possible?" It is more than possible; it is gloriously certain! One of our ministers one day met with a poor guilty sinner—a wretched, blighted sot, and he got him to sign the total abstinence pledge; and when he had done that, he said, "Now let us kneel down, and ask God to give you strength to keep it." And they knelt together, and he prayed that God might give him grace to abstain from that which had been leading him, and was leading thousands of others to hell. After prayer, he took him by the hand, and said, "God bless you, you must keep the pledge; and remember, you have a friend in heaven who loves you." They parted, and the poor fellow began to muse on the preacher's words, "A friend in heaven who loves you!" "And can it be possible," thought he, "that God loves me? such a wretch as I am!" And then said he to himself, "The preacher said so, and he ought to know better than I do." He retired in secret, and prayed to the God against whom he had sinned; he looked by faith "to him who on Calvary died," and felt his pardoning power. The next time the preacher saw him, he found him an adopted child, with the love of his pardoning Father shed abroad in his heart. Oh, that Friend in heaven loves you. Bring your cold heart to his warm one, and your iciness shall melt away. Yea, he will receive you with demonstrations of gladness, "For there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

WORKS OF CREATION.

THE MOON'S INVISIBLE SIDE.

THE advocates of a plurality of worlds have either abandoned the case of the moon as not one in point, being only a satellite, or resorted to strained hypotheses; such as, that there may be an atmosphere at the bottom of the valleys; or that she must necessarily have appropriated, by her attraction, the matter of the tails of comets, and of the zodiacal light. A recent discovery has, however, changed the aspect of the question. In all previous speculations, astronomers proceeded on the supposition, that what held in reference to one side of the moon would equally hold in reference to the other. The profound research of a Continental astronomer has now shown, that this is by no means a legitimate supposition; and that the nonexistence of an atmosphere on the visible side does not at all imply that the other is equally destitute.

The moon constantly turns the same side to us. She does, indeed, as if to tantalize us, show a small portion of the other side. She turns round at one time the western edge, so as to show us a few more mountains and craters; and then, at another, the eastern. There is a similar oscillation at the poles; but it is only a very limited region that she thus reveals. It is by this libration, that we are able to take stereoscopic pictures of her disc. She turns constantly the same side to us, for the simple reason, that she rotates once upon her axis in the same time that she performs a revolution round the earth. If we were without, instead of within, the circle she describes in the heavens, the case would be otherwise. The inhabitants [if any] of the other planets see, in succession, all parts of her circumference. In the course of twenty-eight days they can scrutinize every part of her surface. For the same reason, a person in the centre of a circus sees only one side of the horse galloping round the circumference, while spectators beyond see both sides in succession.

Until lately, no conjecture could be formed of the state of things on the other side of the moon. It was regarded as one of those inscrutable mysteries which it would be folly to attempt to unveil. Human genius has triumphed over the difficulty, and has thrown a curious light on that which has hitherto been involved in deepest darkness. It is to M. Hansen that the credit of the discovery is due. Mr. Airy, the Astronomer-Royal, supplied him, no doubt, with the data; but the merit of the solution is all his own. The Astronomer-Royal has, as it were, dug up from some Assyrian mound a tablet with mystic cuneiform characters; and M. Hansen has supplied the key to the interpretation. The moon is so eagerly scrutinized at Greenwich, that any deviation from the prescribed path is soon detected. M. Hansen had already, on more than one occasion, vindicated the law of gravitation, by reducing unexplained lunar irregularities to its dominion. When again applied to, he set to work to discover the cause of the irregularity. The deviation was slight; but, if the moon does not keep time to a very second, some explanation is required. On this occasion, also, M. Hansen was triumphant. He has given a marvellous solution, but one in which all astronomers have acquiesced.

The scientific statement of the solution is, that the moon's centre of gravity and her centre of figure are not coincident, the one being distant about thirty-seven miles from the other. Most momentous results flow from this. The one hemisphere must be lighter than the other. This, indeed, is but another way of stating the discovery. The sphere of the moon may be regarded as made up of a light half and a heavy one,—the lighter being always turned toward the earth.

In discharging a ball from a gun, calculation can predict the trajectory it will describe. But if the ball is not equally dense on opposite sides it will not pursue the same path it would do if homogeneous. Let us suppose, that, while the ball is perfectly spherical, one half is iron and the other cork; the curve described will be different, both in range and form, from that which would be described by a ball equally dense throughout. Balls have been, indeed, purposely so cast, to increase the range; the sphere being hollow, but having one side thicker than the other. Given the difference of density, the curve can be laid down; given the curve, the difference of density can be determined. This last case is that of the moon. She differs in no respect from a ball discharged from a gun; and, in examining the curve she describes, the conclusion is, that, while she is quite or nearly spherical, the hemisphere turned toward us is lighter than the opposite one.

But how does this tell on the question of inhabitants? The application is very direct and startling. Supposing the sphere of the moon originally covered with water, and enveloped in an atmosphere, both water and air would flow to the heavier side, and leave the lighter side destitute of both ; just as water and air leave the summits of our mountains, and gravitate toward the valleys. They seek the lowest level, or, in other words, the point least distant from the centre of gravity.

In the case of the moon, the side turned to us is virtually one enormous mountain, and the opposite side the corresponding valley. We could not expect to find traces of air on the summit of a terrestrial mountain one hundred and thirty-four miles high. The conclusion, therefore, is, that though the near hemisphere is a desert, having neither water nor air to sustain life, the hidden hemisphere may have a teeming population, rejoicing in all the comforts and amenities of life. The imagination is set free to picture broad oceans, bearing on their bosom the commerce of this new world, rivers fertilizing the valleys through which they flow, a luxuriant vegetation, and buildings of colossal size.

Granting that the other side of the moon is peopled, can our world be ever known to the inhabitants, seeing that only the lighter side is turned toward us ? It is plain, that the inhabitants, if they keep to their own side, can never get a glimpse of the earth. If there is an atmosphere, it is probable that it may extend a small way within the visible side, though in a rarefied form. We can then conceive the intrepid lunarians venturing, as far as they can breathe, within the barren hemisphere ; just like adventurous travellers on our globe, scaling lofty mountains, to obtain an extended view of the landscape. What an astonishing spectacle, then, must burst on the lunar tourist ! The traveller who has spent the night on the summit of the Righi, to watch the rising of the sun over the snow-clad ranges of the Oberland Alps, feels rewarded for all his toil by the glorious spectacle. The explorer of the southern hemisphere, when he first beholds the Southern Cross and the Magellanic Clouds, experiences no ordinary delight at having ushered into view a new portion of God's universe. But these illustrations can but imperfectly enable us to realize the case of the lunar traveller, when he first beholds the earth. He will see an immense blue orb hung up, immovably fixed, in the heavens. It will appear to him fourteen times larger than the moon appears to us. The sun will be seen, as in the other lunar hemisphere, to rise in one horizon, and after fourteen days set in the opposite ; but the earth never moves. The stars at midday, as well as at midnight, will appear to pass behind its disc. It will exhibit, however, in twenty-eight days, all the phases of the moon,—now a thin crescent, then a full orb. Its rapid rotation will be most notable ; for, in so large a globe, the twenty-four hours' period will be most marked. And the blue atmosphere will be undergoing incessant changes. Belts, corresponding to the trade-winds, will be seen ; and varying climates will be observable. Though dimly, yet our seas, continents, and mountain-ranges may be distinguished. What a tale of wonder will the traveller have to tell !

It is obvious, that the results of M. Hansen furnished no positive evidence of lunar inhabitants. The discovery is valuable to the advocates of a plurality of worlds, only in as far as it enables them to rebut the argument of an antagonist, when he points to the moon as a proof that their speculations are only a dream. They can now maintain, that, if we knew all, we might find that the moon is not destitute of life.

FOR PREACHERS AND CLASS-LEADERS.

ENTHUSIASM OF MINISTERS.

If we would make our ministry a power it must be marked by enthusiasm. This ought to arise from our faith in the truth we preach. No minister has a right to expect that his work will be effective, except it is with him a controlling and all-mastering passion. Unless we have entered the ministry of our heavenly Master as ambassadors, feeling that the spell it exerts upon us is such as no other manner of life can exert, the sooner we abandon our sacred or desecrated office the better, both for ourselves and for the people among whom we minister.

If there is any office in the world which claims enthusiasm as its natural ally it is the ministry of the gospel. It demands not only the soul, but the soul in its most fervid heat and in its highest action. The spirit which is most proper to us is the spirit of him who said, "The zeal of thine house has eaten me up," "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me and to finish his work." And we find that spirit re-appearing in the Apostle of the Gentiles when Festus, confounding human lore with divine lore, could say to him, "Thou art beside myself: much learning has made thee mad." When I speak of enthusiasm, I do not mean a rampant fanaticism which, mistaking frenzy for faith, and noisy declamation for spiritual earnestness, excites the derision and the hostility of those whom preaching is designed to conciliate and to save. I mean the entire consecration of the man to his work, as the work which, because of its nature and ends, he esteems to be the noblest on earth. If there is one now holding a commission from his Lord who would exchange it for any secular position, however elevated, let the unworthy feeling crimson his face with shame. If we feel that to be wealthy as a millionaire; to be prime minister of the Queen at home or her ambassador abroad: to be generalissimo of her forces by land or her chief admiral at sea; to utter with authority the last and highest word of science; to compose the poetry which shall crown us with a laureate's wreath, or the music which, with its "linked sweetness" and its deep and subtle harmonies, may thrill the soul with a new and wondrous ecstasy, is to achieve a higher honour, to render a nobler service, and to enjoy a purer happiness than we feel to be associated with the post we now occupy in the spiritual kingdom, are we not in the garb of ambassadors without credentials and seal, and are we not running without being sent? A minister of Christ, without enthusiasm, one who has to preach the most glad tidings that ever came forth from heaven's gate, without enthusiasm! a rower in the lifeboat of which Christ is the heavenly pilot, and which has to rescue struggling, drowning souls from the foaming breakers of sin, without enthusiasm! We are told that there are elements to damp it. Enough, assuredly, both within us and without us. Natural indolence in some, an unchastened will in most, benumbing habit, personal sickness, ungrateful and even cruel treatment from others, friends transmuted into enemies, harvests scanty or long deferred and mingled with tares, thwartings from men and temptations from the devil, numberless distractions and harassments arising from our social life—all these are the wintry clouds which often empty themselves upon the fire of a minister's zeal. But, then, the more we have of this dismal, discouraging rain, the greater the necessity for keeping the fire blazing with a fervent heat. The more we have to resist us, the more internal force we must have to press on. If the vessel has both wind and tide against it, the more needful it is that its motive power should be great. If we can neither drift into heaven as Christians, nor drift onward in our work as ministers—if progress involve struggle and resolution and nerve at every step, what prospect of success has he who begins the ministry without heart or with lukewarmness? It is well when a gale rises immediately on his leaving the harbour, and sends him back with fear, and compels him to abandon a mode of life for which he was so poorly qualified.

Brethren, let us learn enthusiasm from others who in temporal matters are not ashamed of it. The manufacturer who has set his heart on riches teaches us a lesson. He is resolved to be wealthy, and he cares not who knows it. He rises up early, lies down late, eats the bread of carefulness, and wastes not a farthing wilfully. He keeps his eye upon every passing event, for it may affect for better or for worse his hopes of a fortune. Politics are not without interest for him, especially if they have a monetary bearing. He strives to master international affairs for they may affect trade, and it is by trade that he is to become rich. Discoveries in chemistry attract his regard, not because he understands the science, but because new colours may be made or old ones fixed, and in either case may turn his fabrics into gold. If he is dumb or stammering on any other point, on this, the one imperial, all-absorbing ambition of his life, he is as eloquent as the Greek that shook Philip's throne. This enthusiasm may be called vulgar. Be it so; but it is vulgar because it is misplaced. Is it vulgar if its object is worthy? and was it vulgar in an apostle who could say "This one thing I do?" Men can pardon enthusiasm which can spend years in deciphering inscriptions on a fragment of some ancient stone, or which can chase through flood or fell, and wood and brake, with dripping garments and lacerated flesh, some new moth which entomology has never recognised and classified before; or which can give half a lifetime to the rescension of some obscure and unimportant manuscript; or which can dwell with rapture on some master-stroke of the pencil of Raphael or of the chisel of Thorwaldsen or Canova; or which can encounter death itself in seeking amid mist, and storm, and snow, and thick-ribbed ice a passage through Northern seas to the Eastern world. And is the pulpit the only place in which enthusiasm is an unpardonable sin? Is tameness to be its highest level—a studied coolness its intensest warmth—a persevering monotony its most attractive tone—a wearying iteration of the same common-places its greatest variety—a nervous fear of even seeming to be in earnest its most fervent zeal?

Brethren, other enthusiasms are concerned with perishable things. The merchant's gold shall drop from his hands, the noblest painting shall rot, the finest group of marble statuary shall turn to dust, all the works of man which a carnal enthusiasm has created shall be burned up, but the enthusiasm of the true minister of Christ has relation to things which cannot perish. If he is a good master-builder his work shall abide. The souls which, under God, he saves, shall be "his joy and crown of rejoicing." If he turn many to righteousness he shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and as the stars for ever and ever. And surely there is in the gospel no lack of fuel to feed perennially the fires of a true godly enthusiasm. Its truths which first enkindled our love abide the same. Our chief danger is lest we become so familiar with them that we cease to know them—handle them until we cease to feel them—live passively in their presence until they seem to fade from our view. It is needful to remind ourselves of what we know—to freshen up by living and constant meditation our sense of the great realities with which we have to deal. Unless this be done, our words will be far ahead of our thoughts, our thoughts still further ahead of our convictions and sympathies, and thus, instead of being inspired with an earnestness in which the heart is warmer than the tongue, we shall be guilty of using language tropical in its fervour while the heart is chill as an autumn evening or frozen as a polar sea. And we cannot continue this inconsistent life for any length of time without inflicting serious disaster on our moral sensibilities and weakening our power both with God and men. But with an enthusiasm such as it is the intention of God that the truths of the gospel should beget and sustain, a sublime unity will be given to our life. The ministry being our work, for which God has given us the effectual consecration of his Spirit, we shall give ourselves wholly to it. This will be our supreme end, which will control all other aims and pursuits into subordination to it. As far as our time will allow, we shall not neglect the study of the sciences. We shall feel that all things are ours—the stars of heaven, the rocks of the everlasting hills, the flowers of the field, the events of the past, the movements of the present—all things are ours to study, and, as far as we can, to master. But as Christ is head over all things to his Church, and as they are but the scaffolding within which He is rearing through the ages the eternal temple of His grace, so is the minister of the gospel to make all his secular acquisitions subservient to the same end—subservient, we say, for there is danger lest the prosecution of some branch of knowledge for the sake of increasing our fitness for the high work we have undertaken enslave us to love the means more than we love the end. Have not some proved thus recreant to their heavenly calling? They have been fascinated by literary and scientific investigations. Sent to preach him who is the Rock of Ages, they have become geologists; forgetting the true vine, to be severed from which is death, they have betaken themselves to botany; the astronomy of the stars, that shall fall like untimely figs has eclipsed in their regard the brightness of the Sun of Righteousness; the mysteries of nature have overpowered by their attractions the mystery of godliness; the work of the pulpit has gradually sunk out of their sympathies; week by week they have come to it with scantier preparation and with a more withered and alien heart; the unction and power which made their earlier ministry a feast of fat things have departed, and the people, starved and famished, seek other shepherds that will feed the flock of God. What would be thought of an ambassador who, sent by the Queen to some foreign court on matters of pressing urgency, should be found, instead of executing his mission with energy and dispatch, seeking botanic specimens, or digging in some curious alluvium for remains of extinct animal species? But this would be pardonable compared with the conduct of the minister who, unable, as every man must be, to retain two supreme and co-ordinate ambitions, is content to be unknown as a preacher, provided he can achieve some small and transient reputation as a man of science or literature. Such fame, coy and uncertain at the best, even when sought by those who consecrate to it their undivided energies, will, if attained, be but a poor offering to make in appeasement of the anger of him who sent us to preach the gospel. We were to be fishers of men—seekers of the lost—shepherds of the sheep—keepers of the vineyard; and can we think that a scientific or literary renown, sought for its own sake, will be accepted as a full compensation for a neglected and defaulting stewardship? The richer our stores of knowledge when consecrated by the love of Christ, the better. Our best equipment is but poor for the service of such a master. Be it ours to aim at the possession of the spirit of entire absorption in our work. Let us not rest until our souls glow with heavenly fire. The flame will spread to those who hear us; and if some mock, they mocked Paul, and they mocked our Saviour when, unable to preach with his lips, he poured out his soul unto death. Those who love to be at ease in Zion may deem us righteous overmuch, and think that we are too earnest even in preaching a Saviour's love and in rescuing immortal souls; but it is not for us to reduce the temperature of our faith and feelings to the chillness which reigns in them. When we have published the tidings of salvation for the last time, and are lying on that bed from which we shall rise no more, other sins may reproach us, but not enthusiasm. Our most fervid moments will then seem to be but the just average earnestness of a man who undertook "to stand between the living and the dead, and to stay the plague."

"PRAY FOR THE PREACHER-MAN."

"MAMMA!" said a bright, chubby boy of five or six summers, just as he was ready for chapel, one Sabbath morning, "mamma! mustn't we pray for preacher-man before we go to chapel?"

"Yes, to be sure, Charley," was the widow's reply.

Down on his knees went the little fellow, buried his face in his hands, and this was his prayer: "God bless Mitty — to-day and make him good preacher-man, for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen."

I do not know on what day that prayer was offered, but I know that it has often done me good since. I hope Charley still prays.

Do you "pray for the preacher-man?" A prayerless heart will soon be a complaining one; but a prayerful heart cannot easily be disappointed. Half-an-hour, or even five minutes, spent by you in the closet, will wondrously improve the character of a sermon. And why? The preacher is the same, the sermon is not changed. The difference is in yourself. What is the explanation of this?

Every sermon is like yourself,—a compound thing, made up of body and soul. There are the man and his message. These two elements, the natural and the spiritual, are distinct, both in the sermon and the hearer. In the hearer there is just so much of the spiritual as there is of religious life; and all the rest is nature. In the sermon there is just so much of the spiritual as there is of the truth of the Gospel; and all the rest is the man.

Now, in both preachers and hearers the natural varies much. Men have different capacities, different tastes, different habits of thought and feeling. Some are poetical, some are argumentative, some are fervid, some are rigid. And so you may go the old round of the varieties in mind and heart, finding some representatives of everyone, both in pulpit and in pew. Thus there will be in every preacher a special adaptation of the natural element in his preaching to the natural in some of his hearers. And if so, then, other things being equal, they will as certainly prefer that preacher—their preacher—as they will prefer pleasure before pain; and this, even though their standard of preference be in utter contrast with their own peculiarities in daily life. Harmony is to some, and contrast is to others, the rule of choice.

But there is another element in every Christian sermon, and in every faithful hearer, and that is the spiritual. Here all agree. The truth in Jesus is one; and, as unfolded by the teaching of the Holy Spirit, it suits all spiritual natures. Christ is all in all; and if he be preached, however varied the circumstances and the necessities of those who hear, He will prove to be the one ever-satisfying Portion. In order to this, there must be spiritual discernment. There must be a power to secrete from the sermon just those portions of the truth which are specially needed for the present distress. This implies more or less of spiritual vigour, whether habitual or special—in either case the gift of God. And here lies the value of Charley's example.

Many hearers, even amongst professing Christians, present themselves in the house of God under the influence of only their natural tastes. Spiritual appetite and spiritual discernment they have not, for they have not sought them. No marvel that they hear so many "poor sermons." The spiritual within them is feeble, or slumbering, or dead. They are afflicted with atrophy. They listen, can taste, discuss, and pass an opinion upon what is set before them; but they find no nourishment. They see no beauty, feel no charm, unless the natural is supplied with the natural,—the merely human with the merely human. The taste degenerates until all is unpalatable but that which is highly flavoured after the one approved recipe. Let them try the virtue of prayer, it braces the whole system. Under its influence, sermons which were dry as dust, and as unpalatable, become not, indeed, tasty to the natural man, but nourishing to the inner. The intellect may be far from being suited, but this is comparatively forgotten whilst the heart is made glad by the presence of Jesus. Try it. Persevere in trying it; and a new charm will be thrown over the pulpit if you, earnestly and faithfully, will only "pray for the preacher-man."

FOR THE FAMILY.

THE FULNESS THAT IS IN CHRIST.

It pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell; dwell, not come and go, like a wayfaring man who tarrieth but a night, who is with us to-day, and away to-morrow; not like the shallow, noisy, treacherous brook that fails, when most needed, in heat of summer; but like this deep-seated spring, that rising silently though affluently at the mountain's foot, and having unseen communication with its exhaustless supplies, is ever flowing over its grassy margin, equally unaffected by the long droughts that dry the wells, and the frosts that pave the neighbouring lake with ice. So fail the joys of the earth ; so flow, supplied by the fulness that is in Christ, the pleasures and the peace of piety. It cannot be otherwise. If a man love me, says Jesus, he will keep my words ; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

I have read how, in the burning desert, the skeletons of unhappy travellers, all withered and white, are found, not only on the way to the fountain, but lying grim and ghastly on its banks, with their skulls stretched over its very margin. Panting, faint, their tongue cleaving to the roof of their mouth, ready to fill a cup with gold for its fill of water, they press on to the well, steering their course by the tall palms that stand full of hope above the glaring sands. Already, in fond anticipation they drink where others had been saved. They reach it. Alas ! sad sight for the dim eyes of fainting men, the well is dry. With stony horror in their looks, how they gaze into the empty basin, or fight with man and beast for some muddy drops that but exasperate their thirst. The desert reels around them. Hope expires. Some cursing, some praying, they sink, and themselves expire. And by and by the sky darkens, lightnings flash, loud thunders roll, the rain pours down, and, fed by the showers, the treacherous waters rise to play in mockery with long fair tresses, and kiss the pale lips of death.

But yonder, where the cross stands up high to mark the fountain of the Saviour's blood, and heaven's sanctifying grace, no dead souls lie. Once a Golgotha, Calvary has ceased to be a place of skulls. Where men went once to die, they go now to live ; and to none that ever went there to seek pardon, and peace, and holiness, did God ever say, Seek ye me in vain. There are times when the peace of God's people, always like a river, is like one in flood, overflowing its margin, and rolling its mighty current between bank and brae. There are times when the righteousness of God's people, always like the waves of the sea, seems like the tide at the stream, as, swelling beyond its ordinary bounds, it floats the boats and ships that lie highest, driest on the beach. But at all times and seasons, faith and prayer find fulness of mercy to pardon, and of grace to sanctify, in Jesus Christ. The supply is inexhaustible.

Mountains have been exhausted of their gold, mines of their diamonds, and the depths of the ocean of their pearly gems. Over once busy scenes, silence and solitude now reign ; the caverns ring no longer to the miner's hammer, nor is the song of the pearl-fisher heard upon the deep. But the riches of grace are inexhaustible. All that have gone before us have not made them less, and we shall make them no less to those who follow us. When they have supplied the wants of unborn millions, the last of Adam's race, that lonely man, over whose head the sun is dying, beneath whose feet the earth is reeling, shall stand by as full a fountain as this day invites you to drink and live, to wash and be clean.

I have found it an interesting thing to stand on the edge of a noble rolling river, and to think, that although it has been flowing on for six thousand years, watering the fields, and slaking the thirst of a hundred generations, it shows no signs of waste or want ; and when I have watched the rise of the sun, as he shot above the crest of the mountain, or in a sky draped with golden curtains sprang up from his ocean bed, I have wondered to think that he has melted the snows of so many winters, and renewed the verdure of so many springs, and painted the flowers of so many summers, and ripened the golden harvests of so many autumns, and yet shines as brilliant as ever, his eye not dim, nor his natural strength abated, nor his floods of light less full for centuries of boundless profusion. Yet what are these but images of the fulness that is in Christ ? Let that feed your hopes, and cheer your hearts, and brighten your faith, and send you away this day happy and rejoicing. For, when judgment flames shall have licked up that flowing stream, and the light of that glorious sun shall have been quenched in darkness or veiled in the smoke of a burning world, the fulness that is in Christ shall flow on throughout eternity in the bliss of the redeemed. Blessed Saviour, Image of God, divine Redeemer ! in thy presence is fulness of joy ; at thy right hand there are pleasures for evermore. What thou hast gone to heaven to prepare, may we be called up at death to enjoy !—Rev. Dr. Guthrie.

COALS OF FIRE.

THE other day a respectable coloured man called on a merchant of New York, and asked him to aid a coloured church with a subscription. His credentials were good, and among those who knew him he stood high. The merchant cried, "Yes, I will give you something." He took the negro by the collar, showed him to the door, kicked him into the street, and said, "There, take that." The negro had not made up his mind what to do. The ejectionment was summary and complete. His subscription book lay in the gutter, his hat on the side walk, and himself in the street. The first impulse was to break the assailant's windows ; but he concluded he would not do that. He gathered up his property, and sought a more hospitable shelter. He told his tale, and before night his gains cleared fifty dollars ; and a bright thought struck him, that he must put down the assault and battery as so much towards the church, and see what it would come to. He went on his way. Money came in. He told his story, and like the two mites, it promised more than any one had put into the treasury.

The assailant heard of the story. He was ashamed of his conduct. He wanted to stop the mouth of the black rascal, as he called him. He sent for him, made an apology, and put his name down on the book, and gave the money into the hand of the black man. But it did not stop his mouth. He told it so much the more. And now he goes on his way—he tells how the man assaulted him. "He caught me by the hair, and swung me round just so. He put his name on my book. Jest look a here—dare hem be, if you don't believe 'um." And the agent for the little, small, weak, black man's church among the poor of our city, thinks that the day he was so beaten was "the best day's work he ebber did." Not a bad illustration of that old command to heap coals of fire on the head of your enemy.

CHRISTIANS WHO WOULD NOT FIGHT.

"I HAVE read," said Mrs. Chapman, "of a certain regiment ordered to march into a small town (in the Tyrol, I think), and take it. It chanced that the place was settled by a colony who believed the Gospel of Christ, and proved their faith by works. A courier from a neighbouring village informed them that troops were advancing to take the town. They quietly answered, 'If they will take it, they must.' Soldiers soon came, riding in with colours flying, and fifes piping their shrill defiance. They looked round for an enemy, and saw the farmer at his plough, the blacksmith at his anvil, and the women at their churns and spinning-wheels. Babies crowded to hear the music, and boys ran out to see the pretty trainers, with feathers and bright buttons, 'the harlequins of the nineteenth century.' Of course none of these were in a position to be shot at. 'Where are your soldiers?' they asked. 'We have none,' was the brief reply. 'But we have come to take the town.' 'Well, my friends, it lies before you.' 'But is there nobody here to fight?' 'No, we are all Christians.' Here was an emergency altogether unprovided for by the military schools. This was a sort of resistance which no bullet could hit ; a fortress perfectly bomb-proof. The commander was perplexed. 'If there is nobody to fight with, of course we can't fight,' said he. 'It is impossible to take such a town as this.' So he ordered the horses heads to be turned about, and these carried the human animals out of the village, as guiltless as they entered, and perchance somewhat wiser. This experiment, on a small scale, indicates how easy it would be to dispense with armies and navies, if men only had faith in the religion they profess to believe."

ON PRAYER.

"For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

JESUS, where'er thy people meet
To pray, they find the mercy-seat,
And thou with blessings wilt be there,
To answer every fervent prayer.

If on the snow-capp'd mountain high,
Where warring winds pass roaring by;
Or in the dale where flowerets grow,
And soft and sweet the zephyrs blow:

Or if beside the flowing stream,
Where basks the fish in sunny beam;
Or on the dry and barren soil,
Which yields no recompense to toil:

Or if upon the traceless deep,
Where vessels sail and brothers sleep;
Where surges swell and tempests roar,
And dash against the rocky shore:

Or if within the cottage wall,
They fervently for mercy call;
Thou hear'st the prayer of every breast,
And grant'st each rightly ask'd request.

Or if on consecrated ground,
Where sages trod with awe profound,
Or in the gorgeous temple where
The martyrs oft have knelt in prayer.

If in the busy, bustling street, <sup>[met:]</sup>
Where merchants with the merchant
Or by the way-side, where the car
Sends forth its rumbling sound afar:—

At home, abroad, by night or day,
Thou'lt hear thy children when they pray:
Wilt calm the tumult in each breast,
And lead them to thy perfect rest.

WEEP NOT.

WEEP NOT: there is no cause for woe—
No cause for sorrow's gloom
To reign, in sable garb, and know
Of rest but in the tomb;
There is no darkness of the night
But shall be changed to day—
No clouds, but vanish at the light,
Of dawn's first beaming ray.

Weep not for those who are no more,
But joy that they are gone,
Where every strife and struggle's o'er,
And peace and they are one.

For absent friends shed not a tear,
But let their imaged smile
In all its pristine beauty, here
The weary time beguile.

Weep not, when by the tempest toss'd,
No beacon glads your eye;
Nor yet despair when all seems lost,
For then is comfort nigh.—
Though pleasure's ne'er without alloy,
Let me this truth disclose,—
There is no grief unback'd by joy,
No thorn without a rose.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

DILIGENCE.

THE qualifications necessary for a "Model" Sunday-school teacher are four-fold, Social, Physical, Mental, and Spiritual. The enumeration of them should not make us, who are conscious of our many deficiencies, lukewarm in the work, nor affright those who are about entering upon the honourable task: rather let each strive to emulate him who comes nearest to the standard of excellence, that so we may not be ashamed of our work. The Artist seeks every where for beauty, though his design falls far short of his conception.

but were his imaginings less elevated, how mediocre would his work be. The most finished productions of Genius are replete with blemishes and flaws. The "Perfect" in Art, Science, Religion, or Literature, we shall never know on earth.

Is, then, striving after perfection a vain thing? By no means; for it is impossible earnestly to pursue what is good, without getting good. Labour to excel, is never labour in vain. The Sculptor who, with vehement gazing, impresses on his memory the graceful forms of statues, the product of Greece or Rome, may not bring from his own studio rounder limbs, finer features, and more graceful attitudes; but his work will be more worthy of his skill, because of his ardent gazing upon his predecessors' work. So with the Painter, or the Poet. The study of the ancient masters of colour and form, or catching the cadences of those who, like the sweet singer of Israel, have filled the world with wondrous melody, may not enable the one to impart faultless finish to his canvas, or the other to out-soar Milton in his song; but, who does not feel that both are the better for their schooling? And if we as teachers would achieve much, and perform it well, we must set him before us who said "learn of me."

What are the spiritual qualifications of a teacher? Holiness, without which none shall see God. Zeal, intense devotion to the Master's work. Faith, a full assurance that the work must succeed. Meditation, the diligent study of God's word. Gentleness, winning all hearts by an unfeigned love. Hope, so as not to despair of the most wicked or refractory. Single-heartedness, aiming alone at the glory of God, the good of the Church, the well-being of the scholars, and the salvation of the world by means of the school. Prayer, both public and private, with, as well as for the scholars. Gladness should cheer and animate when success is given; but when prosperity is withheld, duty should prompt to unflagging labour, with the remembrance of the promise "the soul of the diligent shall be made fat."

The teacher's mental qualifications comprise not only the acquisition of knowledge, but the power of dispensing it. He must exercise his imagination, be observant, and discerning, able to discriminate wisely between things that differ: knowing how to apply the right lesson to the right child, at the right time, and in the right way. He should read distinctly, like Ezra giving the sense and causing his hearers to understand. He should be able to sing, or love singing. He should strive to speak correctly. He should aim to excel in any post to which he may be appointed. He must ever be punctual, affable, and decided; and success and happiness in the work will not be long withheld.

Our next qualification is of the physical character of the teacher. He must not be too young to understand his responsibilities, or so old as to lack the vigour needed for the right discharge of school duties. There is a time to rest, as well as a time to work. He needs good temper, courage, subordination, and prudence; as a rule, he should be without deformity of speech, or body, or mind, apt to teach, patient.

The next qualification is the social. A convert, recently reclaimed from vicious courses, should not too hurriedly be admitted into the Sunday-school as a teacher. No teacher should be admitted to teach in the school, merely because of his position in the church, on account of family connection, worldly influence, or riches; fitness must be first, and other considerations second. No publican, or frequenter of pot-houses, should be considered eligible for the holy work, nor any to whom well-grounded suspicion attaches of unchristian-like character or dealings. Consistency of life is needed in every department of the church, but emphatically so in the Sunday-school; children are lively at discerning inconsistencies, and should such be at all tolerated, farewell success. "Be ye clean who bear the vessels of the Lord."

Thus, then, without distinguishing departments, we have given a brief sketch of the salient points of a socially, physically, mentally, and spiritually equipped trainer of the young for heaven. Does any one ask, who is sufficient for these things? We reply, our sufficiency is of God. Let us covet earnestly the best gifts, diligently seeking his qualifying and sanctifying grace, and those who seek shall find.

There is no royal road to proficiency. Industry and attention are essential to success. Earth, air, sea, and sky must be laid under tribute for the effective accomplishment of the teacher's task. History and prophecy, parables and proverbs, scientific research, and the treasures of genius must yield their quota to his store. Difficulties must not daunt, but inspire him with new energy. It may be hard work to scale a mountain, but there's health and vigour in the exercise. The men who, some time ago, dug the artesian well at Brighton, were many months digging through the hard rock; but in one hour from the time they reached the spring, they had more water than all the town could exhaust. Success is a fruit which hangs from the boughs of the tree of diligence.

Assiduity in worldly matters, is not only excusable, but preferred. "Push," "Tact," "Keeness," "Energy," and "Promptness," are household words in City houses, and mean that he who has them is on the high road to prosperity and honour. Can these qualities be less important in spiritual matters? No! All that is legitimate, and praiseworthy, in matters connected with the acquisition of worldly wealth and civic fame, should, if possible, be wrought into our texture as teachers, and become part of our spiritual character; for, if he who is diligent in his worldly calling shall stand before kings, he who is diligent in works of faith and labours of love, shall, in due season, stand before the King of kings, well approved and gloriously honoured. "Hinder me not," said Eleazar of Damascus, when Rebekah's relatives would have delayed his return to his master. "Hinder me not, seeing that the Lord hath prospered my way." And as we, as teachers, are endeavouring to hasten the introduction of the Bride to the Bridegroom, shall we permit ourselves to be hindered by incompetence, unworthiness, or indolence? God forbid! We may not thus be delayed, if diligence will prevent it: for our tardiness may retard others, and the time is short, too short to permit our regaining lost opportunities. Lost hours may mean lost souls. We must work while it is called to-day. It is said that one of the things which led to Cardinal Wolsey's rise, was a rapid journey (for those times) he made from Richmond to Flanders, to convey a message from King Henry VII. to the Emperor Maximilian. This he accomplished in a little over three days, greatly to the admiration of the king, and the consequent advance of the young and ready courtier. Shall a man be thus diligent to gratify an earthly monarch, straining all his powers and lending all his resources to win a smile or obtain a fleeting favour, and shall not we from higher and holier motives, devote all our energies to please him, and advance his cause, who calls us to be co-workers with Jesus in the spread of his truth? Wolsey found that the smiles and favours of earthly kings are deceitful and vain; but, we know that the smile of God's approval is an enduring honour, surviving even the wreck and ruin of this lower world, and then borne by us into that new and eternal world wherein dwelleth everlasting righteousness.

Remembering, then, the rest that remains, and the promised reward, let us, day by day, renew our determination to be more diligent in acquiring ability for our work, striving after perfection, and with the measure of it to which we have already attained, let us be even more diligent than in the past in prosecuting our work. The fields are white unto the harvest, and let us not only pray for an increase of labourers, but earnestly seek the sympathy and co-operation of such as are eligible to be our coadjutors in the holy work: bring in such, and receive them in the Lord with all gladness, that they may be our fellow-helpers in the truth, and then very soon, O glorious thought! we who sow, and they who reap, shall rejoice with the Lord of the harvest, and the garnered souls, for ever, and for ever.

CONNEXIONAL INTELLIGENCE.

REPORT OF THE CONFERENCE OF 1863.

THE Forty-fourth Annual Conference commenced its sittings in the Civil Court of the Town Hall, Leeds, on Wednesday morning, June 3rd., and continued them by successive adjournments till Saturday, June 13th.

About eighty Delegates attended to represent the districts at home, the Canadian Conference, and the Australasian stations.

The Reports of the stations and of the various Connexional committees were received, and the general prosperity of the denomination called forth devout expressions of gratitude to Almighty God.

In some instances, as usual, a decrease of members was reported; but searching inquiries were instituted into the causes of such decrease; and the Conference adopted such resolutions as the merits of the several cases seemed to demand. It is hoped that the stations will, the coming year, more earnestly seek a revival of the work of God, and that fewer decreases may have to be reported to the Conference of next year. The net increase of members, however, was found to be 5,396.

The Conference appointed a committee on an early day, to examine and report on the Jubilee movement; and after several sittings, the committee reported that it recommended the keeping open the Jubilee fund for receiving subscriptions until the end of February, 1864; that all the stations should be requested to endeavour to collect, without delay, all moneys promised to the fund, but not yet paid; and that all the affairs of the fund should be wound up by the first of next March. Also that a division of the moneys subscribed for the general objects of the fund should take place on the principle of granting one-third to the General Missionary Fund, one to the General Chapel Fund, and the other to the Educational Fund—this last one-third to be equally divided between the school for children, and the scheme for aiding candidates for our ministry. The recommendations of the committee were adopted by the Conference.

The Report of the committee appointed last year, to prepare resolutions for the present Conference, in regard to a Connexional School, was received, and the Conference decided that such a school for the sons of travelling preachers and other friends, shall be commenced at the beginning of 1864, and that the Rev. J. Petty shall be the first governor thereof. Fuller information will be given in the Minutes of Conference. The Conference likewise decided that the course to be taken for assisting candidates for the ministry shall be considered by the district committees, who shall report their views through their district meetings, to the next Conference. Other important matters of a legislative character, were submitted to the Conference, and some of them, after careful deliberation, were adopted.

The affairs of the chapels were carefully examined where anything required special attention, and such measures were decided on as seemed desirable for promoting the interests of the trust estates. The Connexional funds and property generally, notwithstanding the distress which has prevailed during the year in some parts of the country, were found to be in a gratifying condition.

Several young men were received by the Conference as candidates for the ministry, and others who had completed the term of their probation satisfactorily, were received into the list of approved ministers.

Several sketches of deceased brethren were read and adopted by the Conference, and ordered to be published in the Minutes.

The Rev. M. Lupton was elected a member of the Deed Poll, in place of the late Rev. James Moss.

The Conference sent a congratulatory address to Her Majesty, and another to the Prince of Wales, on the occasion of the marriage of his Royal Highness with the Princess Alexandra of Denmark.

The Conference also expressed its regret at the rejection by so large a majority of the House of Commons, of the bill of Mr. Somes, for the closing of public-houses on the Lord's Day.

The Book Committee was instructed to republish, in a condensed form, the Ecclesiastical History issued by the late venerable Hugh Bourne, and ascertain whether arrangements can be made with his executors for the copyright of his life, so that a cheap edition thereof may be prepared by the committee. A new Sabbath-school Hymn Book is also to be issued as early as convenient, of which there is to be an abridged edition, to sell at 2d. The Chapel Trust Model Deed, which had been prepared by committees previously appointed, was adopted by the Conference, and ordered to be published by the Book Committee; and also an abridgment of it, for general use, is to be prepared by a legal gentlemen, under the direction of the General Committee.

The religious services, both in the open air and in the various chapels of the Primitive Methodists, and those belonging to other churches, whose pulpits were occupied by the delegates, were generally well attended, and a considerable number of souls was converted to God. The weather was very unfavourable for the Camp Meeting; but notwithstanding this, from 12,000 to 14,000 persons are believed to have been present. From 1000 to 1,100 attended the Conference Tea Meeting in the Victoria Hall, on Monday the 8th; and an enthusiastic public meeting was subsequently held, under the presidency of Alderman Meek, of York. A large and interesting Temperance Meeting was held in the same place on Tuesday evening, presided over by Mr. Councillor Flitch.

The Leeds friends entertained the delegates with great hospitality and cordiality, and grateful record of their kindness was made by the Conference.

The delegates will long cherish a recollection of the harmony and good feeling which characterized their business deliberations, of the kindness they experienced at the hands of those who entertained them, and above all, of the gracious influence from heaven, which rested both on the Conferential sittings and the religious services. To God be all the glory.

The numerical State of the Connexion will be seen by the following figures :—

ADDRESSES.

THE ADDRESS OF THE CANADIAN CONFERENCE OF THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH TO THE ENGLISH CONFERENCE OF 1863.

DEAR FATHERS AND BRETHREN,—

Grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied unto you through the Lord Jesus Christ.

We are happy to address you at the close of another Conferential year. While we raise our Ebenezer to the God of all goodness, acknowledging his gracious help, we at the same time would express our thankfulness that we are a part of the great Methodist section of which you are the highest representative; for we believe that Primitive Methodism is one of the agencies which, under God, are destined to bless mankind.

Our late Conference in Toronto has in many respects been one of the best ever held in this land. For attachment to business principles, for Connexional patriotism, for general harmony, and earnest enterprise, it has not been surpassed. The reported increase of members for the year is 579. This is encouraging, when we consider the many who remove from our various stations to settlements of country beyond our borders, and are therefore lost to our church.

It is a pleasure to state that our missionary revenue indicates a healthy, vigorous missionary spirit among our people. Notwithstanding the scarce crops of last year, and the discount to commerce from the effects of war so near us, the support rendered to the mission fund is praiseworthy.

There is an increasing anxiety for our strongest mission stations to become self-supporting. One has been made a circuit this year; and we hope several others will shortly follow the example.

We are glad also to intimate that recently a number of young men of promise have risen up to enter our ministry; and we rejoice in reasons for hope that true piety, earnest zeal, suitable talent, and useful labour, will characterise their career as heralds of mercy to men.

We have not the masses of people to operate upon that you have. Missionary labour and its probable success in a sparsely populated country, among people from all lands, and who have educational attachments to all churches, is another thing than home missionary labours amid the dense population of our father-land. Often our missionary has to take long rides over new tracts of country, through rough roads (that properly speaking should scarcely be called roads), and when he arrives at his appointment probably the congregation is less in number than the weary miles he has travelled; while in many of the older settlements the residents, who have nominally at least belonged to various churches in the old countries, aim at getting a minister and church of their own persuasion.

New parts of the country are constantly opening up before the settler; and as he goes forth fixing his home in the dense forest, clearing it of giant trees, and turning the wilderness into fruitful fields, and then into rising villages and towns, it is very necessary that the Church of Christ should extend in an equal manner. To such portions of the province we are directing special attention.

Touching matters of church arrangements and polity we may in the past, owing to the influence of circumstances as colonists, have been too impulsive; and probably when viewed from your standpoint, it has appeared that a little more caution would have been of service to us; yet, were you here to see and feel the influences by which we are surrounded, you would, we believe, readily make some allowance for us in this respect. Experience is a good teacher when its lessons are improved. All have to learn from it more or less. We are learning, and we hope not in vain.

We have during the last two years been taking up fresh mission ground, and considerably augmenting our staff of missionaries, as you will ascertain from our despatches. All our stations send the whole of their missionary revenue to the General Mission Fund, except in the case of a mission becoming a circuit, when such new circuit has for a season only a proportion of its own missionary money. But while we are doing much to sustain our own missionary operations we greatly need, and shall need in years to come, your sympathy and kind annual grant. Much of our mission field is truly mission ground; and we assure you that Primitive Methodism in Canada never deserved more succour and help than at present. It is now bidding fair to take deep root, and become a vigorous plant in this great land; and with patient culture it will, we hope, abundantly repay all that may be done for it. It would indeed be of great advantage if your grant could be increased. We wish to respond to new calls.

We still ask an interest in your prayers, in addition to your kind co-operation, that God may enable us to do our duty with faithfulness and zeal in this part of his vineyard, by promulging the plain simple gospel of Jesus,—the gospel of a present, free, and full salvation through the blood of the cross.

And now, dear brethren, may the God of all grace bless both you and us, and may he cause his grace to "abound toward us all, that having all sufficiency, always, in all things, we may abound in every good word and work," to the praise and glory of his name. Amen.

JOHN NATTRASS, President.

THOMAS CROMPTON, Secretary.

REPLY OF THE ENGLISH CONFERENCE to the Address of the Canadian Conference, 1863.

Dear Brethren in the Lord,—We have read your address to this Conference with feelings of gladness. We rejoice in the harmony and prosperity which exist among you, and pray they may continue and abound. This Conference is satisfied that experience has taught many of our friends in Canada the importance of maintaining, as fully as possible, the fundamental principles of our discipline and Church government; and while we have, in times past, deplored what seemed to us unadvisable departures therefrom, on the part of some persons, we cannot but congratulate you on the marked improvement which, in this respect, we discern among you. It is gratifying to us that you can report so well of both your general and your missionary work. An increase of 579 members for the year we regard as very cheering, and we hope and pray that your next report may be still more so. The anxiety of your missions to become self-supporting and independent stations we think augurs well for your future prosperity, and the devotion of your missionary revenue to the exclusive aid of distinct missionary operations this Conference regards with special approval. We have again made you a grant from the profits of our Book Room, and though it is rather less than that of last year, we have so many and such pressing claims upon us that we have no alternative.

May we remind you, dear brethren, that the more liberally you support our Book Room, by purchasing and distributing our Connexional Magazines, hymn books, and other literature, the more liberally shall we be enabled to aid you with grants from the profits? It is the wish of the Editor and the Book Committee to make the Magazines interesting and satisfactory to you, and to all our subscribers, and the Conference feels it has a right to ask that all who require Connexional monetary aid shall evince their willingness to support our Connexional book establishment. Let us hope that all our Canadian brethren will take this matter into serious and friendly consideration.

We deeply sympathise with you in all your trials and difficulties, and pray that you may ever be guided by the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night. You have, dear brethren, our earnest sympathy and brotherly affection, and we pray much that God, even our own God, may bless you and make you a thousand times so many as you are. May he increase you with the increase of a flock, and at all times make you healthy and flourishing in his house and service.

harmony and love; great blessings have descended upon us, and, as you will be able to discover in our statistics, we have much reason to rejoice and give thanks to God. On the whole, we have, during the past year, had much cause for gratitude and hope in the midst of a time of almost unprecedented trial for a large portion of our countrymen, through the fearful American conflict, and the consequent embarrassment to our trade. Public sympathy has been remarkably displayed, and we rejoice to find our Canadian and other colonists have so much concern for the mother country, as they have recently exhibited. Our own people generally have responded nobly to the appeals made to them by the General Committee in behalf of their suffering brethren in the cotton manufacturing districts. Herein we rejoice, yea, and will rejoice. And now, dear brethren, let us assure you, we have you much in our hearts and our prayers; and your temporal and spiritual prosperity we devoutly and incessantly desiderate. At all times we shall be most happy to hear of your well-doing, and of the piety, numerical prosperity, and harmony of your churches. All we can do to aid you it will be our pleasure to do, and we pray that ye may abound yet more and more in faith, labour, love, zeal, knowledge, and all new covenant blessings. In behalf, and by order of the Conference,

WILLIAM ANTILFF.

THE ADDRESS OF THE CONFERENCE TO THE COLONIAL AND HOME STATIONS.

Dear brethren in the Lord,—Grace, mercy, and peace be multiplied unto you, from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ. It affords us no common gratification to be permitted again to address you from our annual Conference on things pertaining to salvation, and which are interesting alike to you and ourselves. You will be glad to hear that the sittings of our Conference have been characterised by great harmony, urbanity, and spiritual feeling. "The Lord of hosts is with us, and the God of Jacob is our refuge." As said the dying Wesley, so say we, "The best of all, God is with us!" The hours of business for the full Conference have been this year unusually short, but by the appointment of several efficient committees, and the quick but orderly despatch of business in the Conference, a larger amount of business than usual has been got through, in less than the usual time. The religious services have generally been well attended and well sustained, and a considerable number of precious souls has been brought into the liberty of the sons of God. To God be all the glory! You will learn with pleasure that the number of members now in the Connexion is reported at 146,581, being an increase for the year of 5,396. We have now 202,631 dear children and youths as scholars in our Sabbath-schools, being an increase for the year of 13,574. Our Sabbath-school teachers number 36,610, being an increase of 1,853. Our local preachers now number 12,783, being 369 more than last year. That useful body of labourers, our class-leaders, now counts up to 8,733, being an increase of 356. We should be glad to find our members increase as rapidly as our scholars—and why not?—and our class-leaders as rapidly as our local preachers or even our Sabbath-school teachers; and again we say, why not? In by-gone years this was very much the case, and we cannot but think it may be again. May the Lord hasten the day! Our travelling preachers have now reached the number of 830, being 54 more than last year. And this increase is beyond filling up the twelve vacancies occasioned by the deaths in our ministerial ranks, and the additional ones caused by the cessation of several from the regular work, either on the ground of failing health, or for other causes. Ah! it is a solemn thought that twelve of our honoured brethren have the last twelve months—on an average one a month—been summoned to their rest. Well, "they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them." Many of them had won a high position among us, and were much honoured and beloved; but their work is done, and they now reap their reward. May we be also ready, for in an hour when we think not the Son of man may come. It is deeply touching to reflect that not fewer than 2,000 of our brethren and sisters have been summoned hence from the ranks of our membership during the past year. How many families have been thrown into mourning—how many husbands and wives have been bereaved of the partners of their joys and sorrows—how many children have been bereft of one or both parents—how many aged parents have had to mourn the departure of loved sons or daughters! The amount of mental agony which survivors find indicated in the figures above given who shall compute? But, then, who shall say what is the amount of happiness the 2,000 departed ones now possess? And which of us would call back to earth those loved ones of our own who have been taken from the evil to come? The Lord does all things well. Let us "hear the rod, and him that appointed it;" and say, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth to him good." "Father! thy will be done."

Our Connexional chapels now number 2,600, there being an increase of 81 for the year. The other places of worship have decreased 85; there being now only 3,457 to compare with 3,542 for last year. And although when we subtract the increase of Connexional chapels from the above decrease, we find the net decrease to be only 4, yet we cannot feel that this is satisfactory. We ought to maintain our ground at every place, if at all possible, and go on increasing our total number of places every year. Let us see to this matter very carefully in all our stations the ensuing Connexional year. In our Sabbath-schools we rejoice to report a tolerable increase, namely 128; the total number now being 2,450. On the whole, considering the depression which has been experienced in England, and some of our colonies, during the past year, we may well give God thanks and take courage that our prosperity has been what has now been noticed. But O, for richer baptisms of divine power to come down on all our stations, and especially on all our office-bearers, the coming year, that greater accessions to our ranks may be reported, and above all a vastly augmented revenue of glory be placed at the feet of our glorified Redeemer! Souls, precious, immortal, blood-bought souls, are still perishing! Let us "not sleep as do others," but awake, and gird ourselves for renewed combat with the great foe of God and man, and rushing into the thick of the fight may we henceforth plant our colours on every citadel of the enemy, and pluck many laurels to place around the head of our exalted Lord. "It may be done—it shall be done"—let every reader exclaim; and assuredly the gates of hell shall be vanquished, and the sword of the Lord and of our Gideon shall do valiantly.

Many important regulations have been passed by the Conference which you will find duly chronicled in the pages of the Conference Minutes. Your kindly co-operation is specially requested on behalf of our Jubilee movement. The time draws nigh for winding up the accounts, and we would fain hope that all our travelling and local preachers, and the stations generally, will take a lively interest in getting in all outstanding subscriptions, and reporting the same to the proper parties for official publication. The Conference is grateful to those friends who have honourably and liberally aided in this business, and trusts that all, who possibly can do so, will come forward with their contributions before the accounts be finally closed, which is to be the case next March. The decisions of the Conference on the allocation of the funds will be found in the Minutes.

The African mission has not hitherto been opened—partly because the needful funds have not been forthcoming, and partly because the Committee has been unable to obtain the men for the work. But the Conference indulges a hope that the day of deliverance from these difficulties draweth nigh, and that ere long on four out of the five great divisions of our globe, Primitive Methodism will have secured a footing. We rejoice that our colonial stations, in general, have the last twelve months enjoyed a moderate degree of prosperity, and though we deplore that one or two of those stations have been disturbed by factious conduct, yet we hope and pray that each and all may soon realise a large outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and a blessed ingathering of precious souls.

Let all our brethren, both in the colonies and at home, "follow after peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." "Let brotherly love continue." "A new commandment," said the Saviour, "I give unto you, That ye love one another: as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." May this commandment be universally and cheerfully obeyed among us! Beloved brethren, let us urge you to increased care of the doctrines preached among you, and to be watchful lest the enemy sow tares among you while men sleep. Let the grand old truths to which you have been long accustomed still hold a chief place in your ministrations and services. Forget not that all men are sinners, and that the whole man is sinful; nor that all men are redeemed, and the whole man is redeemed. Hold to the doctrines of man's ruin and Christ's redemption, tell them they need a Saviour, but that the gospel shows one, and "a great one;" one who is "mighty to save." Tell them they must repeat or perish, believe or be damned. Tell them everywhere that while without Christ they can do nothing, they may do all through his strengthening them. Preach the work of the Spirit, and the full salvation of the Gospel. Rest on the inspiration of the blessed Bible, and the prevalent intercession of the one Mediator. And O! live in the enjoyment of entire holiness, and the abiding witness of the Spirit; keep up family and closet prayer and the reading of the Scriptures; train up the young in the way they should go, that when they are old they may not depart from it. Avoid the trash which is flowing incessantly from the press, and study the best books within your reach. Be thankful and humble in the midst of what God has done for you. Follow on to know the Lord more fully; and let your light so shine before men, that they seeing your good works may glorify your Father who is in heaven. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." "Walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing." "And may the very God of peace sanctify you wholly, and preserve you blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Our sympathies and prayers are with you all, both those who are near us and those who are far away beyond the seas, and your prosperity, temporal and spiritual, will ever gladden our hearts. You are, dear brethren, in our hearts to live and to die with you. May those who have to suffer adversity be graciously helped from heaven, and may those who enjoy prosperity be kept humble and Christ-like. And when a few more years are come, and we all go the way of all flesh, may we together surround the throne of the Lamb, and ascribe to him united and ceaseless praise. Amen. On behalf, and by order of the Conference. WILLIAM ANTILIFF.

TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,—We, the Ministers and Lay Representatives of the religious denomination called the Primitive Methodist Connexion, which now numbers 146,581 members, being now assembled in the Town Hall, Leeds, for transacting the business of our churches in Annual Conference, beg leave to lay before your Majesty our loyal congratulations on the accession to your Royal House of the Illustrious Princess Alexandra, of Denmark, by the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

It affords this Conference great pleasure to think that the oppressive grief of your Majesty under the afflictive bereavement which in the order of Divine Providence you were called to sustain in the early decease of his Royal Highness the late Prince Consort, is in some degree mitigated by the event which has not only brought an increase of happiness to your illustrious family, but of loyal gratification to all classes of your Majesty's subjects. And we earnestly and devoutly pray that your Majesty may long be spared to fill the Throne you have hitherto so worthily occupied, and to rejoice in the happiness of the Royal pair to whom you have presented so excellent an example. And when it shall please Divine Providence to call his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to fill the exalted position your Majesty now occupies at the head of this great nation, may your Majesty be found prepared in laying down an earthly crown, to receive a heavenly one, through the alone merits of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

May it please your Majesty,

We are your Majesty's loyal and devoted subjects, in behalf and by order of the Conference,

WILLIAM ANTILIFF, President,
JAMES GARNER, Secretary.

Leeds Town Hall, June 8th, 1863.

Whitehall, 17th June, 1863.

SIR,—I have had the honour to lay before the Queen the loyal and dutiful Address of the Ministers and Lay Representatives of the Primitive Methodist Connexion on the occasion of the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and I have to inform you that Her Majesty was pleased to receive the Address very graciously.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,
G. GREY.

Rev. W. Antliff.

TO H. R. H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS,—We the ministers, and lay representatives, of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, (which numbers 146,581 members,) now in annual Conference assembled, beg leave to lay before your Royal Highness our loyal and hearty congratulations on your recent happy union with the Princess Alexandra of Denmark. We rejoice in the fact that the nation at large, as well as ourselves, see so much ground of hope for the future of this great nation in the choice you have made. It is our earnest prayer that the virtues by which your royal and illustrious parents were distinguished during their united life, may shine with equal brightness in yourself and your Royal Consort, and that your bereaved mother, our beloved Queen, may for many long years have her domestic happiness promoted by witnessing that of your Royal Highnesses and all the members of the royal family.

May the All-wise governor of this world, guide the footsteps of your Royal Highness along the exalted pathway you are called to tread, and enable you to set before the people of this nation, and of others, an example like that left by your lamented royal father; and at the last, after you shall have served your generation according to the Divine will, raise you to a place at his own right hand, through our only Redeemer and Mediator, the Lord Jesus Christ.

May it please your Royal Highness, we are with sentiments of true loyalty and devotion, your Royal Highness's humble servants, in behalf of the Conference.

WILLIAM ANTILIFF, President.
JAMES GARNER, Secretary.

Town Hall, Leeds, June 8th, 1863.

Marlborough House,
June 26th, 1862.

LIEUT. GENERAL KNOLLYS has had the honour of laying before the Prince of Wales the Address of the Ministers and Lay Representatives of the Primitive Methodist Connexion on his marriage. His Royal Highness desires to return his best thanks for their congratulations; and at the same time to assure them how sensible he is of their sentiments of loyalty and attachment towards the Queen, and of their affectionate good wishes towards the Princess and himself.

Rev. W. Antliff, President.

MR. SOMES' REPLY TO THE MINUTE OF CONFERENCE, No. 21.

June 15th, 1863.

SIR,—I am this day in receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, which has been forwarded from Hull. The resolution passed at the Primitive Methodist Conference is very gratifying to me, and will encourage me to persevere with a similar measure on some future occasion, when I shall hope for better success.

I am, Sir,

Yours faithfully,

JOSEPH SOMES.

Mr. E. Bishop.

LITERARY NOTICES

A Bible Dictionary; being a comprehensive Digest of the History and Antiquities of the Hebrews and neighbouring nations: The Natural History, Geography, and Literature of the Sacred Writings, with reference to the latest Researches. By the Rev. JAMES AUSTIN BASTOW. New edition. London: Longman, Brown, Green, Longman, and Roberts. 1859.

It is well known to many of our readers that in consequence of certain unsatisfactory articles in Mr. Bastow's dictionary, the Conference, some years ago, appointed a committee to review the work, and publish their opinion in the magazine as to the doctrines held by the author in those articles. In consequence thereof a review was issued upwards of twelve months since, in which some of the sentiments contained in the dictionary were strongly animadverted upon. The result was that the Book Committee felt called upon to decline advertising or selling the work unless its author should have revised the more objectionable articles. To this, however, Mr. Bastow consented, and the articles on the "Atonement," and the "Trinity," being deemed the most dissatisfactory, he subjected to a careful revision. And now in its amended state the work is again sold through our Book Room, and advertised in course of trade. As a member of the committee above named we have great satisfaction in expressing our pleasure at witnessing the frankness with which Mr. B. has executed the task of pruning off some of the most offensive verbiage with which the two doctrines referred to were disfigured. The articles as they now read are tolerably satisfactory. And though we trust that when the present edition of the dictionary shall have been sold out, the author will submit the entire work to a very careful revision, yet we have no hesitation in giving the work as a whole our recommendation, even in its present state. Of course we cannot endorse all the views expressed by the author, but we deem the Dictionary the best that is available for our readers in general. It is unquestionably a monument to the industry, intelligence, and earnestness of its author; and Mr. B. deserves well of the readers of the Bible, and the students of Biblical literature, for placing such assistance as his dictionary contains, within the reach of all. We hope this edition will soon be out of print, and that a new and improved one will then be in great request.

The Complete Works of Richard Sibbes, D.D., Master of Catherine Hall, Cambridge; Preacher of Gray's Inn, London. Vol. IV. Containing Treatises and Sermons from the Epistles to the Corinthians, viz: A Christian's Portion; The Spiritual Man's Aim; Precious Promises and Privileges; &c., &c. Edinburgh: James Nichol. London: James Nisbet and Co. Dublin: W. Robertson. 1863.

ANOTHER of Mr. Nichols' series, and of the Silvery Sibbes' valuable treatises. Rich in theological stores—a very The-saurus for the student. Let allowance be made for the occasional verbosity by which these old writers were characterised, and for the smattering of Calvinism in which many of them delighted, and any one with a taste for religious thought and literature will find their works a treat. As we have before said, we recommend Sibbes to our readers with great satisfaction.

The Book of Life, and Expression of the Tongue. The first being a complete formula of the Service and family Devotion, adapted for the use of the sick, and for those who attend them in their dying moments; the latter being prayers and supplications to be said on visiting the burial-ground. Also a selection of Meral Reflections, with a compendium of the several laws and ceremonies to be observed on such mournful occasions. Edited and translated by Rev. B. H. ASHER, author of "Initiation of Youth," &c. Third edition. London: Published by the author, 9, Magdalen Row, Goodman's Fields, E. 1863.

THIS is a Hebrew work intended for the behoof of members of the Jewish persuasion. But there is a pretty good English translation, by means of which a person unacquainted with the venerable original may familiarise himself with the contents of the book. The editor has laboured for the instruction of his co-religionists in the articles of faith and services of worship, and deserves well of them for his labours. Many pious sentiments are here found clothed in a rich and antique dress, and any one wishful to know what are the thoughts of a pious son of Abraham on the greatest subjects within the compass of human minds, may be assured the present volume will meet his wishes.

The Divine Mystery of Peace. By JAMES BALDWIN BROWN, B.A., Minister of Clayland's Chapel, Clapham Road, London. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, 27, Paternoster Row. 1863.

THIS is a volume of sermons, the subjects of which are:—The Disciples—The Father—The Lamb of God—The Holy Ghost, the Comforter—The Conqueror of the World. And as may be inferred by the titles of the several subjects, the generic title is well selected. Mr. Brown is thoughtful and chaste as a writer, but he has occasionally laid himself open to suspicion as to the orthodoxy of some of his views of truth. In the present little volume, however, he has spoken out in favour of the orthodox interpretation of some of the leading articles of evangelic teaching. We are glad to find him so outspoken, as all mincing of the matter where great cardinal doctrines are concerned is much to be deprecated. We should all have a care of removing the ancient landmarks; and the less of Germanising novelty in these days the better. In regard to the fundamentals of Gospel truth the old couplet may be adopted:—

"What is true is not new;
And what is new is not true."

Mr. Brown's present book will be found worthy of his talents and piety, and its readers will find in it much to please and profit them.

Early Blossoms: or, Memorials of a Minister's Family, five of whom died within fourteen months. By their Father, WILLIAM FULTON. Third edition. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, 27, Paternoster Row; R. Davies, Conference Office, Sutton Street. 1863.

FRAGRANT, beautiful, and exhilarating—teaching us how to live and how to die. Let parents and children read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest the contents of this excellent book.

A Report of the Primitive Methodist Metropolitan Missionary Meeting, held in the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, May 12th, 1863. Alderman Meek, of York, in the Chair. Published by the General Missionary Committee. The Profits will be appropriated to the Missionary Fund. London: R. Davies, Sutton Street, Commercial Road, E.; and may be had of any Primitive Methodist travelling preacher. Price Fourpence.

THIS Report has been prepared and published under the supervision of the General Missionary Committee, and the profits of its sale will be appropriated in aid of the General Missionary Fund. It is a full and faithful record of a most important and interesting meeting, and, no doubt, it will be read by thousands with very great delight. The speakers on the occasion were the Rev. P. Pugh, of Tunstall, Rev. C. C. McKechnie, of Alledale, Rev. Newman Hall, of Surrey Chapel, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of the Tabernacle, and Rev. W. Antliff, of London. The general report was prepared and read by the Rev. T. Penrose, and the financial statement by the Rev. M. Lupton, the General Secretary. Several other brethren took part in the proceedings; and though the weather was very unfavourable, a very large and enthusiastic meeting was held—about 5,000 persons being present. Those friends who read the reports of the meetings held the two preceding years will, we judge, avail themselves of the first opportunity to peruse this, and we trust that many other persons will obtain and read this one, and that its readers generally will be stimulated to renewed devotedness to the cause of Christian missions, which is emphatically the cause of Christ.

The Good Man: as exemplified by the Life and Character of the late Mr. William Devenport, of Birmingham. With brief reflections on life, death, judgment, and immortality. By the Rev. JAMES PRITCHARD. London: R. Davies; and may be had of the Primitive Methodist Ministers. Price 1s. 4d., pp. 178, cloth lettered. 1863.

THE biography of a devoted and excellent man, by one who knew him intimately, and who wrote his life on purpose to do good to others thereby. The book is full of interest and capable of doing much good. For,

"Lives of good men all remind us,
We may make our lives sublime,
And departing leave behind us,
Footprints on the sands of time."

Let our readers resolve to follow W. Devenport as he followed Christ, and here and hereafter they will be blessed and a blessing. Mr. Pritchard has thrown into his narrative many valuable hints, reflections, and lessons, which greatly enhance the value of the biography. We hope the circulation of the work will be equal to its merits, and then great good will be the result.

The Substance of an Address, delivered by James Pritchard, in the Bilston Chapel, at the Tunstall District Meeting, 1863, in the presence of a large congregation, to John Clarkson, William Forth, and John Tristram, candidates for admission into the regular Ministry of the Primitive Methodist Connexion; and published by request of the District Meeting. London: R. Davies. And may be had of any of the travelling preachers. Price Fourpence, pp. 40. 1863.

A LENGTHY address, full of wise and weighty counsels. Let our young preachers ponder this pamphlet, and they will find their account in so doing. Such publications can scarcely be too numerous, or too often and generally read. We recommend this little work for general reading and study, both to travelling and local preachers.

"Methodism as it is," with some of its Antecedents, its Branches and Disruption, &c., &c. Parts III. and IV. Fourpence each. London: W. Reed, 15. Creed Lane, Ludgate Street, E.C. 1863.

We noticed the first and second parts of this work a short time ago, and have only now to add that the work is fraught with intelligent lessons, as well as historic lore. It is written from a Reformer's stand-point, and will not pass muster, in some quarters, unchallenged. The information will be generally acceptable, however, and we hope the spirit of Christian candour will be cultivated throughout. The author is an old and practised hand, we opine; and he has learnt many a thing in his day of which some persons are in blissful ignorance. We hope his contributions to Methodist literature will continue to be useful when his days shall have been numbered.

Words to the Wise. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, 27, Paternoster Row. Twopence.

A CHARMING little pamphlet on the highest theme—the work of winning souls. No novice has written it, and a man must be worse than a novice who, without profit, can read it. It is adapted to do good service to preachers, office-bearers, and members of Christian churches generally. May it have a wide circulation!

The Gardener's Weekly Magazine, and Floricultural Cabinet. Conducted by S. HISSARD, Esq. Part V. Vol. V. May, 1863. Price Fivepence. London: Allen, 20, Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row, E.C.

A USEFUL magazine for our country friends who wish to be posted up in matters pertaining to horticulture and floriculture. The engravings are good, and the letter-press is passable.

The Liberator. A Monthly Journal of the Society for the Liberation of Religion from State Patronage and Control. Twopence per number.

THIS serial holds on its way, but we cannot say that it grows stronger and stronger. Its articles are for the most part piquant and pungent, and its object must commend itself to numbers who belong to the Nonconforming churches of Christendom. When will the day arrive that the followers of the Nazarene shall learn to respect each others' honest convictions, and to speak the truth always in love—using soft words but hard arguments? There is much to learn, and perhaps more to unlearn, before we all walk by the same rule, and mind the same thing. Nevertheless we have faith in the maxim—Magna est veritas et prevalebit. We must "learn to labour and wait." For those, however, who wish to see what is doing towards effecting the liberation of the Church from State control in this nation, the Liberator is a sine quâ non.

"Old Jonathan:" or, the District and Parish Helper. One Penny. Published Monthly. London: Collingridge, "City Press," 117, Aldersgate Street, E.C. January, April, June.

We find "Old Jonathan" holds his position in the midst of the jostle of this busy city and country. He has strong claims to favour, and has our good word.

O B I T U A R Y.

MARTHA HUDSON, was born at Copster Hill, near Oldham, in the county of Lancaster, July 29th, 1840. Her father, who died some years ago, was a member and local preacher with us. Her mother, who is still living, has been a member for many years; hence, Martha was blessed in early life with the example of pious parents.

When about twelve years of age, she was converted to God under a sermon which she heard preached by a Wesleyan local preacher. Immediately after this happy change, she united with the Primitive Methodist Society, and remained a steady and consistent member up to the time of her death. In the month of May, 1861, she entered the marriage state with brother W. Hudson, one of our local preachers; but that union was destined soon to be dissolved by death; for in the month of April, 1862, after having given birth to her first-born, her physical frame, which was never very robust, rapidly sank, and in a few days she was numbered with the dead. During her last illness, she was graciously sustained by that religion which she had before embraced. To her mother she said, "I am going to leave you, but there are more of our family on the other side of Jordan than on this." This she said in allusion to her father and three sisters who had gone before her, all of whom left a testimony behind, that they had departed to be with Christ, which is far better. To her husband, when speaking to her respecting the state of her mind, she exclaimed, "It is all glory, glory, through the precious blood of Jesus." She then exhorted him to be faithful and useful, and again they should meet,

"Where a day without night,
We shall feast in his sight;
And eternity seem as a day."

The last words she was heard to utter were "Open the gates!" when her happy spirit took its flight to the paradise of God, in the twenty-second year of her age. May the writer and reader meet her in heaven!

J. DUMBELL.

Died at Newfield, in the Wolsingham Circuit, April 15th, 1862, R. HARDY. I am not able to give any particular account of his youthful days, only that when he was very young, he lost his parents, and was brought up by his uncle, a very kind friend to him. He was brought to God some time ago at Newfield, where he died. Brother Hardy was very useful in the singing department, also in the Sabbath-school and the prayer-meetings. And now he has gone to his reward, and has left a wife and one child behind.

H. J. A.

JANE RUTHERFORD, of Wallbottle, in the Newcastle-on-Tyne Circuit, left this world of suffering and conflict, May 14th, 1862. Respecting the early career of our deceased sister, we know but little; suffice it to say that she lived in ignorance of the great salvation until a few weeks before her death, when through the instructions and prayers of a few pious friends, the light of Divine truth broke in upon her dark soul. Her convictions of sin and danger were so keen, that though she suffered much bodily weakness, she arose out of bed and bent her knees to ask for that mercy she had so long despised; and there she wept and prayed, and believed and obtained pardon. From that moment she was enabled to rejoice in God, having in possession the peace that passeth all understanding, the joy which is unspeakable, and the hope that is full of glory. In this happy state of mind she continued until the end, constantly praising the Lord, telling all who visited her what great things the Lord had done for her soul, and longing for that glorious rest of which she enjoyed a blessed foretaste. As she drew near the confines of the eternal world, her mind was peaceful and serene, and occasionally she was heard to say, "Weep not for me, I am going to a better place." Those who attended her, say they never witnessed a more triumphant death.

J. RICHARDSON.

JOSEPH TAYLOR, was born at Honley in Yorkshire, on the 9th of February, 1789, and died at Staleybridge, on the 18th of May, 1862.

From an early age he was the subject of Divine impressions, but he did not fully consecrate himself to God, till he was about thirty. In Honley, the place of his nativity, about forty-three years ago, he was brought to a saving acquaintance with God through the agency of the Primitive Methodists. After having tasted of "the pleasures Jesus sends," he said to his wife, "Oh, taste and see that the Lord is good, and come with me and see what a loving people I have found." And he never swerved from his original purpose. He was often heard to say in his class, "I wish to be one among you on earth, and in heaven." He loved the brethren, and he was greatly beloved by all who knew his moral worth.

As a Christian he was unassuming and humble; he considered himself less than the least of all saints. The last time he was at his class, he said he was weaker than ever; but when he was weak, then was he strong! He was consistent in his profession; like Daniel, he served God continually. He often said, "O God, my heart is fixed." He saw the importance of being a practical Christian. He was a lover of his closet, and when able, entered it three times a day. He set a good example before his children, and had the pleasure of seeing many of them brought to God.

He was a great lover of the means of grace, and a great admirer of plain apostolic preaching; he cared but little for the flowers of rhetoric, but he hungered for the fruit of "The Tree of Life;" his soul fed on fruit not on flowers. The Bible to his heart was dear! He could say in the language of Pollok:—

"Most wondrous Book! bright candle of the Lord!

Star of eternity! the only Star
By which the bark of man could navigate
The sea of life, and gain the coast of bliss
Securely; only Star which rose on time,
And on its dark and troubled billows threw a ray
Of heaven's own light, and to the hills of God Pointed the sinner's eye."

His affliction was short; he gradually sank into the arms of Jesus. He was confined to his house about six weeks; and was compelled to take his bed a fortnight before his death, and for several days was not able to speak; but he often waved his hand in token of victory through the blood of the Lamb. He died without a groan, leaving a pleasing testimony behind him, that he has gone to be with Christ which is far better. May all his friends, our readers, and the writer meet him in heaven. Amen. D. TUTOR.

SARAH HOLDEN, daughter of Thomas and Hannah Holden, Manchester First Circuit, was born at Todd Hall, Haslingden, Lancashire, October 24th, 1821. When she was about five years of age her parents removed to Manchester; and her father being a class-leader in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, sent her early to Jersey-street Sunday school, where she became the subject of religious impressions, felt herself a sinner, and sought and obtained forgiveness of sin through the blood of Jesus, in the year 1836. Having obtained a sense of the Divine favour, she continued steadfast in the use of the means of grace, until death terminated her earthly career on the 1st of June, 1862,—aged forty years.

She experienced the word of God to be a great comfort to her in her affliction, especially portions of it which she had committed to memory when a girl in the Sabbath-school. The writer, being her leader, often witnessed her tears and prayers for the salvation of her mother and the rest of the family who were unsaved. And she personally exhorted them when she was about to depart, to give their hearts to God, and meet her in heaven. When asked by her sister if she should like to recover, she answered, "No, only for mother's sake." During several years of her mother's widowhood, Sarah had been her councillor and comforter in all her grief and trial. Shortly before her departure she had a remarkable dream, in which she thought she saw her sainted father, who promised shortly to come for her to share the happiness which those enjoy who are for ever blessed. Her conduct gave proof of her sincerity of heart; her attendance on the means of grace was constant; and her character was marked by stability and consistency. As a daughter she was affectionate and dutiful, and much beloved by the whole of the family, who now mourn their loss—while with resignation they say, "Thy will be done." S. RAINE.

Died in the Coventry Circuit, June 2nd, 1862, JOHN HOBBS, aged seventy-one years. Of his parentage we know nothing, and of his early life we can give no precise account. He was bound an apprentice to the "plush weaving" at Coventry, where he had to endure both ill-usage and severe privation. He was brought to a knowledge of himself as a sinner about the year 1822, and continued a laborious and consistent member of the Church until the period of his death. At the period of his conversion he attached himself to the Sabbath-school connected with the Primitive Methodist cause in Coventry. He was indeed a lover of Sabbath-schools, and in his zeal for their welfare he did not confine his efforts to Coventry alone, but visited a locality in Foleshill, an adjoining parish, and went from house to house until a school was established; and in this place at the present time there is a flourishing society.

He was indeed a peacemaker; if any person's mind was pained, no matter whether it was a poor and humble member, or an official, he would not rest until the wound was healed, but he would put forth every effort to reconcile and comfort the mind. He always delighted in visiting the sick, and spent as much time as possible in praying with them. He was sought not only for spiritual, but temporal advice. For the last two years of his life he was confined at home, having nothing to sustain him but a very small pittance from the parish, and what the hard times would allow the friends to give him, which was very little. And although suffering from an asthmatic complaint, he never murmured, and was only fearful lest he should seem too impatient to be freed from his life of suffering and poverty. The Lord was very gracious to him, and sustained him under his troubles, and answered his prayers. When attempting to dress himself on June 2nd, he fell backwards on his bed, from which he never rose again. On the same day, his happy spirit took its flight to join the ranks of the redeemed in heaven.

J. STOCKHALL.

NANCY AUTLY was blessed with a pious mother who instructed her in the things of God, and directed her youthful steps in the way in which she ought to walk. At what age she experienced a change of heart the writer has no means of ascertaining. But that she was converted to God is certain, as her subsequent conduct proved. She in the early part of her life was united in church fellowship with the Wesleyan Methodists, and whilst among that people she, with many others, went from Clitheroe to attend the opening of a new chapel in Burnley, and as she was going along the streets our people were singing, and she united with the procession, and such a holy and hallowed influence rested upon her, that her soul was filled with holy delight. She then stopped at the preaching service in the open air, and such were her heavenly enjoyments among our people that day, that when she returned to Clitheroe, she united with our infant society in that town, and remained a steady member among us until the day of her death. Her Christian deportment was as becometh the Gospel of Christ, she was stable in all her ways; and she strictly attended to the injunction of the Apostle Paul, "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man can see the Lord." But the brightest lights have to be removed, and the most useful members are taken from the church militant to the church triumphant. So the Lord in His infinite wisdom thought proper to take our sister home to himself in heaven. During the winter of 1861 her health began to decline; and every time I paid her a visit, it was obvious she would soon be an inhabitant of the house appointed for all living. But she knew in whom she had believed, her confidence was strong in the Lord, and a bright prospect of immortality was unfolded before her, and all her answers to inquiries respecting her state of mind were satisfactory. She was happy in God and entered into rest June 7th, 1862, aged sixty-five.

S. STOBBS.

SOPHIA HOLLIDAY died at Bishopstone, in the Faringdon Station, June 8th, 1862, in the forty-second year of her age. In early life she was favourably impressed by the moral conduct of her father, which strikingly contrasted with the ungodly life of her mother. But Sophia did not rest satisfied with the mere external, the shadow of religion, she successfully sought its regenerating and sanctifying power. To this course she was led partly by the preaching of the Wesleyan Methodists. She subsequently removed with her husband to Bishopstone, where she identified herself with the Primitive Methodist Society, and maintained during eleven years, and to the time of her death, an unblemished reputation. The Bible was her companion and treasure. She had no taste for light reading; while many persons spend hours of precious time in poring over the pages of a sickly sentimentalism, or fictitious, polluting narrative, our sister read with zest and profit the "Book Divine." Her love of class meetings, the sincerity, earnestness, and fervour with which she performed her family and other religious duties, deserve notice. To sum up the whole in a few words, we would state that Sophia Holliday was a simple-hearted, honest, devout Christian. The disease which brought her to the grave was attended by the most agonizing suffering, with few and short intermissions. Never will the writer forget one occasion when he entered her room during one of her dreadful paroxysms; she looked upon him with a tearful eye, and said, "Sir, is it wrong to pray for deliverance from such severe pain? I would not murmur or be impatient, but willingly wait all the days of my appointed time; but such is the severity of my sufferings that I feel as though I could not refrain praying for release." She was assured that her tender-hearted, sympathising High Priest would sustain and comfort her, and that soon he would take her to the region of health and beauty, the tearless climes of unending day. A short period passed, and then deliverance came. She fixed her eye upon her husband, who has been for years a Primitive Methodist local preacher, and said, "Meet me in heaven." In a few hours after she expired. The writer improved her death by preaching to a numerous and deeply affected audience, and prays that the impressions then made may not be evanescent, but lead to permanent good. May the bereaved husband and two motherless children be divinely supported, and guided by God's counsel to glory.

J. WRIGHT.

JOHN CARDEN was born at Overton, May, 1831, and died at Erbstock in the Oswestry Circuit, June 9th, 1862. For twenty-six years he lived "without God and without hope in the world." A short time before he attained to this age he providentially went to live with his brother-in-law and sister (Mr. and Mrs. Haynes) at Erbistock, who were then members of our society at Overton. This led to his conversion to God, for they persuaded him to attend with them the means of grace at the above place, where in the month of February, 1857, he at a class-meeting penitently and believingly sought and obtained salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ. He forthwith joined our society at Overton, but when we put Erbistock on our plan (the place where he lived), and formed a society here, he became a member, and he continued one until his death. For about five years he was an exemplary and admirable Christian, and a loyal Primitive Methodist. He honoured religion and glorified God by the holiness of his life and the rectitude of his conduct. For from the time he gave his heart to God and commenced his service, he invariably pursued the path of holy obedience toward God and of "good will toward men." He was the subject of strong temptations, but he firmly resisted every tempter. By divine grace he was so strengthened that he was enabled to crucify the old man with the affections and lusts. His genuine piety and moral character are admired and applauded by survivors. He was a regular and punctual attendant on the means of grace. He was a humble and teachable hearer of the Gospel. When he related his Christian experience in a lovefeast or a class-meeting, it was always characterized by sentiments of his unworthiness and of an implicit faith in Christ. He was a man of fervent and successful prayer, for in prayer he generally prevailed with the Lord and obtained his blessing, and brought a gracious and glorious influence down into the meeting. As a labouring man he liberally and cheerfully contributed to all the funds of the Connexion. He was of it a faithful member, an admirer of its discipline, and a respecter and lover of its ministers.

The affliction which extinguished the lamp of life and ended his earthly journey was complicated, severe, and protracted, but he unflinchingly endured the fire which burnt so long and intensely. The purport of his hope in affliction and death, he expressed to his friends in the following and similar ejaculations—"I know where I am going," and "I am going home." A short time before he died, he said to his brother-in-law, "The battle is fought, the victory is just won, and I am nearly at home." When it became evident that he was nigh unto death, his sister asked him to signify that he had the victory over the last foe by raising his hand if he was able. So when he was dying he lifted up his hand and waved it round and round in token of the happy and complete victory which Jesus gave him in the final conflict. His affectionate sister watched him "walk through the valley of the shadow of death," and with mingled emotions of joy and sorrow she inquired of him, if he "could praise the Lord now?" With his gasping breath he replied, "Aye." Soon after he articulated this word, his deathless spirit was translated to regions of unclouded day, to join with saints and angels to sing "a nobler, sweeter song." L. WEAVER.

ELIZABETH, the beloved wife of Henry MARRIOTT, local preacher, Downham Circuit, fell asleep in Jesus, at Outwell, June 13th, 1862. Our departed sister commenced her mortal career in the year 1813, and lived according to the course of this world till 1835, when she was made a happy recipient of saving grace through faith in Jesus Christ. She at once united with the Wesleyans, with whom she continued in church fellowship till about fifteen years since, when she with her husband removed to Welney, where they both united with our society. During her residence at this place she was prevented from attending the means of grace; the unhappy consequence was she declined in piety. In this state of mournful declension she remained till about eight years ago, when through divine assistance, she resolved on, and made a full consecration of herself to the Lord; and from that time to the day of her death she remained a firm and consistent member with us. Her devotion to God's cause was intense and unwavering; its prosperity she desired, and its adversity she deplored. Nothing so excited her passion and delighted her soul as to hear of the weal of Zion, and the discomfiture of the powers of darkness. About the welfare of the Church and the conversion of sinners she would converse with freedom and rapture, and when health permitted she was always to be found engaged in good earnest in the work of the Lord. Her respect for and love to God's servants was unfeigned and constant. The company of Christ's ministers was to her a religious feast, while she deemed it not merely a duty, but a pleasure to minister to their necessities. Many of our preachers, both itinerant and local, will not soon forget the cordiality and joy with which she welcomed them to her dwelling for the purpose of sharing her hospitality. So deeply engrafted in her bosom was this principle that one of her dying exhortations to her daughter was, "Be sure and be kind to the preachers." We do not wish to insinuate that our sister had no failings. She had. "To err is human." Among her chief failings was excitability of temper, to which she was apt to give way. This cost her many a tear and many a heartfelt struggle. Nevertheless her excellences were numerous.

For about five years prior to her decease she was the subject of severe afflictions at intervals, and for the last nine months she was with us on the earth she was wholly laid aside. During this time she was strongly assailed by the adversary: for hours together she was under a dismal cloud, but her confidence remained unshaken. On one occasion when the writer interrogated her about her acceptance with God, she emphatically said, "That matter is settled;" "It is all right;" "I rest my all on the blood of Christ, and I shall never sink." For some time she felt it hard work to give her family up, but grace reigned at last, the strong man was overcome, the tie of overfond attachment was severed, and she claimed the victory, saying, with much emphasis, "They are not mine, and I give them back to my Lord." This being done she remained in anticipation of her summons until Friday night, the date above referred to, when,

"Leaning on Jesu's breast,
She thus resigned her breath,
And in his kind embraces Lost the bitterness of death."

A husband and three children are left to lament their loss; but, O may they meet her in heaven. G. SEAMAN.

MARY ANN BASTOW, died at Clitheroe, June 14th, 1862. At an early period she was convinced that she was a sinner, and her heart was gently opened to receive the Saviour. She was naturally of a peaceable and retiring disposition, amiable in all her deportment, and beloved by all that had made an acquaintance with her. She was a regular attendant on God's ordinances, and at the week-night preaching she was almost invariably present. She was delighted when a travelling or a local preacher was at her table and partaking of her hospitality. Nothing was so near her heart as the conversion of sinners, and she did rejoice when any were added to our society in Clitheroe. But how uncertain are all things beneath the sun! in the midst of life we are in death. She and her husband, after the toils of the day, went into their bedroom to retire to rest; she knelt down by the side of her bed to pray, and to commend body and soul to the care of him who never slumbereth or sleepeth. When she arose from her knees she said to her husband, "I am exceedingly ill; I believe I am dying." And so it was, for before 1 o'clock her soul was at home with her Saviour. Thus died the amiable Mary Ann Bastow, aged 45, enforcing by her death the words of the Saviour, "Be ye, therefore, also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." She has left a husband and three children to lament their loss. May they live to God and meet her in heaven. Amen.

MARY NEEDHAM, daughter of James and Alice Needham, was born at Newton Heath, Manchester, June 14th, 1828, and died at Hollinwood, in the Oldham Circuit, June 12th, 1862, in the thirty-fourth year of her age. She began to attend our Boardman Street Chapel about sixteen years ago. She was always steady in her deportment, but remained a stranger to experimental piety until she was nearly twenty-seven years of age. About that time her mind was enlightened by the Holy Spirit, and she plainly saw that mere outward morality would not do to die with.

For some days she mourned and prayed for salvation, when he who hath said "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted," appeared to her, dried up her tears, bound up her broken heart, removed her guilt, and blessed her with the witness of his Holy Spirit. As soon as she had given God her heart, she felt it to be her duty to give his people her hand; she therefore united with our Boardman Street Society, of which she continued a steady, respected, and consistent member, till she exchanged mortality for life. Sister Needham adorned the doctrines of the gospel by her life and conversation.

Brother Hilton, her leader, says, "Her experience was always that of one evidently living near to God." During her last affliction, which was long and severe, she felt the value of religion, often saying to those who visited her, "What must I have done if I had to seek religion now?" All who saw her were astonished how patiently the Lord enabled her to bear her severe sufferings, for never a murmur escaped her lips. As she drew near to the final struggle Jesus was precious to her soul. She said, "Oh! the love of Jesus, the precious love of Jesus; it is the love of Jesus that fills my happy soul." She asked those around her to meet her in heaven; then looking at her mother, she said, "Mother, thank God he has not left me in the dark."

MARTHA BAGSHAW, of Hope, Bradwell Circuit, was born in April, 1777. For a number of years she lived

"A stranger to the blood which bought
Her pardon on the tree."

Primitive Methodism has not been so successful in her native village as in most places; hence though during a period of forty years, several societies have been raised there and have flourished for a time, eventually they have dwindled and become extinct. Amid the above changes our departed sister showed an unbending attachment to the Connexion, allied herself with it as opportunity presented itself, and once for a season gratuitously welcomed any and every messenger of truth to the best her house could afford; for such she cherished a high regard, and only to mention the names of Mr. King and other old standard bearers would make her eye brighten. The present society at Hope was raised in 1859, and with it our sister cast in her lot. The last class-leader she had is a generous supporter of our Connexional funds, but knowing she was sometimes straitened for money he wisely abstained from pressing the matter, and with his excellent wife was unremitting in his visits to her during her long affliction.

When she had the means she had an open hand for the support of God's cause, and sometimes gave gold to make up for such times as she was unable to give pence. She delighted to recount the manifold mercies which God had vouchsafed to her during her long and eventful life. But a few days before her death she told us that once when crossing a common alone, she saw a man of repulsive countenance and appearance approaching. She undauntedly went on till as they met he caught a large parcel, and was about wresting it from her; but just then a large bird being disturbed suddenly rose and fluttered near them. "What was that?" said the robber; "Moor game, don't you see the shooters?" said our traveller, at which the robber decamped without doing her any harm. She was generally of a hopeful turn of mind, almost a stranger to gloomy fears, and her last experience satisfied us that her hopes for heaven were centred in the atonement,—and on June 14th, 1862, she exchanged mortality for life.

T. DOODY.

HENRY HERDMAN was born at Colwell, in the county of Northumberland, June 28th, 1789, and died at Shotley Bridge, June 15th, 1862. It is a great privilege to be born in a neighbourhood where there are established means of grace, and of parents who are connected with such means of grace by some tangible and visible tie, as they tend to create respect for the outward decencies and ceremonies of religion, prepare the mind for the reception of revealed truth, give a colour and direction to future life, and often lead to the enjoyment of salvation. Of this we have an illustration in the case of our departed brother.

Though Colwell was not the scene of a flourishing dissenting interest, and so not under the healthful stimulus of rival denominations, yet its inhabitants might hear the gospel within the quiet inclosure of the Established Church. It was in the parish church at Cholerton, where his father was the clerk, that the first seeds of divine truth were sown in the mind of Henry, and by which I may venture to say he profited during the whole period of a long life.

When a young man he had clearer views of the plan of salvation than most of his neighbours, and he visited the sick and dying, and pointed them to the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world," and prayed with them; and he is still gratefully remembered by some of their surviving relations. When his father died he succeeded him in the office of parish clerk, and filled it creditably for some time.

His removal from Colwell into the neighbourhood of Shotley Bridge brought him into contact with purer forms of Christian worship, clearer views of revealed truth, and more striking manifestations of the "power of godliness." New light broke in upon his mind, new thoughts occupied him, and he began to see that there was more for him in Christ than he had hitherto possessed. When he first heard the Primitive Methodist preachers in Shotley Bridge, he was captivated by their earnestness, zeal, piety, and power, and the clearness with which they presented the truth. To him their preaching was no flourish of trumpets, but "with the demonstration of the Spirit and power." He had a serious struggle of mind, but having become a regular hearer the truth gained upon him, and after having looked on and listened for some three years he yielded, and cast in his lot amongst our people near forty years ago. From that time he continued a member through all the vicissitudes through which the cause had to pass. His beliefs were not hastily taken up, and when once taken up were not carelessly thrown away. But though firm in his adherence to the convictions of his mind, he was not infallible.

During the course of a long life, in which he brought up a large family, and endured great personal and domestic affliction, he maintained a steady, upright, consistent Christian deportment, and however small his income, so managed his affairs as to win from those who have known him the best for more than forty years, the appellation of "a strictly honest man."

Having lost his excellent wife, and his health having failed, he was compelled to break up his house and live among his children as he best could, which proved a source of great trial to him during a few of the last years of his life; but he sought and found consolation in the means of grace, which he attended punctually when health and circumstances would permit. Being dull of hearing he always took his stand on the pulpit stair, and as near the preacher as he could, that he might hear every word and profit by it. I often conversed with him on spiritual things, and always found him trusting in the Atonement. He would say, "Sir, my trials will soon be at an end." "I am looking for my Lord daily; it will not be long ere he takes me to himself." The story of his last illness is easily told. On the Friday night he was at his accustomed place in the house of God; but no one thought that the sermon that night would be the last he would hear. Yet so it was. On Saturday he was taken ill; on Sunday he was much worse; but he was able to give to his friends repeated assurances that all was well, and that he was happy; and on Sunday night he died and went to "His Father's house on high;

Home that he dearly loved,
The bright inheritance of saints, in the seventy-third year of his age, having been a member with us nearly forty years. God is fast gleaning from among us the old members who were identified with the Connexion from its infancy, and a new generation of Primitive Methodists is springing up. We know what the old ones have been, but what will the new generation be? Will they gather up the mantles of our Elijahs as they pass away, and receive the baptism of fire?

WILLIAM WHITEFOOT was born at Wellington, Salop, May 1801, and departed this life at Bayston Hill, in the Shrewsbury Circuit, June 16th, 1862. For many years he lived without a knowledge of the plan of salvation, quenching the Holy Spirit, and despising the people of God. In 1829 he was united in marriage to her who now laments her loss. Subsequently they removed to Leebotward, ten miles from Shrewsbury, and remained there until 1850. During that time he attended a camp-meeting, which was conducted by Mr. Pugh, the respected father of the Rev. P. Pugh, and while listening to the word of eternal life, he was convinced of his sinful state, and resolved to give his heart to God, and lead a "righteous and a sober life." His good resolutions were put into practice, and eventually he became a member of the Primitive Methodist Society. In 1850 he and his family removed to Bayston Hill, and soon after their arrival there they opened their house for regular preaching services, which were continued until June 1861, when a commodious chapel was erected in the locality. For several years brother Whitefoot had been very anxious to obtain ground on which to build a "house for God," and the accommodation of his people. Ultimately a suitable site was procured, and the chapel commenced. During its erection, he laboured hard in connection with other friends to bring it to its completion, and not only gratuitously used his horses and carts in carrying the materials, but he daily watched the erection of the building. In fact, several have said, "he could not have taken a greater interest in it had it been his own property." He lived to see it opened, and the congregation and number of members greatly increased, but died one week before the first anniversary. He was a consistent, conscientious man. Although he did not possess the ability or courage to engage in public devotional exercises, yet he could and did recommend religion by his upright life and prudent conduct. Frequently he would invite persons to attend the means of grace, some of whom have stated that his kind invitations first induced them to seek and to find salvation through the "blood of the Lamb." His end was sudden and unexpected. In March he was very ill, and the friends had doubts respecting his recovery, during which time he was quite resigned, and very happy in the Lord. He informed me that he was ready, using his own words, he said, "That was the time to try religion, the room was full of glory, and my soul was happy." He afterwards was fully restored to his wonted health and strength, and appeared to be strong and in good spirits even to the day before his death. The day previously to his departure, being the Sabbath, he attended the chapel three times as usual, and in the class appeared to speak with unusual boldness, declaring what the Lord had done for his soul. His expectations appeared to be high in reference to the ensuing Sabbath, which was appointed for the chapel anniversary, and he was making preparation for it. The next morning he was taken suddenly ill. He told his wife "that he believed it was something come to take him off." Help was procured, but all in vain. Death gave the fatal stroke, and in a few minutes his tabernacle fell to the ground, and his happy spirit took its flight to everlasting bliss, being in the sixty-first year of his age. May his sorrowful wife and fatherless child meet him in glory.

Died at Great Yarmouth, June 21st, 1862, brother JAMES GODDARD, aged eighty-five years. He received his first good under the ministry of the Independents more than fifty years ago. He came to reside at Yarmouth about the time our people were missioning these parts, and soon after the first class was formed he cast in his lot among the persecuted few. In a short time he was set to work by way of exhorting sinners to flee from the wrath to come. He was a local preacher about thirty-four years. His talents were feeble, but he was pious, and therefore greatly respected. Age and infirmities rendered him unable to labour some years before his demise. He lived in peace, and to the end the God of peace was with him.

DOROTHY FELL was born at Scotforth, near Lancaster, October, 1826. She was brought up to the Church of England, and followed the outward form of religion to the best of her knowledge, until she was twenty-one years of age; but she knew nothing of its saving power. She was brought to a saving acquaintance with the truth through a conversation which she had with a sister of her husband, John Fell; and found peace with God at her bedside one night after she had been at a Class-meeting; and ever after she retained the evidence of her acceptance with God, for she declared the same before three persons assembled at her bedside two days before she died. She was united to him who now deeply deplores her loss, December 13th, 1849, and after that time, in the relation of wife, and afterwards of the mother of five children, she gave every indication of the character of a genuine Christian, doing her duty to the utmost of her ability to both. For the most part, during the last twelve months of her life, she had to pass through the furnace of affliction; but she bore all with Christian fortitude and resignation, never being heard to murmur or complain. Slight as the malady at first appeared, all attempts to remove it proved unavailing, although she had the best medical aid that could be procured in the neighbourhood. She gradually sank under her affliction; yet she was happy in God, and scores of times during its continuance, she awoke her husband in the night season, either by singing, praying, or repeating passages of Scripture. One night, about a week before she died, she was exceedingly happy, and began to sing,

"Lead, lead your wings,
I mount, I fly,
O grave where is thy victory,
O death, where is thy sting."

And then she said, "Thou art the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valley, the bright and morning star," thus magnifying and praising her dear Saviour. I often, as her leader, called to see her, and always found her firmly fixed on the "Rock of Ages," with a prospect blooming with immortality and eternal life. One of our members at Mill Brook called to see her a day or two before she died, and inquired if all was right, and she replied, "O yes, bless God." "And thus her sun set in a clear sky." She fell asleep in Jesus, in the Staleybridge Station, June 24th, 1862, in the 36th year of her age. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours, and their works do follow them."

THOMAS PLIMMER, of Wrockwardine Wood circuit, was born December 21st, 1830, and died July 2nd, 1862. The early part of his life was spent in sin, but being of a moral character, he did not run to those lengths that some young men do. However he did not seek after those things that could alone satisfy the immortal soul until November, 1861, when he was led by the Spirit of God to attend a meeting held at Donington Wood. He there heard a sermon preached from, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." And God, by his Spirit, gave him to feel himself a guilty sinner. And all the next day the text was impressed on his mind; and at night a brother in the Lord went to his house, and asked him if he would go to class that night: and he said, "Yes, I will go." During the meeting he seemed very much affected, and when I spoke to him about his desire to give himself to God, he told me that he was determined so to do, the Lord being his helper. After the meeting was concluded, he seemed unwilling to go till God should speak peace to his soul. My wife said, "This man wants mercy, don't you?" And with tears in his eyes, he said, "Yes, I do." We at once commenced a prayer-meeting, and after praying with him for some time, he seemed to believe in Jesus Christ to the saving of his soul. But in the night he was very much tempted by Satan; but he got up and began to pray to God in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. And in a short time the Lord gave him more fully to realize that his sins were all forgiven, and for the space of about seven months he continued to serve his God with delight.

He was unwell for a month, but did not keep his bed more than two days.

When I and others visited him, we always found him happy in God. The Monday night before he died I went to see him; and after asking him about his bodily health, I spoke to him about his spiritual health, when he said, "I am glad I got my soul converted before this affliction, for if I had to seek pardon now, it would be hard work." I said, "Blessed be God, instead of having to seek it, you feel Christ precious to your soul, don't you?" and he said, "Yes, I do." When unable to speak so as to be heard, a person put his ear to his face, and heard that the name of Jesus was still upon his lips.

Thus died our beloved brother. May the God of his salvation grant that all the members of the class to which he belonged may at last meet him where we shall be—

"Far from a world of grief and sin,
With God eternally shut in."

JOHN LOADBITTER was born at Edmondbyres, November 21st, 1826; and died at Shotley Bridge, July 27th, 1862. At an early period of life his parents removed into the neighbourhood of Shotley Bridge, and he became a scholar in the Shotley Field Sabbath-school, where "the good seed of the kingdom" was sown in his mind, which tended to establish that excellent moral character which he maintained during his youth and manhood up to the time of his conversion. He was a brave, honest, upright, industrious, well-behaved young man, such a one as many of the unconverted would deem good enough, and needing no amendment.

But when a great revival broke out in Shotley Bridge, the Holy Spirit took away the veil from his eyes, and he saw that he was a sinner and needed salvation; and with many others of all shades of moral character, he sought and found the pardon of all his sins. He then took his place among God's people, and from that day was always found fighting in the front ranks, and was as earnest and zealous as though he had been the very chief of sinners. He was regularly at the prayer-meetings when circumstances would allow him, was among the first to engage in public prayer, and was a pattern of earnest piety to both young and old.

He was not too earnest and laborious, for his working day was soon to close. In the beginning of 1862, Shotley Bridge was visited by a fever, which spread from house to house with great rapidity, and many a home was rendered a scene of mourning through its ravages, and the fairest and most beloved ones were taken away. Among the first of those who fell victims to the destroyer was the beloved wife of our departed brother, who in one short week's illness was cut down in the very prime of life. This was a heavy stroke, but he recognized a Father's hand, and submitted to a Father's will. Though wounded and bleeding in his heart, he quarrelled not with the Divine dispensation, but clasped his three little ones to his bosom, and renewed the battle of life, believing that the why and wherefore of it would be explained by-and-by. The fever which had raged in the neighbourhood had abated and the cases became rare; but like a stray shot from the guns of the retreating enemy, at the close of a hard day's fighting, which knocks down the soldier who had stood and fought in the thick of the conflict during the day—the fever arrested him and raged in his system for a fortnight, and then swept him away.

But "mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." He was prepared for the event. When visited by his brethren, they found him enjoying a sense of the Divine favour, and submissive to the Lord's will. One of them (an aged soldier of the cross, who has seen many pass through death triumphant home) asked him whether he would like to live or die; to which he replied, "Which way the Lord pleases." And on the day that he died he assured his inquiring fellow-Christian that he was perfectly happy. Thus he passed away into eternity, leaving to the care of Divine Providence three helpless orphans and a large circle of sorrowing friends. Thus God is peopling heaven from the ranks of our beloved members.

THE WARRIOR OF EDMON.

And who is this that cometh up in might
From Edom, clad in the garments of a Warrior, and stained with blood from Bozrah's Field, glorious in his apparel, and Travelling in the greatness of his strength,
A mighty Conqueror?

This, this is he

Of whom the prophets wrote, who trod alone
The winepress of the wrath of God, that we Might be redeemed, and in his matchless love Rejoicing died on Calvary's mount, and Bore on his devoted head the sins and Sorrows of a world.

Triumphantly he Fought with death and hell at that dread noon-tide
Hour; when Nature veiled her face in darkest Night, and those who slept among the dead came Forth and walked among the living.

Then he Sealed a world's redemption, from their long and Sad captivity, in sin's dark dungeons.
Oh wondrous stoop from highest heaven to Earth, to bear the griefs and ills of mortal Life: pain, poverty, and weariness he Knew in his sojournings here. For us was Borne the agony mysterious in Gethsemane, whose depth of suffering
Ne'er was understood by mortal mind, nor Ever hath been fathomed by an angel's
Widest range of thought.

And thus he came, and Spoiled the hosts of hell, and "conquering and
To conquer" gleamed in blazonry divine
On his bright shield; but while he fought with death
In patient meekness and in holy love,
He walked on earth, and sought to win by kind
Persuasion and by loving words the hearts
Of men to him; and then, his mission done,
Ascended up on high to plead for them
Before the Father's throne.

THE GOOD TEACHER.

WITH inward eloquence his tongue was warmed;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charmed;
For letting down the golden chain from high,
He drew his audience upward to the sky.
He bore his great commission in his look;
And love and sweetness tempered all he spoke.
He preached the joys of heaven, the pains of hell,
And warned the sinner with becoming zeal;
But on eternal mercy loved to dwell.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;
(A living sermon of the truths he taught:)
For this by rules severe his life he squared,
That all might see the doctrines which they heard.

Teachers he said are patterns for the rest;
The gold of heaven bears the Lord impressed.
But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
The Sovereign's image is no longer seen.

His countenance was pleasingly severe,
His looks were such as promised him sincere.
Nothing reserved, or sullen was to see,
But sweet regards and pleasing sanctity.

Ever at hand he was, without request,
To serve the sick, to succour the distressed.
Tempting on foot alone, without affright,
The dangers of a dark, or stormy night.

Such was the saint, who shone with every grace,
Reflecting, Moses-like, his Maker's face.
God saw his image lively was expressed.
And his new work, as in creation, blest.

BIOGRAPHY.

MEMOIR OF THE REV. JAMES CROMPTON.

“Reckless of worth, of time, or place,
Meridian strength, or infant bloom,
Death snatches from our fond embrace,
And plunges in the darksome tomb.
Affection o’er the sacred shrine
Indulges oft her deep drawn sighs,
While soothing hope, with voice Divine,
Whispers of realms beyond the skies.”

AGAIN has death visited our ministerial ranks in Nottingham district, and borne from us, almost in the prime of life, another active, useful, and successful minister. How mysterious are the ways of Providence as it respects the termination of man’s existence in the world! His judgments are a great deep; his ways are past finding out. Whom he will he lifteth up, whom he will he putteth down, and none can stay his hand, or say, What doest thou? There is not a more perplexing event occurs than the death of the excellent of the earth, cut off in the midst of their usefulness, while assiduously engaged in the great and glorious work of man’s salvation. Sometimes we see a young minister attracting by his talents multitudes to the house of God, and by his faithful preaching of the Word converting many deathless spirits; we begin to speculate on the result of a long career of usefulness, but our speculations are suddenly brought to an end by the sudden demise of the youthful servant of the Most High. His light is suddenly quenched, or rather merges into a brighter light, which may not be approached by mortal gaze. At other times we see men who have laboured for a number of years with great zeal, energy, and success: they have attained a position which commands the respect of all their brethren, and so wisely have they performed their duties, that success, which falls not to the lot of ordinary men, has crowned all that they have taken in hand. As we look on with admiration, we forget that such men are mortal. It enters not into our calculations that death will deprive us of their valuable services, at least not before they have reached life's utmost span. Alas, how frequently we have been awakened from our dream of years to come, by the startling and sad reality that these very men whom we had thought to be almost a necessity to the Church, have been suddenly removed. Scarcely sufficient time has been given us to feel apprehension, before the dread fact has been realized, which for the time seemed to sound the death-knell to our hopes, leaving a void which we could not see how to fill! It becomes us, however, at such times to "be still," and remember that a wise and gracious Sovereign rules the world, and that he doeth all things well; and while in his Providence he removes his faithful ones from the scene of their toil to their great and glorious reward, to "shine as the stars for ever and ever" in his kingdom, he can raise up others to fill their places, and thus carry out his grand designs and work his sovereign will.

Our dear friend, the Rev. J. CROMPTON, whose removal to the "realms of the blest" we now record, was the son of James and Mary Crompton, of Walkden Moor, in the county of Lancaster. He was born July 7th, 1810. His mother was a godly woman; she feared the Lord, and desired that all her house should fear him; and hence she endeavoured to train James up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. No wonder that from a child he had a desire to serve the Lord. "My mother," says our departed friend, in a record he has left of his conversion, "took me by the hand, and led me to the house of God, and I was soon the subject of religious impressions." When he approached his seventeenth year his religious impressions deepened, and he became greatly concerned about the salvation of his soul. One Sabbath evening, when he returned from chapel, he was in deep distress, and in this state he knelt down and prayed most fervently that God would save him. It appears that this was a "time of refreshing" in that neighbourhood. The Lord was among the people. While James was on his knees at home, earnestly beseeching the Lord with tears to save him, one of the family came in and said, "There is one of the neighbours crying for mercy." James heard this, and cried out, "That is just what I want;" and starting up from his knees, with tearful eyes he went to the same place, and joined the neighbour in crying out for salvation; nor did he cry in vain; God spoke peace to his troubled heart. He "passed from death unto life," and was enabled to rejoice with "joy unspeakable;" and from that time until the close of his mortal career, he pursued his Christian course, his path being that of the just, which as a shining light, shineth more and more unto the perfect day.

The officials in the Manchester circuit soon perceived that there was a power in our departed brother for usefulness; and consequently, while only in his nineteenth year, they put his name on the plan, and sent him to call sinners to repentance. He laboured in this position with acceptability and success until he was twenty-one years of age, when it was deemed proper to open to him a wider sphere for usefulness. He was called by the Preston Brook circuit into the itinerancy. After labouring here for a time he removed to the Isle of Man, and among the Manxmen he preached the Gospel with success. From this station he was removed to Ireland, and among the poor Irish he had seals to his ministry. Often at missionary meetings he indulged in reminiscences of his labours among that people. He was subsequently appointed to the Sheffield, Burton-upon-Trent, Leicester, Nottingham, Mansfield, Bottesford, Loughborough, Lincoln, Boston, Leicester Second, and Chesterfield circuits. In all these stations he was received as a servant of God; he laboured to the edification of believers, and was successful in the salvation of many souls. He generally staid in his circuit as long as rule would allow, and in several circuits the brethren were so impressed with the value of his services, that his re-station was sought beyond the usual time. In his last station he had laboured four years, and though he was sorely afflicted during a considerable part of the last year, yet a considerable increase of members was reported, and he was invited to remain in the circuit another year. Such facts prove how creditably and successfully he laboured, and how God was pleased to honour him in the salvation of men. We cannot in the brief space of a short memoir give a particular account of his labours and successes. Suffice it to say that he was highly esteemed in all his stations, and parted with with regret. Without exaggeration we may safely say that all his stations improved under his superintendency, and he was the means of gathering not a few into the fold of Christ; indeed, eternity only will reveal the amount of good accomplished through his labours.

Generally speaking, during his life in the itinerancy he enjoyed remarkably good health. His fine ruddy appearance was indicative of this, and seemed to promise a life beyond the ordinary duration. No one, a year before, felt any apprehension of the probable close of his mortal career in so brief a space. He attended the district meeting held at Melton Mowbray in 1862; took an active part in its business and in its public services; he examined the probationers and the candidates for the ministry, and the manner in which he did this showed his solicitude to have men sound in the faith and loyal to the Connexion. He afterwards delivered an address to them, full of wise counsel, and expressive of his ardent desire for their welfare and success. He appeared at that time as hearty as any brother present, and as likely to labour many years in the Lord's vineyard.

Directly after he returned home he felt unwell. He ascribed his indisposition to having taken some improper food, and thought a little attention to diet would rectify what was wrong. Alas! there was in his system a disease which was developing itself, and which was destined to terminate his earthly existence. Despite of all care, he grew worse. His friends became apprehensive that his complaint was of a more serious nature than he imagined, and desired him to rest for a while, and place himself under the care of a physician. But he loved his work too well to be easily induced to relax even for a short time; he consequently continued to preach until December 8th, 1862, when he preached his last sermon in Brampton chapel. His text was, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand in the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God," &c. It was with extreme difficulty that he got through the service. Dr. Black was sent for, who, after careful examination, pronounced his disease not merely a dangerous one, but mortal. He was suffering from cancerous stomach, for which there was no effectual remedy.

His sufferings now became intense. For weeks he could scarcely take any food, but he bore all his afflictions with patience, and with resignation to his heavenly Father's will. While suffering from diphtheria as well as cancer, I saw him, and conversed with him at length in reference to his state and prospects; he hardly knew at this time what the will of God was, but he was perfectly resigned to it, whether it was life or death. It was apparent to friends that the time of his departure was at hand. He was unable to attend the March Quarterly Meeting, but he penned a few lines for their guidance, though it was with difficulty that he could guide a pen. He also wrote a letter to Mr. S. Antliff, and one to myself, directly after the Quarterly Meeting. The following is a copy of his letter to Mr. Antliff:—

"MY DEAR ANTLIFF,—My health greatly improved after the diphtheria was overcome, and I had some slight hope that I might be restored, if the sickness could be kept off. The sickness has returned, however, with greater force, and now my hope is cut off, and my opinion is that my stay on earth will not be long. During the last three or four weeks my strength has been diminished. I am very weak indeed. My difficulty of breathing, especially in the night, is very great. My cough is very bad; sometimes for whole nights I am coughing without intermission. Last Thursday I asked Dr. Black what his opinion of me was, and whether he thought I should be restored. He replied, "Well, what I said at first I must say again, as I have seen no reason to change my opinion." In that case I have a cancerous stomach, and there is no cure for me.

"I am invited to remain at Chesterfield; but if I stay, I shall soon die. I have no hope of life for many weeks, and if you could find me an airy healthy place it would give me a chance, but here I have none, as the situation, the doctor says, does not suit me ; and if the Providence of God should restore my health, I will do my best where you may place me. I believe you will do your best. I merely just mention that you must not allow me to die at Chesterfield, unless it be before changing time.

My case I shall fully leave with you, if I am living, but that is doubtful ; and if I am gone home you can tell my brethren I have served the Connexion nearly thirty-one years, and have never disappointed a congregation during the whole of my career. Peace be with you and yours. Pray for me, I am in a helpless condition, and if I see you no more on earth, I hope to meet you in the

I am, yours very truly,

JAMES CROMPTON.”

Up to this time he had been able to leave his room and take a little exercise, but he was now obliged to remain in bed, and he became fully sensible that he was beyond recovery. Mr. Brining, his colleague, frequently visited him, and found him at times unspeakably happy. A few days before his death he said to him, “For many years I and my Father have been on the best of terms ; yea, for more than thirty years I have known something of his love and his service. I have not to seek my religion now in the hour of extreme sickness. His grace sustains me, his promise cheers me ; he is all I need.” Such was the confidence of this dying saint ; such his calm and stedfast reliance on God.

On another occasion he said to Mrs. Crompton who was weeping by his side, “My dear, the Lord cannot be better to us than he is. The Lord will do right. I feel that my work is done for this world ; the Lord is about to take me to heaven.” His wife said, “When you are gone I shall be at a loss for you—life will lose its charm.” “My dear,” replied our suffering friend, “you will not be long after me ; I shall be looking out for you ; yes, I shall.” Some time before his departure our brother was favoured with a dream or vision of the heavenly world ; whatever we may call it, it was to him a most comforting manifestation in a time of severe suffering, and it shews us that his mind dwelt much on heavenly subjects. We give the account as nearly as possible in his own words : “I have been favoured,” said he, “with a sight of heaven, admitted to behold its glory. I saw there Mr. Brownson and Mr. Carthy, and I was introduced to a number of eminent Scripture characters. I said to my guide, this is certainly a most glorious place, but I am not yet fully satisfied, I have not yet seen Jesus, and without him it will not be heaven to me. I was then taken higher up, and I saw the Lamb on his throne, and I gazed on his Infinite Majesty, and said, now I am satisfied this is heaven.”

After speaking calmly of his decease and making arrangements in reference to his funeral, his partner said to him, "This world will be a wilderness to me when you are gone." He replied "The Lord will take care of you. Yes, he will." Satan, at this juncture, taking advantage of his weakness, sorely tempted him, but he called upon God for assistance, and was blessed with a most signal deliverance. He desired his wife to reach the Bible and read the eleventh chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews. She did so, and he then said, "I feel so happy, I cannot express my happiness." And referring at one time to a chapter which had been read, he said, "If there was no more Scripture than this it would be enough for me."

As his end drew nigh he became unconscious at times, but in his lucid moments the theme of his converse was the love of the Saviour toward him. "He has done all things well," said he. "All will be for the best." "What we know not now we shall know hereafter;" and to similar passages of Scripture expressive of his strong confidence in God he gave utterance. During the last night his breathing was much oppressed, and he was insensible nearly the whole of the night, but a few moments before he breathed his last he was quite conscious. His sorrowing wife then said to him, "My dear, you feel Jesus is precious." With all his strength and with considerable emphasis he replied, "I do, I do." "He is your Saviour," continued Mrs. Crompton. "Aye, and yours too, my dear," answered the dying husband. These were his last words. A wave or two of the hand in token of triumph was seen, and the mortal strife was o'er. His sanctified soul had burst its bond, and had escaped to the mansions of light. It was Sabbath morning, a holy quiet reigned around. Many blessed Sabbaths he had spent on earth; this was spent in heaven. Thus died our dear friend in the fifty-third year of his age, and the thirty-second of his ministry, leaving a widow and three children to mourn his early removal. On the following Thursday, after a very solemn service in Chesterfield Chapel, his remains were removed to Kingston, in Staffordshire, and committed to the grave in the old churchyard, "in sure and certain hope of a resurrection unto eternal life." It was early in the morning when the service was held at Chesterfield, but the number that attended the service and formed into funeral procession to the railway station, showed how he was loved by the people to whom he had preached the word of life, and among whom he had died. May they remember him who had the rule over them, who spoke unto them the Word of God; may they follow his faith, and consider the end of his conversation. May they follow his Saviour—"Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."

It only remains for us to indicate a few of the more prominent traits in the character of the departed. We will do this in a few words.

1. He was a sincere, devoted, pious man. Brother Brining had frequent opportunities of observing his life and conduct. He was stationed with him in two or three circuits, and was with him at the time of his death. He thus writes of him, "His piety was not of the stormy or tempestuous kind, but was like the gentle dew that descends upon the earth, or the refreshing shower that fertilizes the ground. His soul was like a well watered garden. He was truly a tree of righteousness; his fruit was unto holiness, and his end everlasting life. Between his words and his actions there was sweet harmony. Upon his word you could depend. If he promised he would be sure to fulfil. His design was to please God. His body was a temple for the Holy Ghost to dwell in. To the divine service he gave himself unreservedly, and with the Father of spirits he held sweet communion. 'I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.' Here was his soul's life." This life he lived up to his latest moment, hence his triumph over the last adversary.

2. He was a good, plain, and successful preacher. Not great, according to the common acceptation of that word. His sermons were not composed for the purpose of calling the attention of the people to the preacher, and securing their admiration of his style, language, and beautiful imagery. He had a higher and nobler object to attain. The applause of men he felt to be not worth labouring for. He wished to save men, and secure high Heaven's approval. Hence Christ was the subject of all his discourses, salvation the constant theme of his ministry. He wished to make men think not of him, but of themselves, and of Christ as their Saviour. His discourses were sound in doctrine, generally well arranged, and delivered in a way calculated to impress his hearers with the conviction that he believed the truths he was preaching. He was thoroughly earnest, and evidently depended on the Holy Spirit's aid for success. And God did own the Word, and made him the honoured agent in the salvation of deathless spirits!

3. He was a discreet and efficient superintendent. We do not assert that he had the comprehensive grasp of mind which some men have. Nevertheless he managed matters quite as well as some whose intellect and business capacity exceeded his own. He managed the affairs of his stations well. If he found division, he could generally restore harmony. If he had unreasonable men to deal with he had a remarkable power over them. He seemed to possess some secret influence to quiet restless and discontented spirits. We suspect that the secret of his success in this respect was his gentleness. He knew that a "soft answer turns away wrath." On the troubled waters he threw oil, and however conflicting the elements were, he generally secured a calm. By his gentle, winning manner he rendered many a foe powerless, and could convert opposers into allies. His punctuality, too, had an intimate connection with his success. "Tell the brethren at the District Meeting," he said in a letter to my friend Mr. Antliff, "that I have served the Connexion thirty-one years, and have never neglected an appointment in the whole of my career." How few can say this ! And yet how desirable it is that all should be as punctual. This is the "soul of business," and one of the chief elements of success in any enterprise. Punctuality in attending religious services : punctuality, in business engagements : punctuality in meeting monetary demands : what a world of trouble and experience would be saved if they were universal ! James Crompton was a remarkably punctual man. His colleague testifies that what he said he would do he did. His word could be depended on ; his promises were invariably kept. No wonder that he left his stations generally better, numerically, financially, disciplinarily, and spiritually than he found them.

We have no wish to convey the impression that we think our departed friend was free from imperfection. He was a well shaped vessel fitted for the Master's use, but he was an earthen vessel, and therefore there was that about him which belongs to earthen vessels, imperfection ; or to speak without figure, he was a man with the infirmities that belong to men ; and hence, earnest, sincere, humble, devout, pious as he unquestionably was, it might be possible to point out a weakness or infirmity. But there was about him so much that was truly excellent, that we feel that we have lost A MAN from our ranks. A devoted, faithful servant of the Connexion and of the Lord has been removed from our midst to a higher sphere ! We weep, and who shall rebuke us ? We have lost a friend. A man valiant in fight, and who aided in putting to flight the armies of the aliens. But the Lord has done it. He whose wisdom and goodness cannot be doubted, has been pleased to take our brother to himself. We restrain our grief, for

"Why should our tears run down ?
And our hearts be sorely riven ?
There's another gem in the Saviour's crown,
Another saint in heaven."

JOHN DICKENSON.

MEMOIR OF MRS. ELIZABETH HEBBRON.

RELICT OF THE LATE REV. HENRY HEBBRON, OF POTTO, YORKSHIRE.

ANOTHER of those affecting and mysterious visitations, with which a righteous and unerring God is pleased from time to time to afflict his people, has recently fallen on the Primitive Methodist body, in the very unexpected death of the subject of this memoir, MRS. ELIZABETH HEBBRON, who for nearly forty years was an exemplary Christian, and a zealous promoter of the cause of God.

Whether viewed as a minister's wife, a mother, a widow, or a private Christian,—whether as an instructor of youth, a promoter of missions, a circulator of the Scriptures, a visitor of the sick, or a persevering recommender of personal religion in all places and classes, our dear sister was alike assiduous and persevering, and by the blessing of God, she was made savingly useful to many, for every instance of which she felt devoutly thankful, and was humbly ready to ascribe all praise to Him whose prerogative it is to render the means effectual.

Mrs. Hebbroon had passed her sixtieth year, but was still vigorous in body and mind, and in the midst of labours for God and souls, and was just contemplating the opening of a beautiful chapel which she had erected at Hexham, when, after but a few days' illness, she was called to her "rest and reward," leaving the Church of God to mourn her departure. May many be led to emulate her virtues and piety, and all devoutly to recognise and adore the sovereign hand of God, and meekly exclaim, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good!" and let us all earnestly implore, that through the exercise of divine wisdom and goodness, the death of our beloved sister may prove spiritual life to many around us.

Mrs. Elizabeth Hebbroon was the daughter of John and Elizabeth Ridley. She was born March 23rd, 1803, at Hexham, Northumberland, which town is ten miles distant from Williamswyke Castle, the birth-place of Nicholas Ridley, the memorable martyr, who, with good Hugh Latimer, suffered at the stake at Smithfield for their unflinching adherence to the faith of the Gospel. An elder brother of Elizabeth's, now no more, who was well read in history and somewhat skilled in genealogy, had pleasure in tracing the family's descent from, or connection with, that at Williamswyke. Whether correct or not is of small moment, while it is certain that his pleasure in such researches far exceeded that of his sister, who delighted more in the undoubtable fact of being

"The child of parents passed into the skies."

Yes! it was her happy privilege to have a pious father, and a praying mother, whom she dearly loved, and by whom she was trained up in "the nurture and admonition of the Lord." The family was large, Elizabeth being the ninth child, all of whom grew up, save one, and by the blessing of God on the industrious and frugal habits of the parents, they were reared in comfort, schooled, and respectably placed in life. Many were the religious advantages of this household:—the public ordinances of the sanctuary, domestic worship, the frequent visits of ministers and others of the people of God, associated with the bright example and Christian counsels of an elder sister, which were greatly enjoyed and blessed. The father was alike diligent in business and fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; and when absent from home on the Sabbath day exercising as a lay preacher in the neighbouring villages, (having been one of the first among the Wesleys in the locality) his place in the family was well supplied by Mrs. Ridley. One of her daily habits was to take the children into a private room and pray with them and for them. To this, under God, the children owed much ; one petition in particular is still remembered,—“Make them truly united to God.” Such a training, associated with a uniform corresponding example, justified the hope of the young people becoming a “seed to serve the Lord, a generation to call him blessed,” which cheering hope, was ultimately realized. Elizabeth could well remember, too, and often told of her mother’s saying, “The blessed Lord knows that nothing lies so near my heart as the salvation of my children’s souls.” Ah ! such devout sayings, with their associations and influences, were never forgotten, and they had not a little to do with the formation of the character, and the earnest piety in after life of her beloved daughter. Would that such were the feelings and utterance of all mothers in relation to their children ! In addition to the advantages named, our dear friend owed something to the Sabbath-school, taught in the Congregational chapel, Hexham, some of whose teachers she gratefully remembered through life ; the devoted minister, too, the Rev. John Scott, who began the school and zealously helped it on, she greatly esteemed. Various incidents of interest could be given would time and space permit ; one must suffice. On one occasion, one of the teachers taking his stand by one of the pillars which supported the gallery of the chapel, extended his arms, and shewed the children how the Saviour was nailed to the cross ; Elizabeth was much affected, and at the close of the school asked one of her companions to go home with her ; on reaching the house she proposed their retiring for prayer. They knelt down, and could say little but “Lord, teach us to pray.” This they repeated again and again ; and that short and simple prayer was heard and answered. They both ultimately became praying characters, and the said companion or school-fellow has now a son in the ministry. Ah ! that little school, under the blessing of God, has been useful to many, many precious souls ! Let Sabbath-school teachers and readers ponder the fact.

The Primitive Methodists visited Hexham first, we believe, in the year 1822. Their preachers were simple, humble, earnest men, and they zealously and faithfully proclaimed the everlasting Gospel. Much interest was excited, and many persons of other denominations were found among their occasional hearers. Our young friend must needs go, and she went not in vain. She had, as has been intimated, received in very early life “the good seed of the kingdom,” and had often been the subject of religious impressions ; but it was under the preaching of the Primitive Methodists that by the good Spirit of God she was brought to decision of character. The solemn resolve was deeply cherished, that whatever others did, she would serve the Lord. She was led more clearly to see her sinful state ; she felt her need of Christ, and cast her longing soul on him. She was soon brought to enjoy pardon and peace, whilst she placed her entire dependence on the Saviour’s merits and death for salvation here and glory hereafter. She now felt it her duty and privilege to "confess Christ" before men. She became united with the society, cast in her lot with them, and resolved, if necessary, to suffer affliction and persecution with them. With these godly people she was intimately associated during the whole of her after life, and though friendly with, and favourable to all other evangelical Christians, the Primitive Methodists she regarded as her people, and their God as her God. At the outset she knew a little of persecution, but she sought strength and grace to endure it for her Saviour and his blessed cause. It gradually subsided, while her simple, happy, genuine piety commended itself to all parties, and she went on her way rejoicing—

"Telling to others all around,
What a dear Saviour she had found."

About this time she lost her beloved father by death, and afterwards her pious mother, both of whom she could rejoice over, as having gone to be with Jesus. The grave duties of the household now devolved chiefly on her, and they were judiciously and prayerfully discharged; and so industrious and managing were her habits, coupled with early rising, that she secured a considerable amount of time for private devotions, social religious exercises, chapel and other meetings, with various works of usefulness. Never, never was she more in her element—next to communing with God—than when engaged with the young, in the house of a neighbour, or in her walks of mercy by the way, in the sick chamber, and elsewhere, in "recommending Christ to sinners," and with what success eternity will more fully discover.

In the year 1830, she was united in marriage to the Rev. Henry Hebbon, in whom as to character and devotedness she found a desirable companion for life. They were kindred spirits, happy in the service of God, and bent on "winning souls," and both were happily successful in leading many to the Saviour. Would space permit, some pleasing instances could be adduced as furnished by the several Circuits where they travelled,—Newcastle-on-Tyne, Gateshead, North Shields, Sunderland, Stockton and Darlington—in all of which their zeal, devotedness, and success were appreciated.

One negative incident the writer must in justice here present. It is at once remarkable and painful, and, moreover, instructive. Early in their career they had been put down for a certain Circuit which was not to Mrs. H's mind. Unlike herself, she refused to comply. She preferred another, which was granted. Before removing, she dreamed that in the little garden behind the preacher's house in the said circuit there was growing a beautiful little tree, which by night a ruthless hand plucked up by the roots and threw over the wall. On awaking she was agitated; she told the dream to her husband, adding, "Oh! can it be that at ——— we shall lose our dear child?" It was so; there their dear and only child Henry sickened and died ; and alas, how pungent was her grief, and genuine her contrition. She acknowledged the visitation of God, and humbly sought to adore the hand that had dealt the blow. The dear child had not reached his fifth year. He delighted to lisp the name of Jesus, and in a little time he was not, for God had taken him. From this painful bereavement a lasting lesson was learnt by the tender mother. May the affecting fact prove salutary to not a few of our readers.

Mr. Hebbroon had entered the ministry before he attained his twentieth year, and partly by indefatigable labours, had induced something like premature age and infirmities. More than one serious attack of illness had considerably shaken him, and seemed premonitory of approaching decay. Soon after reaching the age of fifty he felt himself unequal to the duties of the itinerancy, and prudently sought superannuation. He had acquired great popularity, not only in preaching, but in promoting chapels, schools, missions, &c., so that when a new sanctuary was about to be opened, or an anniversary, or missionary meeting held, it was common for his services to be sought ; and when secured, large congregations were gathered ; and not only were corresponding collections obtained, but, under the blessing of God, other and various good was done. In this way, subsequently to his superannuation, his time was chiefly occupied, and his services, so far as health would permit, were continued to the Connexion, until the autumn of 1859, when he was called to his heavenly rest. Mrs. Hebbroon had for many weeks anxiously sat by him, administering every kind attention, and supplying spiritual consolation ; and when her beloved partner was taken she keenly felt the stroke, but was enabled to cast herself upon the care and promises of God. She said to a friend, "Call me not a widow, for 'my Maker is my Husband, the Lord of Hosts is his name.'" Gradually she became more reconciled to her loss ; she felt the Lord to be gracious, and was enabled to resume her active duties in the cause of religion and philanthropy.

Our dear friend now, for the most part, resided at their retired house at Potto, Yorkshire. There Mr. Hebbroon had provided a neat little chapel, which proved a blessing to the village. In it Mrs. Hebbroon taught a free day school, and conducted a Sabbath School in addition to the frequent evening and Sabbath services held by the society. Her house became the home of preachers and other good men. The sick and dying in the neighbourhood she assiduously visited. Tracts were freely distributed, and the Scriptures circulated, whilst the attention of all classes was earnestly called to "the one thing needful"—personal salvation ; nor were the wants of the poor and needy forgotten. Her pecuniary means were good, and she freely dispensed her charity. Oh, were every village in Great Britain, in the good providence of God, blessed with such a Christian benefactor and "mother in Israel" how much more would our country resemble "the garden of the Lord."

In January of the present year, she was called to Burswell House, Hexham, to attend the sick bed of her brother, Mr. Joseph Ridley, who died in February. She deeply mourned the event, but not as "those without hope," and the consolations which she then so tenderly administered she was afterwards enabled to appropriate to herself.

About the middle of April, she went again to Potto for a few weeks, intending by the end of May to return to Hexham, to be present at the opening services of the new chapel which she had just erected. She was detained by some meetings which she wished to aid and encourage in her own village, one of which was held in the open air on the evening of Whit-Monday. She took cold, fever set in, congestion of the lungs followed; and on the 30th of May her valuable life was brought to an unexpected close. She was visited by her youngest brother and a beloved niece, and when it became the painful duty of the former to say to her that death seemed approaching, she received the solemn intimation without fear or alarm. She was full of faith and confidence. This was about seven hours before her decease. She was perfectly sensible, and till within half an hour of her departure, she continued to speak freely of Divine things. Many and precious were her dying utterances, a few of which have been preserved. The following may be taken as their general character:—

"I have spent a happy life in the service of God."

"Jesus is precious and very near. He is everything to me."

"Jesus is mine and I am his."

"I know that my Redeemer liveth."

"What a blessing it is that the atonement is broad enough for a poor sinner like me to rest upon."

"Wonderful! that he should think of a poor sinner like me."

"I have not the shadow of a doubt of my acceptance with God through Christ."

"To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain."

"I have nothing to do but to die."

"When heart and flesh fail, God is the strength of my heart and my portion for ever."

"You must not grieve the Lord by fretting."

"Don't speak of me. I beg that no glory be attached to me."

"The Lord make my death a blessing."

"The Lord save the people of Potto."

"Come, Lord Jesus. I must wrap myself up in Jesus. O Jesus, come away."

Thus our dear sister continued to vent her holy feelings, so long as she retained the faculty of speech. At length the silver cord was loosed, and she calmly passed away to her Father and her God.

There was great lamentation in the village and neighbourhood. The clergyman and her medical adviser, with the people generally, bore high and willing testimony to her Christian character. Blessed Lord, sanctify the solemn event. Help us to be still and know that thou art God, and make us by thy grace "followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises."

The dear remains were removed to Hexham, her native place, for interment. A large concourse of voluntary mourners was present on the occasion. The solemn service was conducted by the Revs. Joseph Wilson, of Hexham, W. Dent, Newcastle, and Ralph Fearwick, Sunderland; after which, the coffin was lowered into the deep vault, and placed in the grave of her beloved husband. A funeral sermon was preached by her brother, Mr. E. Ridley, on Sabbath evening, June 14th, in the Scotch Church, Hexham, to a numerous and deeply affected audience, from the words which she had so emphatically and experimentally appropriated on her death bed—Phil. i. 21, "To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." God grant that this afflictive visitation may indeed be rendered, and that in the highest and happiest sense, "a blessing to many." Let God be glorified, his ways justified, and his blessed cause and kingdom promoted. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." May all the readers of this affectionate record be by divine grace made "followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises." Finally, "Not unto us, O God, not unto us, but unto THY name give glory."

MEMOIR OF MRS. ELEANOR ADAMS.

(CANADA WEST.)

My beloved wife, whose maiden name was Corkhill, was born in England, in the month of August, 1806. Her parents shortly after her birth removed to the Isle of Man, their native place, and settled in the town of Douglas, where she was brought up. Very early in life she was the subject of holy impressions, and oft looked forward to the time when she should be deemed old enough to become a Methodist and a Christian indeed. But alas, the young at that period were not cared for and encouraged by the Church to come to Christ as they are in this day, or she might then have been made happy in God.

When she was about the age of sixteen, good old John Butcher, the first Primitive Methodist missionary sent to the Isle of Man, entered the town of Douglas singing the lively hymns contained in our old small hymn book (for at that time we had no other), and preaching with burning zeal the Gospel of the kingdom: "the word of the Lord had free course, and was glorified" in the salvation of many souls; among whom was the subject of this brief memoir. Although her life had been strictly moral, she felt herself to be lost and undone without a change of heart and an interest in the Saviour's death ; hence with strong crying and tears she sought by faith, and happily found redemption in the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of her sins ; and her conversion being sound, and her faith unfeigned, the result was that her experience was clear and free from doubt on this vital matter in after life. She knew that she was a child of God, having the witness in herself ; she immediately joined the Church, and that for life, for hers was a perpetual covenant not to be forgotten. At that period our society was small, and in its infancy, and much despised and persecuted ; but to her it mattered not ; she went on her way rejoicing through evil report and good report, walking carefully that she might not "grieve the Holy Spirit, whereby she was sealed to the day of redemption," or wound the cause of Christ, now so dear to her heart. Her trials for a season were neither few nor small ; but God made her the object of his gracious care. In process of time her brother, Mr. Edward Corkhill, found the pearl of great price, and became a local preacher, which office he still retains in the Douglas circuit ; and he being a baker by trade, they put their means together, and commenced the business of baking and store-keeping, in which God blessed them. And now, having a house of her own, she laid herself out for greater usefulness in visiting the poor, the sick, and the dying ; also she was made a class leader, and she had the happiness of raising a large class of females, which she led for many years on Sabbath afternoons in her own house, God putting honour upon her in prospering her class exceedingly ; also they made a home and resting place for many of our ministers, who found beneath their roof a happy retreat after their long journeys and hard toils. It afforded her great pleasure to see our society make progress, and gather strength from year to year in her native town and on the island. It was in the year 1841 that I became acquainted with my dear wife, and in April, 1843, we were married, and came to Canada. Great was her sorrow in leaving her lovely class and the large circle of her dear friends ; but feeling it to be her duty, she obeyed the will of God ; nor did she ever repent, though at times her way was somewhat rough, for when we came the country was comparatively new and our cause small and feeble in Canada—very different from what it is now—but our union being in and of the Lord was most happy. I found in her a wise counsellor, a true bosom friend, and a help-meet indeed, both in spiritual and temporal matters. She was careful, prudent, and affectionate ; "her price was far above rubies ;" "her husband could safely trust in her." She was all that a husband could desire a wife to be. As a mother, she was loving, kind, and firm with her children, "training them up in the way they should go," praying much for and with them, anxious, most anxious that they might become the subjects of grace ; nor were her efforts in vain, as she had the joy of seeing all three yield their youthful hearts to God, and unite with her in Church-fellowship.

As a neighbour, she was social, friendly, and obliging, always ready to do good. As a Christian, she was humble, earnest, and sincere, frequently very powerful and eloquent in prayer, believing in God, taking hold of his strength, pleading the promises and the blood—the precious blood of atonement, “Till heaven came down our souls to greet,

And glory crowned the mercy-seat.”

Yes, she “had power with God.” O how much we miss her at the family altar, the class and prayer-meetings. She loved the Bible, the closet, and sanctuary, often going to the house of God, when scarcely able, remarking “Ministers’ wives with their families must set a good example before the people.” While she loved all God’s people, she was warmly attached to her own, and nothing caused her so much pain of mind and sorrow of heart as when she saw any of them decline from the ways of the Lord, and grow weary in well-doing. God is witness how oft she mourned and wept over backsliders, lukewarm professors, and careless sinners. On the other hand, nothing afforded her so much pleasure as to see, hear, or read of revivals of religion. A revival having broken out in the city of Hamilton, when she was near the gates of death, I read the account thereof to her, when she exclaimed with her dying quivering lips, “Glory to God, thank God !”

Her experience, as related in the class-meeting, was generally rich and savoury, and attended with an unction from above. She often said, “Although I have been a follower of Christ for forty years, or nearly so, I have nothing to rest my soul upon, or to trust in, but the infinite merits of my Redeemer.

“’Tis all my hope and all my plea,
For me the Saviour died.”

“Christ Jesus is made to me wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption.” “Yea, Christ is all in all to me.” “By his grace I am what I am.” “’Tis grace, free grace, of which I make my boast ; and I know not which to admire most, the grace that called me when in youth, or the grace that hath kept me until now.” “I have had my conflicts, but in Christ I have peace, sweet peace, and as it regards my eternal happiness, of this I have no doubt. That is a matter that has long been settled. For me to die is gain.” And then she would urge all present to make sure work for eternity, saying, “There is nothing like being ready for the coming of the Lord. O to be ready. Let us, my friends, be ready ;” and she lived to be ready.

Often when she felt weak and feeble—and she was seldom strong—she would repeat those pathetic lines by C. Wesley—

“In age and feebleness extreme,
Who can a sinful worm redeem ?

Jesus, my only hope thou art—
Strength of my failing flesh and heart,
O let me catch a glimpse of thee,
And drop into eternity."

Two Sabbaths before she was called away she went three times to the house of God, and spoke of the enjoyment she experienced under the word; the holy Sabbath, as was usually the case, had been to her a delight—the services of the sanctuary pleasant, so that she was quite lively and cheerful. But on the Tuesday following she complained of having taken cold—this issued in bilious nervous fever. Medical aid was called in, and everything done that could be thought of to arrest the disease, but all in vain. However, she possessed her soul in patience, and was calm, and resigned to the will of God. On the Friday morning, six days before her decease, she called me to her bedside, saying, "I have something to tell you." I said, "What is it, my dear?" She replied, "I shall die." I said, "I hope not, my love." "Yes, I shall," was her reply; "Have you had a promise from the Lord that I shall not?" I could not say that I had: though on former occasions when she was very ill, I had, while in prayer, been comfortably assured that she would be spared to us a while longer; at this time it was not so. I then inquired if it had been revealed to her that she should die; she said, "Yes." This was sad tidings to me, as I knew her impressions were in general correct. I then said, "Is all right?" she said, "O yes." "Is Christ precious?" she added, "Yes;" and then sank into a slumber. When awake and sensible, she was often heard communing with her God and Saviour. On the Wednesday morning, when the doctor relinquished all hope of her recovery, I went to her bedside and spoke of the Saviour, and of the dear old friends that were waiting to welcome her to the realms of glory, and repeated some precious words of the Lord Jesus, such as, "In my Father's house are many mansions,"—and other portions of holy writ, that were very dear to her in life; and also sweet verses of hymns that are descriptive of heaven. She became quite animated, and cried out, "My Father, my Father, my Father!" though she had not been able to speak for some hours previously. Those were the last words that fell from her lips. She appeared then to have a delightful view of the heaven of blessedness she was about to enter. Her speech now completely failed, and she sank into a state of lethargy, in which she continued until the following afternoon, when, without a struggle or a groan, she departed this life "to be with Christ, which is far better," on the 19th of November, 1862, having been a sojourner on earth fifty-six years and three months, and a member of our church about forty years, nearly twenty of which had been spent in Canada.

Much more might have been said respecting her trials, and triumphs, but I forbear. It was not her wish that anything should be said of her, as her one desire was that Christ alone should be exalted ; but being requested by my brethren to write an account of her life for the benefit of the church, and others, I have given this plain and unvarnished sketch of her humble, useful and pious life, praying that it may prove a blessing to many in Canada, and to our dear friends in our native land. Her funeral was attended by six clergymen, and many other friends and citizens of Galt, who followed her to the grave in the Episcopal burying ground, a spot selected many years ago as the last resting place of her frail body. Dr. Thompson, Presbyterian minister, improved the mournful event by preaching in our church on the following Sabbath afternoon, from the text, "Now Jesus having loved his own that were in the world, he loved them to the end," and my dear brother, the Rev. R. Boyle preached her funeral sermon at night, from that affecting text, "We all do fade as a leaf." The audience was large and truly attentive at both services, while many were deeply affected, and wept much on the solemn occasion. "The righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance."

May the readers, and the writer of this, meet her in the realms of bliss !

MEMOIR OF MR. WILLIAM DEVENPORT.

WILLIAM DEVENPORT was born at Dudley, Worcestershire, January 4th, 1810. His mother was a pious woman, and her prayers and counsels were very useful to him in his boyhood, but of these he was deprived at the age of twelve by his mother's death. This was to him a great loss, and more especially so, as his father was a stranger to vital godliness, and consequently careless about the spiritual welfare of his offspring. William was now permitted to take his own course, yet notwithstanding the absence of parental restraint, his moral deportment was regular ; for he was religiously inclined from his youth. He was exceedingly fond of attending the Sabbath-school in connection with the Baptist chapel, Cannon street, Birmingham, at which he received the greatest portion of his education, and where his religious impressions were deepened, though still he was a stranger to the new birth unto righteousness.

In the year 1831, he was invited to hear the Primitive Methodist ministers ; he complied, and attended divine service in Balloon Street ; the word which he there heard was to him both spirit and life ; he believed to the saving of his soul, and from that time became a member of our society. In six months after his conversion he was put on the preachers' plan as an exhorter, which office he fulfilled with great credit and usefulness, so that the brethren were fully warranted in raising him to the position of a local preacher on full plan. At that time Birmingham belonged to Darlaston Circuit, which, like most of our stations in the early days of the Connexion, was very extensive, and this occasioned long journeys for the preachers, especially for those who lived on the borders, as did our brother : but from what we have known of him for twenty-nine years, we are sure that long journeys to him would be no discouraging task, for he always did the Lord's work with the utmost cheerfulness, promptitude, and punctuality. He often walked twenty-eight miles on the Lord's day, and preached three or four times, returning at a late hour, rested a short time, and then rose to pursue his daily toil. In this evangelistic work he was happy and useful.

William Devenport was one of those men whose character seemed to be formed by nature and grace in concert, and by each in rich profusion. Every part of his nature was tinged with piety, and instinctively obeyed the power of godliness that ruled in his heart. His countenance was as bright as a Nubian sky, for on it were seen in finely attuned radiance the cheerful rays of his sunny soul. All the fruits of the Divine Spirit clustered round him in mellow maturity ; kindness in him was as easy as the pulsations of his life ; love seemed as if it circulated throughout the whole man, as a refining fire, refining, fusing, and moulding all into the Divine likeness ; it looked out of his eyes in winning attraction and subduing softness, and sounded in his words in pathetic cadence. Peace was ever prominent in her dove-like form, holding out the olive branch to all. Joy was well sustained by a lively recollection of what the Almighty had done for him and in him, and by a bright and well grounded hope of immortality and eternal life. Mercy, long-suffering, brotherly kindness, and charity, found room and root-ground, to live and move and have their being in his constitution. He was certainly a good specimen of that type of a Christian, which St. Peter sketched in his time ;—one without spot and blameless,—for he had been diligent, in adding virtue to virtue and grace to grace, until he was meet for an entrance to be ministered unto him, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The beauties of holiness hung over him as a garment washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb.

Contemplate our departed friend, from whatever stand-point, or in whatever relationship of life you may, the features of the true saint appear—the man of God stands before you in well developed proportions. In his domestic domain he was king and priest, and yet he seemed to rule and reign without being seen or heard in his kingly capacity. As priest he bore the members of his household on his heart before God, in private and at the family altar, and prayed for each according to age. His deep solicitude for his own family, did not exclude from his loving and compassionate heart, the world that lieth in wickedness, nor the Church of Christ that was dear to him. No, these shared largely in his fervent supplications at the throne of grace. As a husband he was the most tender, attentive, faithful, and kind; as a father he was deeply anxious for the welfare of his children in both worlds, and through the blessing of God on his efforts in this department, he succeeded to a great extent, in drawing the deep and broad outlines of his own commendable character upon each of his offspring; they are branches truly worthy of the parent stock, and give clear evidence that they are under the pruning of that hand that never errs, nor cuts a twig without a cause. All the children who have reached sufficient age, are members of a Christian church; one son is in the ranks of our itinerant ministry. As a friend he was unwavering, and such a one that came near to the ancient ideal—"two souls in one body." He made room for his friends in his heart, and was such a man that his friends, if much in his company, and favoured with his confidence, could not keep him out of theirs. The writer enjoyed this privilege many years, and feels the loss most profoundly. As a master he was firm, impartial and kind; treating all his work-people with respect: they looked up to him and loved him as a father; and the news of his death wrung them with intense grief. As a tradesman, he was ingenious, persevering, upright, and obliging; any person was safe in his hands. Merchants who did business with him said it was a pleasure to call on him, for the sight of his face and the shake of his hand did them good. As a member and officer in the Church of Christ, he was in every way consistent, and regular and punctual in his attendance; neither the company of friends, the calls of business, nor the inclemency of the weather seldom or ever prevented him from being in his place in the house of God, if health would at all permit. He was, without exaggeration, or lavish laudation, one of the most genial souls a good man could either wish or expect to see on this side heaven; see him when or where you might, you would always find him happy, pleasant, and ready to do good in any possible way in his power, to a child, a beggar, or a prince. A beggar calling on him to ask for relief, would be sure to obtain it, and at the same time be closely interrogated concerning the state of his soul, and would receive suitable advice. He was one of those men whose uprightness was such, that even the foul tongue seemed to be held in, as with bit and bridle, from speaking reproachfully of him. If he had any fault it was on the side of charity.

About twenty-five years ago, a new epoch in the history of the subject of these lines commenced, in relation to his circumstances. Up to that time he laboured as a journeyman tool maker, when, for some reason unknown to the writer, he and his employer parted. Our friend then commenced business for himself as a gilt toy manufacturer, and, through the blessing of God on his industry and frugality, he prospered much, notwithstanding his large young family and much domestic affliction. At that time he bore nearly all the expenses of a chapel himself; still he increased in store and in confidence with men. In a few years after commencing business for himself, he was in a position to buy a freehold estate, in a very eligible situation, on which he built two houses and a factory, which he has left free from all incumbrance. Before these buildings were completed, we commenced the erection of our Lord Street Chapel, towards which he gave one hundred pounds, and in twelve months after he told a friend that the Lord had given him the whole of his hundred pounds back. He sowed in faith and reaped in joy.

Mr. Devenport was a very laborious and useful local missionary ; he could preach anywhere, at any time, to any kind of congregation. No matter how rough the rabble that collected round him in the streets of Birmingham, he was calm and pleasant in the midst of violent persecution. We were often associated with him in this work, and have seen him walk up to men of the baser sort with benignant looks and kind words ; and they have become orderly and have listened to the word of God attentively. He possessed the power of kindness to a considerable extent. We will here give a case or two by way of illustration. On one occasion he was preaching in one of the market places in this town, when some men came out of a beer house and insisted on his stopping preaching, and drinking with them ; he did so, and returned the vessel with a smile and thank you.* The men were so astonished at his manner that they stood to hear, and trembled and wept under the word. On another occasion he was preaching in the open air in a village, when some sons of Belial infuriated an evil disposed bull, and drove him up to the preacher ; the bull made as though he would have cast the preacher into the air : our friend kept his stand in calm confidence ; the bull stood as still as a statue, with his horns close to the preacher, who made the bull's head his Bible-board ! and there the animal remained until the close of the sermon. There is another incident we will record. Our friend was out on one of his long journeys ; in a very lonely part of the road a large Newfoundland dog came up to him, and walked by his side for a short distance. Brother Devenport did what he could to induce the dog to return, but all attempts were vain, so he became reconciled to his canine companion ; and he was not long before he found him of great service. Two rough looking men sprang out of the hedge, and made at our friend ; at that instant the dog leaped right at these ruffians and scoured them off. Our friend then went on his way without the dog or any further molestation.† Other striking and interesting incidents might be named, but we forbear, as we have published in a small book an enlarged account of his life.*

About eighteen months before his death, our departed brother was afflicted with a slight stroke of paralysis, which affected his head and one side; this took place during the service, when his second son was preaching the anniversary sermons in our chapel in Lord-street. He partially recovered from this attack, but not so as to resume his much beloved labour of preaching the Gospel; this was to him a great grief, but his grief never grew into a murmur. On the 19th of November last, he had symptoms of a slight cold, which somewhat affected his breathing, but not so as to excite any alarm in the family, until after tea on Lord's-day the 23rd, when he was taken suddenly worse, and had to be assisted up stairs. On reaching his bedside, he knelt and prayed most devoutly for all the members of his family by name, and especially so for his wife, and also for his son John, who is in our ministry, that he might be faithful and useful. During the night he continued to grow worse, and to give every indication that his end was near. His eldest son asked him if he was happy, he answered,

"O yes."

Again, "Father, is Jesus precious?"

He said, "O yes!"

At four o'clock on Monday morning, November 24th, 1862, the soul of this dear servant of God departed to be with Christ, in the calm triumph of faith, and in the fifty-third year of his age.

"Such is the Christian's parting hour,
So peacefully he sinks to rest;
When faith endued from heaven with power,
Sustains and cheers his languid breast."

Funeral sermons were preached in all our principal chapels on the station to very crowded congregations, by the writer and his colleague.

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN CORBETT.

MR. JOHN CORBETT was a local preacher and class-leader in the Primitive Methodist Connexion. He was born November 9th, 1828, and died in the Lord at Red Lake, in the Wrockwardine Wood Circuit, December 1st, 1862. While very young he was sent to the Sabbath-school, at Coalpit Bank, where his mind first became religiously impressed; and to this school he felt a strong attachment. From a child he was the subject of divine impressions, but he did not become decidedly pious until he was about fifteen years of age, when he was induced to attend the Primitive Methodist preaching at Mannerley lane. During the service God implanted within his heart the grace of true repentance, which led him earnestly to plead for pardon, and he received the knowledge of salvation by the remission of his sins. From that time he lived a most devout and spiritual life, and was noted by all who knew him for the fervency of his zeal and for the consistency of his conduct. He was to young men a pattern worthy of imitation. But though he was good, he was fallible, and we are sorry to say that in an unguarded hour he yielded to the force of temptation, and lost his peace by falling into sin. For some time he continued to groan beneath the yoke of bondage. During this time his distress of mind was frequently exceedingly great. Nor did he become happy until he was fully restored to the joys of salvation by the healing power of divine grace. He united in marriage with Miss Phillips, of Beverley, by whom he had two children that are left to lament his loss. He was a zealous and useful local preacher.

As a man he was much respected by all who knew him. As a husband and father he was kind and affectionate.

Some months previous to his death his health began to fail, and he continued to grow weaker until at length he was unable to follow his employment. He sought medical assistance, but was pronounced incurable, his disease being an affection of the heart: this was followed by dropsy, which soon terminated in death. His sufferings for several weeks were very great, but divine grace sustained and comforted him. He would have liked to live for the sake of his dear wife and little ones, but was fully resigned to the will of God.

During his illness the enemy at times was permitted to assail him; but in the strength of divine grace he was enabled to triumph through the blood of Christ. He then continued exceedingly happy, and while contemplating the all-sufficiency of Christ his soul was filled with peace, and with much fervour he gave out those beautiful lines—

“Jesus, thy blood and righteousness,
My beauty are, my glorious dress;
Midst flaming worlds in these arrayed,
With joy shall I lift up my head.”

I visited him several times during his illness, and have no doubt he is now singing of redeeming love in heaven. A little before he died he requested his sister to sing the following verse:—

“Hark, a voice divides the sky!
Happy are the faithful dead;
In the Lord who sweetly die,
They from all their toils are freed.”

I preached his funeral sermon in our chapel, at Coalpit Bank, to a densely crowded audience, from Revelations the 14th chapter and 13th verse, and trust that good was done.

MEMOIR OF MR. J. BARKER.

JOHN BARKER, the subject of this sketch, was born in the village of Salmsbury, near Preston, in the year 1818, and died at Bolton, December 16th, 1862. In early life he was under the influence of ungodly parents, until he was about nine years of age, when his father was brought to a saving acquaintance with the truth; but from that time a parent's best efforts were put forth to train up his children in the fear of the Lord: hence they were taken to our Sabbath-school of which their father became a teacher. But the early neglect of religious training in the family, was no doubt to some extent the occasion of our late brother's paying little or no heed to the teaching in the school, although he did not neglect to attend. But at last, not from compulsion but from choice, he gave heed to the lessons taught him, and thenceforth it would have been impossible to find one more strongly attached to Primitive Methodism. He was also very fond of music, and from a very early period in his history became connected with the choir.

When about nineteen years of age he was convinced that he was a sinner and was led to seek the Lord with strong cries and tears; he then obtained the pardon of his sins, and was enabled by faith to sing—

“My God is reconciled,” &c.

From the day of his conversion he was determined to be on the Lord's side—again and again exclaiming that he meant to see what there was at the end. And though at times he was called to pass through severe trials, yet he would invariably say, “My father knows best how to bring me.” The year 1844 was a very important one to him, for in that year he lost an affectionate father after a very severe affliction; and he also entered into the marriage state with one of the members of our society. He was thus brought to undertake new duties and responsibilities, but in each situation, whether as a son, husband, father, or friend, his conduct was invariably kind. During a period of more than twenty years he officiated as the leader of the choir in Newport Street Chapel, thus rendering valuable service in the public worship of God.

In addition to his duties as leading singer he was for many years assistant leader, and also for a considerable time the Society steward. Some years ago he removed to Salford, and while there the same spirit actuated him as at Bolton, hence he at once found his way to the house of God, and his services in public worship were called into immediate requisition. While residing there death visited his household, taking from his side his beloved partner and a child. Yet no murmuring escaped his lips. His friends had reason to believe that during his residence there the seeds of the disease were sown which resulted in his death, yet he did not appear to think so. Being left with a family of small children he again entered the marriage state, and his surviving partner always found him kind and affectionate. He only worked under two employers during his life, for finding that removing to Salford had not met his expectations, he asked for work again under his old employer, and at once obtained it, and with him he remained while able to work. His affliction, however, was long and painful, yet he always bore it with Christian fortitude. While confined to his bed, he for a time did not enjoy that ecstasy of feeling which many of God's children have experienced, yet he was always enabled to rely on the sufficiency of the atonement; he knew that he was one of God's children. One day being visited by a friend, as he entered the room, with as loud a voice as possible he exclaimed, "I shall be singing the hallelujah chorus soon! I shall soon be in heaven!" During the last three weeks of his life he enjoyed very much of the presence of God. He knew his end was approaching; he had all prepared, and was ready for the coming of his Lord. His joys increased as his end drew near; he would clap his hands, and shout at the top of his voice.

Thus our dear departed brother was brought to the gates of death, and as he passed through them he was enabled to shout, "Victory, victory, through the blood of the Lamb!" He sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, December 16th, 1862.

THE GLORIOUS CONQUESTS OF THE LAMB.

A SERMON BY THE REV. JAMES GARNER.

"These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful."—Revelation xvii. 14.

PERHAPS no part of the inspired volume is so difficult for commentators to explain as the Revelations made to John the Divine while he was in a state of banishment on the Isle of Patmos. Some things which he saw and heard in those divine manifestations were of the most sublime and awful character. But the style adopted in recording them is so profound and figurative, that, in many instances, the true meaning seems obscured from the penetration of the human intellect. What was the design of the Almighty in revealing those events in such symbolic and mysterious representations, we cannot easily determine. This we must leave for the future to unfold, and in the mean time we must make the best use of those portions which are the most plain and most easy to be understood.

It must be admitted that in some respects it is difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain the precise signification of our text. In the twelfth and thirteenth verses we read, "The ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings ; these have one mind. And shall give their power and strength unto the beast." Mr. Wesley argues that the beast here referred to "is papal anti-Christ, and the ten kings are ten secular potentates cotemporary with each other, who were with the beast (the Pope) probably in some convention : " that they had authority as kings, but had no kingdom ; but that they strengthened the beast by transferring their power to him. "They were all of one mind, and gave their war-like power and royal authority in support of the beast, or papal anti-Christ." Certainly this explanation appears very plausible. But still there is a difficulty in determining who these ten kings were, and pointing out the particular period when they exercised their power and authority. Dr. A. Clarke, who seems favourable to the notion entertained by Mr. Wesley, says, "the horns must be found among the ten great States of Europe at the commencement of the Reformation. These were exactly ten, viz, France, Spain, England, Scotland, The Empire, Sweden, Denmark, Poland, Hungary, and Portugal." The careful reader will observe that "The Empire," or Latin Kingdom, which must be regarded as "The head" of the papal government, is said by the doctor to be one of the horns. On which he remarks, "The Germanic Empire was not only a Latin power, but at the same time was acknowledged by all Europe to have precedency of all the others, and must, therefore, in symbolic language, have a double representation. Hence The Empire as one of the powers of the Latin monarchy, was a horn of the beast, and having precedency of all the others was its revived head." This criticism may be admitted as conclusive by some, but strongly objected to by others ; and therefore rather than dogmatise on what appears to be somewhat doubtful, we prefer taking a more general view of the subject, by,

I. Considering that THE LAMB AND HIS FOLLOWERS HAVE THEIR ENEMIES. And yet how strange it seems that Christ, who possessed every excellency, who was full of grace and truth, should have his enemies, should be hated, despised, rejected, insulted, and slain. Well may it be said of him, "he was hated without a cause."

Let us view the subject historically. Among the open and avowed enemies of Christ may be found,

1. The Jews. There is no difficulty in collecting evidence in confirmation of this. The writers of the New Testament inform us particularly how Christ and the first Christians suffered in the cause of truth from the apostate sons of Abraham. Jesus Christ himself was the subject of their hatred and dire persecution. Herod the king showed his enmity towards him in slaughtering the babes of Bethlehem when he was in search of the infant Jesus, with a design to take away his life. The Evangelists record a series of dreadful scenes which ended on Calvary's dark and bloody mount, where the infuriated Jews crucified their Saviour and King. And after his death they continued to persecute him in the persons of the holy apostles, who suffered every kind of persecution which a malicious and deluded people could invent, or their mad and inflamed zeal execute. We need only read the Acts of the Apostles, or we might say the sufferings and persecutions of the apostles, to be convinced of this. Like their Lord and Master, they were despised and rejected of men, men of sorrows and acquainted with grief, treated with contempt and almost every kind of indignity. We might mention the martyrdom of Stephen, the imprisonment of James, the banishment of John, and the persecutions of Paul and Silas. So universal and obstinate was the opposition endured by the holy apostles that St. Paul declared that bonds and imprisonments awaited them in every city. And in the second Epistle to the Corinthians he says, "I am in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice I was beaten with rods, once I was stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I was in the deep." He was constantly in perils, being harassed by his enemies, the Jews, who were exceedingly mad against him. "In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness." And these persecutions were not confined to St. Paul exclusively, for in the first Epistle he refers to others besides himself and Silas. "For I think that God hath set forth us, the apostles, last, as it were appointed to death; for even unto the present hour we both hunger and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling place. We are made the filth of the world, and the offscouring of all things unto this day." And,

2. The followers of the Lamb were persecuted by the Pagans. Under "Rome pagan" the blood of Christian martyrs was spilt like water. The first general campaign, or open attack on Christianity by the Pagans in the form of deadly warfare, was set on foot by Nero, about thirty years after the ascension of Christ. This infamous wretch, we are informed, falsely accused the innocent Christians of setting fire to the imperial city, and then in the most cruel and shameful manner put thousands of them to death. They were torn to pieces, devoured by ravenous beasts, and many of them were fastened to crosses, wrapped in combustible garments, and burnt alive in the emperor's own garden, where he mounted his car that he might conveniently feast his eyes on their sufferings, and delight his ears with the agonizing shrieks of dying women. And this persecution was followed by nine others, some of which were as cruel as the first. These persecutions were sanctioned respectively by Domitian, Trajan, Antonius, Severus, Maximinus, Decius, Valerian, Aurelian, and Diocletian. These pagan powers did indeed make war with the Lamb. The last persecution, under Diocletian, was perhaps the most dreadful. This lasted ten years, during which period as many as 17,000 were slain in one month. In Egypt alone no fewer than 144,000 Christians died through the fatigues of banishment and other hardships inflicted upon them. Hence the pagan persecutions were a long and bloody war against the Lamb and those that were with him.

3. Mohammedanism also makes war with the Lamb. Mohammed was a bold and successful impostor, who commenced his war with Christianity, as well as with Paganism and Judaism, about 1300 years ago; and in order to accomplish his artful designs, he had recourse to almost every political measure. To palliate his conduct, it may be said that he lived in a dark and degenerate age,—when Christianity had become corrupted with Paganism, in the form of papallicity; that it assumed every characteristic of apostasy; and that, therefore, he was not culpable in striking at this false system. There is not much weight, or strength of argument, in this plausible excuse; for, if Mohammed had been raised up by the Almighty, as some distinguished Christian authors have admitted and laboured to prove, as a scourge to the fallen churches of Christendom, as well as to better the moral condition of the pagan population of the old world, or the eastern nations, he certainly would have had more charity and discrimination, and less carnal policy and hypocritical selfishness in his plans and in the execution of his schemes. In order to gain disciples he professed to have immediate revelations from God, but when this did not answer his purposes, after he had gained numerical strength, he resorted to physical force and various coercive schemes; and in the end he ventured to prosecute a war of extermination. The religion of Mohammed, therefore, breathes out threatenings and slaughter against all, whether Jews, Pagans, or Christians, who will not succumb to the crescent and subscribe to the Koran. As young Hannibal swore eternal enmity to the Romans, so the bigoted and furious disciples of Mohammed have sworn eternal enmity to Christ and his followers, and deem it right to take away the lives of any and all who will not acknowledge Mohammed to be superior to Christ. Mohammedanism, therefore, makes war with the Lamb.

4. Popery, though professedly Christian, makes war with the Lamb, and those who are with him. This gigantic political system, which goes by the name of Catholicism, and professes to comprehend all that is essential to Christianity, is perhaps the most powerful enemy to Christ and his followers which ever existed on the earth. Whatever may be said in defence of popery, or whatever good may be found in her creeds, and many of her practices, her scarlet garments are deeply dyed with the blood of the saints. The deeds of her propaganda, and the doings of her vatican, the matchless cruelty of her inquisitions, the tortures of her dungeons and gallies, of her fires and gibbets, and of her innumerable instruments of death, and the rivers of innocent blood which she has wantonly spilt, her acts of unutterable infamy committed within the walls of her massy convents, which cannot be reckoned up in number, are still crying for vengeance. St. John says, "I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus ; and when I saw her I wondered with great admiration ;" or, according to the original, "I wondered exceedingly." He wondered that she was permitted thus to make war with the Lamb and his followers. But we are sometimes told by the advocates of popery that Protestants, in their turn, when in power, have persecuted the disciples of popery. We believe they have ; and we do not hesitate to say, that in so doing they have proved themselves to be unworthy of the Christian name. The Divine prohibitory law, which says, "Thou shalt not kill," or "Thou shalt do no murder," is equally binding on Papists and Protestants ; and to persecute, so as to take away life, merely because a man will not endorse a religious creed, is to commit murder ; no matter what council, synod, bench, potentate, prince or pope may sanction it—it is murder ; it is making war with the Lamb, who strictly prohibits all such wicked and tyrannical conduct.

5. All infidels are making war with the Lamb ; free-thinkers, many of whom deny the Lord that bought them ; deists, who disbelieve God's Holy Word ; atheists, who say there is no God. The principles which they embrace necessarily lead them to war with God and truth ; to oppose Christianity and exalt human reason ; to dethrone Christ, and scoff at his rule and authority. So did Paine and Voltaire ; so did Hume and Hobbes ; and so do all their followers, who shelter under the various plausible names of rationalists, socialists, secularists, &c. They are all at war with the cross, and striving to overthrow the Christian system.

6. All those who are openly wicked, whatever be their creed, are practically making war with the Lamb, who inculcates holiness both in heart and in life. Sin is a revolt against God, a blow struck at the cross and the throne and government of Christ, and an injury inflicted on Christianity. Christ came to destroy the works of the devil, and to atone for the sin of the world ; and those, therefore, who commit sin strengthen Satan's kingdom, and make war with the army and interests of the living God.

7. And all merely nominal Christians are among the enemies of Christ ; for those who are not with him are against him. "No man can serve two masters." Therefore, those who are not on the Lord's side are on the devil's side. We cannot in this war be neutral. We must be fighting either under the standard of King Messiah, or under the banner of Satan. It behoveth us, therefore, seriously to consider to which army we really belong ; and to assist in coming to a right conclusion, we shall—

II. DESCRIBE THE FRIENDS OF CHRIST. They that are with him "are called, and chosen, and faithful." Let us briefly consider this delineation of character.

1. The friends of Christ are with him. They are with him in sentiment, in feeling, in design and purpose. Not merely in name and profession, but united to him by supernatural ties. They are joined to Christ in one spirit; and as their hearts are united to him, they will not forsake him in conflict, danger, and trouble; but they will follow him through good or evil report; through honour and dishonour; and nothing is able to separate them from him,—neither poverty nor riches, neither friendship nor persecution, neither life nor death, nor any living creature in the universe. (Rom. viii. 35—39.)

2. They are called. Those who are with Christ were first called by him, i.e., invited to participate in the blessings of salvation. Some divines insist, that in addition to a general calling, those who are with him have been effectually called. The call of such as are chosen has most certainly been effectual. This cannot be disputed. For unless they had been effectually called they would never have been chosen. Many who are invited to join the ranks of Emanuel, and urged by the most affectionate appeals and pressing exhortations, continue to resist the Holy Ghost, and therefore such calls have no saving effect upon their hearts. Hence, though many are called, but few are chosen.—Matt. xxii. 14. But those who are said to be with the Lamb, have obeyed the heavenly calling, which is designated by the Apostle a “high calling,” and a “holy calling,” because it places them in a high position, and ultimately leads to heaven itself. They are called to sustain high honours, to perform important duties, and ultimately to be rewarded with an eternal weight of glory; to bear the cross and endure the toils of warfare for a time, and then wear the crown of life, and enjoy the rest and glory of heaven for ever.

3. They are chosen. The meaning of the original is, they are approved of. And they are chosen irrespective of rank, station in life, or intellectual attainments. “God hath chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound things which are mighty, and base things of this world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things which are; that no flesh may glory in his presence.”—1 Cor. i. 27—30. Christ makes choice of such as are willing to deny themselves, take up their cross and follow him. St. Paul addresses Timothy as a “chosen soldier of Christ.”—2 Tim. iii. 4. And St. Peter designates believers “A chosen generation, a holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye may show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light.”—1 Peter ii. 9.

4. They are faithful. That is, they are firm in their adherence to the truth and to the duties of their calling; loyal and true to their allegiance; constant in the performance of the duties comprehended in the service ; exact in attending to the divine commands ; not fickle and changeable, but firm, and stable, and true. Faithful in temptation—"They resist the devil and he flees from them." In tribulation—"None of these things move me." In persecution—"Neither count I my life dear to me." In poverty—"I know how to suffer need." In prosperity—"I know how to abound." Under all circumstances—"I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." Hence they are faithful ; enduring toil, bearing hardships, resisting temptation, willing to suffer, and fight and die with their glorious Leader in the field of battle, that they may reign with him in the world of glory. These, then, are the friends of Christ. They are with him, called, chosen and faithful.

Now are you the friends, or the enemies of Christ? If enemies, then I ask you, why? for what reason? Why should you make war against your best friend—"the Lamb?" Here Christ is spoken of in reference to his vicarious office as "the Lamb of God," who bore our sins in his own body on the cross: on which he died "the just for the unjust." Why should you oppose him, and take sides with the devil and sin? They have no right to your service or allegiance; and you must bear in mind that those who are fighting against the Lamb are engaged in an expedition which will involve their eternal ruin. For notwithstanding their combined efforts, and united exertions to crush the Saviour, the King of kings and Lord of lords will overcome them. "But the Lamb shall overcome them, for he is King of kings, and Lord of lords," which leads us to notice—

III. THE KINGLY AUTHORITY OF CHRIST, AND HIS GLORIOUS CONQUEST OVER ALL HIS ENEMIES. "He is King of kings." "For all kings shall bow down to him, and serve him, and his enemies shall lick the dust." But

1. The Lord Jesus is not only King over all the earth, and the only Ruler of Princes, but the Lord Jehovah, "the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." The government of universal dominion is upon his shoulder, and on his head are many crowns; in his hand is the sceptre of supreme authority, and his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom. Our Saviour himself alludes to his peculiar dignity where he asks the Pharisees, "If Messiah be the son of David, why then does David call him Lord?" As though he had said, David, as a progenitor, could not owe any respect or homage to a remote descendant; nor can the difficulty be removed, but by acknowledging that though Christ in his human nature was David's son, yet by being the pre-existent Jehovah he was David's Lord. This we presume is the only legitimate method of answering our Lord's question. And viewing the subject in this light we shall see that Christ was David's son, and David's Lord.

2. Let us notice the peculiar dignity of Christ arising from his glorious victories. "The Lamb" who was slain as a sacrifice, but is now exalted to the throne of his glory, shall overcome all his enemies. "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool." "Rule thou in the midst of thine enemies; the Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies, he shall wound the heads over many countries." "He shall overcome them." The power of Christ will be manifest in all,—by the destruction of either sin or the sinner. "Thou shalt break them in pieces like a potter's vessel." Those who now yield to the strivings of his Spirit, and humbly submit to his Divine authority, are broken to be formed anew into vessels of honour, fitted for the Master's use; while those who continue to sin and rebel must be dashed in pieces by the blow of his almighty and eternal vengeance.

The enemies of Christ are twofold, viz., temporal and spiritual. Among the temporal enemies of the Saviour, as we have before observed, were the Jews, who rejected him, crucified him, and persecuted his disciples. But the vial of his wrath was poured out upon them; their temple was demolished, their battlements of defence levelled with the ground, and those who escaped the edge of the sword were driven into exile, and to this day they remain a degraded race, an outcast people, bearing the marks of subjugation. The mighty have fallen, and the enemies of the Lamb have been made to lick the dust. The Romans were open enemies of Christ; but the conquerors of Jerusalem were in their turn smitten by the rod of Christ's strength. Nero, Domitian, and all the rest of those merciless pagan persecutors, have long since been swept away as chaff before the wind. They have been weighed in the balances, and found wanting. The throne of the seven hills has fallen, idols are crushed, and the whole empire has bowed in humble subjugation under the banner of the crucified, despised Jesus of Nazareth. The Lamb overcame them.

The kings and rulers both at Jerusalem and Rome, and in almost every other city, took counsel together to destroy the kingdom of Christ, and tried to blast the rising and spreading glory of Christianity. The heathen raged against the apostles as men worthy of no other treatment than disgrace, imprisonment, and death. But what was the final result? Why, their very efforts tended only to enlarge the way for the more conspicuous and glorious victories of the Redeemer, in which the truth of Christ shone forth with increasing splendour and overpowering lustre.

In vain did worldly eloquence become the ally of superstition and prejudice. Sustained by the arm of the Almighty, and constrained by the love of Christ, the heralds of the gospel pursued their onward march through peril, toil, and pain; through floods, and flames, and death,— from city to city and from province to province. The weak and foolish things of this world, in the persons of the despised Galileans, were chosen by God to confound the wise and mighty. Philosophers and kings were awed before them, and God alone was glorified. "He that sitteth in the heavens spake to them in his wrath, and vexed them in his sore displeasure." He spake to the Jews, who rejected him and said "We will not have him to reign over us," and he smote them by the sword of Titus, and overthrew their once glorious city in blazing ruins. And in like manner he spoke to the opposing Roman Emperors, he vexed and destroyed all the contending factions, until the ensign of Christianity, which had been esteemed the symbol of degradation, was assumed by Constantine as the brightest ornament of the imperial throne. "The Lamb" overcame them.

And what Messiah did to these anti-christian powers of olden times, he will repeat, sooner or later, in the punishment which he will inflict upon those who now reject him. These despisers of Christ will, if they do not speedily repent, "wonder and perish." There may be a period when the church, like her Redeemer while yet on earth in the form of a servant, may be oppressed and afflicted; but her righteousness shall come forth as the light, and her judgment as the noonday. Men who once preached Christ crucified may apostatize, labour to disrobe him of his mediatorial glory, place him on a level with poor, weak, erring man, and brand the sincere and faithful who hold to the truth of God's most holy Word as irrational fanatics; but those who are with Christ, called, chosen, and remain faithful, shall overcome, and ultimately rise in triumph with their Head.

Finally. In this discomfiture, all Christ's spiritual enemies will be included. The reign of sin must come to an end; its guilt and power will be annihilated by the efficacy of the cross. The sceptre of Satan, the potentate of hell, and prince of darkness, will be smitten by the rod of the Saviour's power; and death, the last enemy, shall be destroyed. He "who hath abolished death and brought life and immortality to light," will come again at the last day to complete his conquest over death and hell; for at his supreme command death and hell must give back their dead; their trophies will be retaken by the final conquest of a mightier King, at whose voice the sepulchres shall be unlocked, and the dead shall rise incorruptible and immortal. "The King of kings, and Lord of lords," shall thus overcome all his enemies, both temporal and spiritual. Let us, then, willingly submit at once to his sway, "and crown him Lord of all." Amen.

WORKS OF CREATION.

VALUE OF FORESTS IN THE ECONOMY OF NATURE.

KING FREDERICK WILLIAM of Prussia wanted money. One of his noblemen, wishing to secure his favour, promised to procure it him without loan or tax, if he would permit certain forests (the pine groves on the sea-coast from Dantzic to Pillau) to be removed. The king not only allowed the forests in Prussia to be cleared, which at that time were certainly of little value; but he also permitted the whole of the woods on the Frische-Nehrung to be felled, so far as they were Prussian. The financial operation was perfectly prosperous; the king had money. But, in the elementary operations which proceeded therefrom, the State received such an injury, that its effects remain even to this day. The sea winds can now sweep, unimpeded, over the denuded hills. The Frische-Haff is already half filled with sand—its depth being now in no place more than twelve feet—and sedges grow for some distance in its shallowing waters, threatening to convert it into a monstrous swamp. The anchorage extending between Elbing, the sea, and Königsberg is endangered, and the fishing in the Haff is injured. In vain have all possible efforts been made, through sand-heaps and pastures of coarse sea-grass, to cover again these hills with matted roots. The wind mocks at every exertion. The operation of the Prussian nobleman brought the king two hundred thousand thalers; now the people would give millions if they had the woods back again.—Dr. Karl Müller.

THE RAINBOW OF THE COVENANT.

I BEGIN to wonder who was the first man to analyse the rainbow, and arrive at a clear idea of the causes which combine in its production. The falling shower and the direct light of the sun or moon must, from the first unfolding of this wondrous revelation, have been seen to be its primary elements. The allegory of the winds, in the twenty-third book of the Iliad, indicates more than a superficial knowledge of this grand phenomenon; and Virgil, in the Æneid, almost antedates the philosophy of Descartes and Newton; and Martial was not far from a scientific definition. Aristotle believed himself to be the first who had seen a lunar rainbow—the loveliest of all aerial spectacles, except on those rare occasions when the aurora borealis displays its darting flashes, ruby, and emerald, and amethyst, in this climate. But Pliny knew almost as much as we do about it—certainly as to its primal causes; and Plutarch cites it as an index of the knowledge of his time. Whatever may have been the thoughts of Adam, when the sunshine first resolved into prismatic colours, in an arch expanding over the region of the happy garden, those of Noah might well be more profound, for the rainbow became a part of his life, and through him a pledge of Divine mercy to the end of the world. “I do set my bow in the clouds”—marvellous utterance of a Father considerate of his children. Those words possess me, as I look out over the grey sky where the rainbow glowed a few minutes since; and they seem to me to have all the force of an authority for research into the mind of God, the mind of man, and the ways of nature. . . . And how deep a hold has that post-diluvian rainbow taken of the mind of man! It must be records of that fact we find cropping out in the old mythologies ; as in the carrying of the rainbow-coloured fans in the procession of Apis, and the combination of the rainbow and the dove in hieroglyphics. Bryant cites the names of the two attendants on Cleopatra, the Rainbow and the Dove, as indicating the priestly office, and bringing down to a later epoch in Egyptian history a remembrance of the circumstances under which the earth was again peopled. The rainbow was certainly the most renowned of Arkite emblems ; and I know not why Hesiod should designate it "The Great Oath," except through the prevailing power of a tradition Divine in its origin. As such, Homer knows it well, and, in accordance with established usage in the ancient world, he calls it, in a hymn to Selene, the sign and intimation (of Divine promise) to mortals. The appeal to it by the Deity as something superior to the secondary gods is characteristic of Hesiod, who describes Iris as the servant of Jove, who fetches from afar, in a golden cup, the waters of many names, making her the representative of covenant and of purification. Osiris entering the ark, Deucalion reproving the lawlessness of the men of violence by whom he was surrounded, Nanacus sacrificing in the temple, are but versions of a history of which the heavens bear the best secular memorial, after the special and Divine record given for our edification.—Hibberd's "Brambles and Bay Leaves."

PROPORTION OF THE SEXES.

At birth 106 males appear for every 100 females, or only 94·3 females to every 100 males ; yet, by the law of nature, the tendency to succumb under disease is so much greater in the male than in the female, that by about the eighteenth year of life the proportion of the sexes becomes equalized, 100 males being alive at that age for every 100 females. After that period other elements come in to disturb the natural balance of the sexes ; but these other causes are chiefly felt in a small country like Scotland, where, from the small chance of advancement for the youth who stays at home, emigration is largely resorted to. Were the proportion to be regulated by the respective tendency of each sex to death (the males dying in a higher ratio than the females at all ages), then in the whole population the proportion would be about 102 females for every 100 males ; or nearly that of the German Confederacy, which is 102·3 females to every 100 males. But the excessive drain on the males by emigration, and by supplying our merchant shipping, royal navy, and army, going along with this higher male death-rate, increases the proportion of females in Scotland to 111 females for every 100 males in the general population.

As it is always interesting to compare the statistics of this country with those of the kingdoms of Europe, the relative proportion of the sexes in a few of these may be mentioned. In Prussia, in 1858, there were 100·7 females for every 100 males. In Denmark, in 1860, there were 100·8 females for every 100 males. In Spain, in 1859, there were 101·5 females for every 100 males. In Holland, in 1858, there were 101·8 females for every 100 males. In France, in 1856, there were 101·9 females for every 100 males. In the combined States of the German Union, in 1856, there were 102·3 females to every 100 males. In Norway, in 1855, there were 104·2 females to every 100 males. In Sweden, in 1855, there were 106·3 females to every 100 males ; while in England and Wales, in 1861, there were 105·2 females to every 100 males; the proportion of Scotland being 111·2 females to every 100 males. It is thus seen that Scotland far exceeds all these countries in the excess of her female population.—Report on the Census of Scotland, 1861.

WHITFIELD'S PREACHING.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE BY REV. J. C. RYLE.

I. FIRST and foremost you must remember Whitfield preached a singularly pure Gospel. Few men ever gave their hearers so much wheat and so little chaff. He did not get into his pulpit to talk about his party, his interest, or his office. He was perpetually telling you about your sins, your heart, and Jesus Christ, in the way that the Bible speaks of them. "Oh! the righteousness of Jesus Christ!" he would frequently say, "I must be excused if I mention it in almost all my sermons." This, you may be sure, is the corner-stone of all preaching that God honours. It must be pre-eminently a manifestation of truth.

II. As to the substance of Whitfield's theological teaching, the simplest account I can give of it is that it was purely evangelical. There were four main things that he never lost sight of in his sermons. These four were—man's complete ruin by sin, and consequent natural corruption of heart; man's complete redemption by Christ, and complete justification before God by faith in Christ; man's need of regeneration by the Spirit, and entire renewal of heart and life; and man's utter want of any title to be considered a living Christian, unless he is dead to sin and lives a holy life.

III. Whitfield's preaching was singularly lucid and simple. You might not like his doctrine, perhaps. But at any rate you could not fail to understand what he meant. His style was easy, plain, and conversational. He seemed to abhor long and involved sentences. He always saw his mark, and went direct at it. He seldom or never troubled his hearers with long arguments and intricate reasonings. Simple Bible statements, pertinent anecdotes, and apt illustrations, were the more common weapons that he used. The consequence was that his hearers always understood him. He never shot above their heads. Never did man seem to enter so thoroughly into the wisdom of Archbishop Usher's saying, "To make easy things seem hard is easy, but to make hard things easy is the office of a great preacher."

IV. The crowning excellence of Whitfield's teaching was, that he spoke of men, things, and doctrines, in the way that the Bible speaks of them. God, Christ, and the Spirit—sin, justification, conversion, and sanctification—impenitent sinners the most miserable of people—believing saints the most privileged of people—the world a vain and empty thing—heaven the only rest for an immortal soul—the devil a tremendous and ever-watchful foe—holiness the only true happiness—hell a real and certain portion for the unconverted. These were the kind of things which filled Whitfield's mind, and formed the staple of his ministry.

RIGHT EXAMPLE.

As a basis for a few practical remarks, I will adopt the following sentiment, Let us be what we wish our children to become. I shall endeavour to show this to be not only our best policy, but our imperative duty. All conscientious Christian parents feel an absorbing interest in whatever concerns their children, and realise more or less their own responsibility in regard to their temporal and eternal interests. What higher incentive to right action can possibly be presented to the minds of such parents than the fact that their dear little ones' character and destiny will be shaped by their example and influence?

And who will not admit that our influence will be much more potent if our example is in perfect keeping with our precepts? Some one has said, that "he who cannot govern himself is not fit to govern another." We think this a correct position, and although self-government is as difficult as it is desirable, we have sufficient authority for saying that this attainment may be accomplished. Let us then, as parents, obey the sacred injunction, "Know thyself," and strive to cultivate in our own characters and lives the identical graces which we should wish our children to possess. How can we expect them to be amiable in their deportment, while we are constantly exhibiting before them the reverse of this spirit? Or can we expect them to practise self-denial, by sacrificing their own appetites and feelings for the good of others, while we indulge in our selfish propensities, regardless of the influences we are exerting upon those around us? Can we lose sight of the claims of God upon our best affections, and show ourselves indifferent to the interests of our fellow-beings, and yet reasonably hope to see our children growing up in the love and fear of God, and fulfilling the blessed law of Jesus, "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you"? Certainly not.

In view of these facts, and the obligations resting upon us, we have felt ready to exclaim, with the apostle, "Who is sufficient for these things?" But let us not be disheartened—the end to be obtained is of sufficient importance to demand a cheerful sacrifice of self-ease, and we have the assurance that our "labour shall not be in vain in the Lord." "As we sow, so also shall we reap;" and is not the precious promise, "My grace shall be sufficient," enough to stimulate us to actively engage in this labour of love? And shall we not receive ample remuneration in the peace of our own souls, besides witnessing the fruits of our labours in the correct principles of our children, and our future reward in the "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?" C.

MAKE YOUR HOME PLEASANT.

A CHILD may as easily be led to associate pleasure with home ideas as to think of it in connection with the home of his playmates. Certainly, if allowed to do so, he can as readily connect happiness with parents, brothers, and sisters, as with those of other kin. And a child will do so unless happiness and pleasure when he calls for them under the parental roof, respond "Not at home!" All home pictures should be bright ones. The domestic hearth should be clean and joyous.

If home life is well-ordered, the children having, according to age, work-time, play-time, books, games, and household sympathies, they will love and find pleasure there.

Give the little ones slates and pencils, and encourage their attempts to make pictures. Drawing will amuse them when noisy plays have lost their zest or are unseasonable, and the art will be useful to them in all the business of after life. Have them read to each other stories and paragraphs of your selection, and save the funny things and the pleasant ones you see in papers and books, to read them at your leisure. You cannot imagine how much it will please them, and how it will bind them to you. But choose well for them, for the impression made on their minds now will last when the hills crumble. Have them sing together, and sing with them, teaching them songs and hymns. Let them sing all day, like the birds, at all proper times. Have them mutually interested in the same things, amusements, and occupations, having specified times for each, so that their habits will be orderly. Let them work together—knitting and sewing—both boys and girls. They enjoy it equally unless the boys are taught that it is unmanly to understand girls' work. They should know how to do it, and practically, too, as thereby they may avoid much discomfort in future life. Let them work together in the garden—boys and girls—both need out-of-door work. Together let them enjoy their games, riddles, all their plays, books, and work, while the parents' eyes direct and sympathise, and blend in loving accord. Have the children do some little things daily for your personal comfort ; let them see that it gives you pleasure, and that you depend on them for the service. This will attach them to you more strongly ; and if they feel responsibility, even in matters of themselves trivial, and are sure of your sympathy, their affections and joys will cluster around the home hearth.

Children like to be useful ; it makes them happy. So give them work-time as well as play-time. But, in any case, and in all cases give them sympathy. Express love for them.

ON HOME.

MORE than building showy mansions,
 More than dress and fine array,
 More than domes and lofty steeples,
 More than station, power, and sway,
 Make your home both neat and tasteful,
 Bright and pleasant, always fair,
 Where each heart shall rest contented,
 Grateful for each beauty there.

More than lofty, swelling titles,
 More than fashion's luring glare,
 More than mammon's gilded honours,
 More than thought can well compare,
 See that home is made attractive
 By surroundings pure and bright—
 Trees arranged with taste and order—
 Flowers, with all their sweet delight.

Seek to make your home most lovely ;
 Let it be a smiling spot,
 Where, in sweet contentment resting,
 Care and sorrow are forgot.

Where the flowers and trees are waving
 Birds will sing their sweetest song ;
 Where the purest thoughts will linger.
 Confidence and love belong.

Make your home a little Eden ;
 Imitate her smiling bowers ;
 Let a neat and simple cottage
 Stand among bright trees and flowers ;
 There what fragrance and what brightness
 Will each blooming rose display ;
 Here a simple vine-clad arbour
 Brightens through each summer day.

There each heart will rest contented,
 Seldom wishing far to roam ;
 Or, if roaming, still will cherish
 Memories of that pleasant home.
 Such a home makes man the better,
 Pure and lasting its control ;
 Home, with pure and bright surroundings.
 Leaves its impress on the soul.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

SABBATH SCHOOL RECOLLECTIONS.

FEW can so highly appreciate the character and work of the teacher as those who have been largely benefited by the efforts of some loving and earnest worker in the Sabbath school. Those who have thus striven with self-denying purpose for our spiritual advantage, have a first and foremost place in our affections. We have love and admiration for those who first led our steps into some path of knowledge which has since been to us a mine of hidden treasure, rich in profit and delight. We remember with gratitude their patience over our many failings and shortcomings, and their long-continued efforts before they could help us to attain any proficiency. But we retain still greater affection and reverence for those who first ministered to us successfully in divine things ; those who removed from us the objections we had to entertain religious subjects ; those who, with more than ordinary care and diligence, impressed our minds with truths of heavenly wisdom, and who, by the charm and loveliness of their characters, made us see the beauty and dignity of a holy life. For these our hearts are moved with profound emotion ; we bless their labours, we magnify their office, and we joy in their works of faith and labours of love, the more because they did them so noiselessly and disinterestedly.

We owe to such no ordinary respect and veneration. They have imparted to us knowledge without which our life, with its fierce struggles and mighty temptations, would have been a wreck; without which, life with its strange adventures, its blighted hopes, its weary waitings, would be a still greater mystery; without which we should have to mourn the parting of friends with unmingled sorrow, and stand beside the graves of our dead without hope; without which, with all our earnest longings, our inquiring dispositions, our sensibility of feeling, how could we live!

Few have spent many years in a Sabbath school without knowing those whose memory will ever be fragrant because of their devotion to their work and the wealth of their labours. There are those who have at once impressed us favourably by the earnest manner in which they have fulfilled their duty, and the unity of purpose they have manifested in seeking the salvation of their scholars; those who realized the greatness of their work, who watched, and waited, and prayed, and looked believingly for the blessing.

Such was the character of one who, some years ago, taught with great success in our school, and whose influence will be long felt for good, though he has passed away. From his first introduction to our class, he gained the respect and attention of nearly all by the unmistakable interest he evinced for our religious welfare. In that eye, which scanned each of us so closely and so lovingly, there were depth and meaning; while the earnest tone of his voice told us that his whole thoughts and noblest energies were engaged for our profit. He seemed to have a lively realization of the fact, that in a very little time his scholars would be beyond the reach of Sabbath school influence; and the hearty and genuine welcome with which he ever greeted us, indicated his eager desire to make us possessors of the blessing he had himself felt and tasted. Seldom was he interrupted in teaching, for, before we commenced our Scripture reading, it was his custom to offer a short, fervent prayer, for the blessing on the lesson about to be taught; and even the most thoughtless did not then care to spoil the behaviour of the class. His teaching shewed us how carefully and conscientiously he had prepared for his work; he seemed to throw new light on every passage, and to make those lasting impressions which can alone result from a diligent effort to make the subjects well understood, and to make them attractive and suitable to the youthful mind.

The Parables of our Saviour, and the Sermon on the Mount, were especially the favourite portions of Scripture in which he delighted to instruct us. To those who have had the advantage of listening to a variety of instructors, it is interesting to note the individual characteristics of taste and feeling shown in the selections of Scripture which they severally endeavoured to teach. We can remember how that one interested us chiefly with the wondrous narrative of Old Testament history; how that another has led us with sympathetic spirit through the journeyings and difficulties of the Apostle Paul; how that some have opened to us the interpretation of the Parables, and others revealed to us the glory and majesty which surround the life and death of our Saviour. With our teacher, the Parables seemed especially suitable to have an influence on youth; and so thoroughly did he enter into them that there were a beauty and a freshness in his exposition that arrested the attention of the most careless. But he was not satisfied with the ordinary time for giving instruction and advice, though his regular and punctual attendance might seem to excuse him from other engagements. On the Sabbath evening, or during the week, he invited us to meet him, that he might have renewed opportunity of impressing us with the importance of the truths he had to communicate. Teachers cannot too highly estimate the advantage of these extraordinary efforts to gain the sympathies of the scholars, and to train them for good; they have a beneficial tendency far superior to those made in the regular routine of school duty.

Soon the result of his labours became apparent; one of the elder scholars of our class, who had hitherto been careless and refractory, became seriously disposed. Gradually a marked change had taken place in him ; from being one of the most inattentive and disobedient, he had become attentive, obedient, and eager to improve. So strange and beautiful, also, was the change in his life and character that his companions could not but wonder. He had always been a favourite amongst us,—for his lively disposition, and his intense love of action ; in the week, he was always at the head of all boyish sports and youthful enterprise, so that he had gained the admiration and affection of all his school-fellows. Time passed on, and the change proved to be neither slight nor evanescent ; the first blade of promise grew and prospered, and bade fair to develop into a noble and devoted Christian character. He was still the chief actor amongst his companions, and the centre of attraction for them ; for, while he retained his former vivacity and love of enterprise, he had lost much of his passionate and resentful disposition ; and when, sometimes, his quick eye glanced revenge, as of old, his angry feelings were speedily repressed. The example which he lived before us was worthy and commendable, and had an influence for good which was strongly felt by all. It was the beginning of good things amongst us,—the dawn of brighter days ; one by one became impressed with the importance of divine things, until nearly the whole class were brought to the knowledge of the truth, and teacher and scholar had to rejoice together over the blessing of God in their midst. But the labours of him who had been chiefly instrumental in bringing about the change were not long to be continued. Having beheld the first-fruits of his earnest efforts and prayers, he had to leave it to others to carry on his work, for the Master had called him to his rest and his reward. But his holy influence did not die with him ; his name will long be remembered for his earnest and faithful labours and self-sacrificing spirit. Other teachers remind themselves of his success, and feel encouraged in their work. And now, from far and near, go up, ever and anon, thanksgiving for the life he lived, and the holy deeds he wrought ; and praise to Him, who, having first bought him with a price, led him to employ his noblest powers and energies for the good of others.

PHILOSOPHY OF QUESTIONING CHILDREN.

A good, searching examination of children is by no means that very easy thing which people commonly think. . . . The desirable point is to insinuate your information into their minds, so that by indirect and tortuous entrance it may be caught and entangled with what is already there, and not slip out again as it would through a direct passage. . . . Begin with a simple question readily admitting of an answer ; on that answer build another question, and on the answer to this another question ; and so on, until you bring the child to the answer, which is the conclusion required. In going through such a course the child feels not only a curiosity as to what will come next, and so keeps his attention awake, but also a lively interest from the experience of his own working power, and he regards the conclusion with something of that partiality which a mother entertains for her offspring. No wonder that he should firmly retain such information to the inculcating of which have been brought to bear three of the most powerful principles of his nature, curiosity, consciousness of power, and regard for his own.

The main point is so to shape and order our questions as never to be reduced to tell them anything on the way, and that the last answer should give the conclusion full and convincing. This evidently requires much patient practice on the part of the teacher, and some acquirements also. He must have gauged the capacity of the minds of the children, obtained an insight into their working, so that he may know where and how to press with his questions. He must have an intimate acquaintance with Scripture, be possessed of a good stock of clear vernacular language, be distinct in his conceptions, and be furnished with the means of apt and familiar illustration. And he must have a quickness of apprehension, to catch all for which the text gives him a handle, and to turn to account, on the way, the answers of the children, so that they may go on steadily in the proposed direction.

MISCELLANIES.

WHO IS THE OWNER? OR, CONVERSATIONS BETWEEN TWO NEIGHBOURS.

CONVERSATION I.

A. WELL, neighbour B., how did you like our meeting last night? Were not the speeches excellent, especially that on the duty of supporting God's cause?

B. Now, Mr. A., I think that last remark of yours must be intended for a blow at me; because you imagine that I do not contribute so much as I ought. You know my mind upon the subject. I have before told you that my doctrine is "Charity begins at home."

A. Suppose we discuss the matter in a friendly way. You say, "Charity begins at home." Please to give me your explanation of this sentiment.

B. I mean that a man should first provide for the necessities of his own household. St. Paul says, "If a man provide not for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

A. Just so. I quite agree with the principle you have laid down. But, perhaps, you may have omitted to include religion in your list of necessities to be thus provided for. For my part, I think it should be placed at the very top of the list. Christ says, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." And I am sure that St. Paul would not consider any household provided for unless religion were included in the "bill of fare."

B. To be sure, religion must be thought of; but what has it to do with giving so much and so often? I contribute when I think I can afford it; but lately I have been laying out a great deal of money in increasing my stock of furniture and trimming up my house and family; and I could not afford to do this if I must be always giving away.

A. I see that you have been "improving appearances" as people call it, and I am not disposed to say anything against these improvements, providing they be paid for with honest money.

B. Honest money! You cannot suppose that I would steal anybody's money?

A. Now do be patient and I will explain. Suppose some person were to convey to you a plot of land upon condition that you pay to him every year, one-fourth of its produce, the whole of the produce could not be yours, but only what might be left after deducting the conditional fourth. So you see if you were to lay out all the produce, you would be expending money that did not belong to you.

B. But I do not see how your illustration applies to my case. Is not what I have the produce of my industry, and who has any right to it, if I have not? "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?"

A. Certainly; with your own. But let us look into the matter, and see how far your claim will extend. First—there is the material on which you expend your labour. You did not make this material. Secondly—the strength to labour. You did not produce that strength. Thirdly—the understanding which gives you skill to labour. You did not form the understanding.

B. Hold! If you go on at that rate, I shall have nothing left. Already I feel my share to be slipping through my fingers. You are taking away the substance and leaving me only the shadow.

A. Do not be alarmed; you shall have your share, but you must regard it not as a right but as a gift. When we consider that man did not create either himself, or the creatures that minister to his well-being, it is easy to perceive that, on the ground of reason, he cannot claim anything as his own.

B. It appears not, on the ground of reason, but what does revelation say on this subject?

A. If you appeal to revelation, i.e., to the Bible, you will certainly have to make a surrender of all supposed right. The Old Testament is pretty strong upon the subject, and the New Testament is even more sweeping in its demands than the Old.

B. I have heard people say that controversy unsettles one's notions, and makes one uneasy; and I find it to be so. I could wish that I had not consented to this inquiry.

A. You are not singular in this desire to remain undisturbed in prepossessions. Truth wears a stern aspect, and many tremble in her presence, and dare not look her in the face. But if you will try to fortify yourself with a little courage we will enter further into the matter next time we meet.

CONVERSATION II.

A. What ails you, my friend, that your countenance wears so gloomy an aspect? Has anything occurred to disturb your mind?

B. I must confess that the subject of our late conversation has a little unsettled me. But before I can accept the principle you maintain, I must hear how far you can sustain it upon Scriptural grounds.

A. In the account which the Scriptures give us of the first human family, we find that the firstlings of the flock, and the first-fruits of the earth were offered to God as a religious duty; and under the patriarchal dispensation a tenth is mentioned as being devoted to God's service.

B. I have repeatedly read of these things, but never discovered in them any truth of general application.

A. As we proceed you will see that the tithe question is not an uninteresting historical incident, but an important matter of religious finance, founded upon reason, law, and Gospel; and, in its application, both universal and perpetual.

B. Many consider tithes as essentially, if not altogether, Jewish.

A. I am aware of it; but this is a mistake, and shows a want of attention to the subject. The tenth enjoined under the Levitical economy, was a confirmation of God's approval and acceptance of that proportion which the patriarchs had devoted to his service.

B. There seems to be much confusion in people's minds respecting the application of the law; and I have observed persons to be much irritated when tithes have been mentioned in connection with Christian duties.

A. Much both of this confusion and offence must be put down as wilful.

B. Was this tenth all that the Jews had to pay for their religion?

A. No; there were a second and a third tithe, which, together with the first-fruits and free-will offerings would require from one-third to one-half of the people's income.

B. This is really startling. But were there any penalties to enforce payment?

A. It does not appear that any human tribunal had power to chastise defaulters. God looked upon default as an offence committed directly against himself, and took the punishment into his own hands. He calls the withholding of these claims a robbery. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say—Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse, for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation."

B. This denunciation is indeed severe. What purpose do you suppose would be answered by these tithe enactments?

A. They would serve to show us clear views of God's proprietorship and sovereignty, and teach the people that God would not be satisfied with mere verbal professions or empty-handed worship. No Hebrew might approach his sanctuary without an appropriate offering. The costly and magnificent scale upon which both the Tabernacle and the Temple were built and furnished, taught the people that God would be honoured in his own house. To "honour God with our substance" may not be looked upon as a duty that may be made subordinate to personal convenience, or even comfort, but must be considered as an essentiality of religious principle.

B. If the New Testament does not somewhat relax the stringency of the Old, I fear that many of us will be found in a bad case.

A. The New Testament shall furnish us with matter for further inquiry. Meanwhile, review the substance of what has been advanced in our previous conversations.

CONVERSATION III.

B. Well neighbour A., I have been pondering over our recent conversations, and am desirous of hearing what you have to advance from the New Testament.

A. I am glad to hear you speak thus. How cheerful you look.

B. Yes; much of the mist that before enshrouded my mind has passed away. The evidence of Scripture appears to be so overwhelming that I feel I must yield myself up to it, and you know when a man gets himself set right with God, he gets set right altogether. But let us turn to the New Testament. There does not appear to be any specified amount mentioned in that part of the book.

A. True. Neither is there need, since Christ requires of his followers, as a condition of their discipleship, a full surrender of all they are and all they have. He then places them in his church as stewards, and holds them responsible for the employment of all the means of usefulness, whether in things temporal or in things spiritual, which he may place in their hands.

B. Will you point out a passage bearing upon this principle of full surrender?

A. "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." Luke xiv. 33. Other passages might be quoted; but can words be more explicit or all-embracing than these?

B. They are indeed both comprehensive and emphatic; but does the history of the church show that the first disciples and their successors understood these words in their literal meaning?

A. Yes. The cause of their Divine Master was in their estimation more sacred than either their property, their liberty, their relatives, or their lives. Amongst those sturdy followers of Christ we have less of theory and more of practice than in the present day.

B. Their religion cost them much.

A. They remembered that they were bought with blood. And instead of asking at how small a price they might sustain God's honour in the church, they tested their powers to the utmost, thinking that they could not do enough.

B. But they had not in those days any ecclesiastical establishment.

A. No; they had neither political nor ecclesiastical power. In the beginning they were few and generally poor, but their liberality was bounded only by the utmost stretch of their ability. Some of the first Christians had "all things common," and afterwards many gave even beyond their power. The tithe principle was here sublimely developed.

B. I can now better understand why our Lord commended the poor widow who put her two mites into the treasury.

A. That was a worthy illustration of the doctrine of devotedness. She gave all her living, and thus outdid all the rich contributors, and Christ has accorded to her an undying celebrity.

B. What think you of the woman's act of anointing Christ's feet with the ointment?

A. I look upon it as an act of honour done to our Lord. The disciples indignantly exclaimed against it as a waste; but our Lord commended the woman, and gave the deed a place in his Gospel, saying, "Whosoever this Gospel shall be preached in all the world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her." There must not be parsimony where God's honour is concerned.

B. Parsimony is excluded by the passage, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

A. Exactly so; and in many other passages which require that we give liberally, cheerfully, and to the glory of God. Our givings should be in honest proportion to our incomes, and bear a just comparison with our ordinary outlay. To cut an "appearance" in life whilst we plead poverty to the church, shows either that we are living beyond our means, and so passing a fraud upon the world; or, that we are robbing God by withholding what ought to be given towards the support of his cause.

B. This is an alarming statement; but I do not see how such persons can escape from one or the other of these charges. I do wish that I had inquired into these matters sooner, but better late than never. I now see their importance, and feel greatly interested in them. Another interview will therefore be very acceptable.

CONVERSATION IV.

A. Here is my hand, neighbour B. I suppose you have come for the purpose of renewing the conversation that has lately occupied our interviews?

B. You have rightly judged of the purpose of my visit. I have been weighing things in my mind, and it appears perfectly clear that the whole universe can have but one owner; and that whatever may be held by any of God's creatures, can be held only at his permission, and must be held in subjection to his will.

A. That is just it. If the Christian Church would consistently act upon this principle, religion would be triumphant in its course, and following in its train, the world would witness a vastly improved political, commercial, and social condition.

B. I see. The machinery is impeded for want of those means which a more liberal support would supply.

A. Yes. And God's professing people, who pray that his kingdom may come, are largely withholding the means by which the prayer might have its fulfilment. This act throws grave doubt upon their sincerity. There is a want of harmony between the speaking tongue and the executing hand.

B. The doctrine of God's ownership has not been laid down sufficiently plainly nor sufficiently often. Hence the views of many Christians are not clear upon this point.

A. I agree with you. There needs a trumpet voice to wake up the conscience upon this subject. The honour of God and the salvation of the world demand that this truth be loudly proclaimed in all the churches.

B. I think that if God's claims were duly met, the church would possess ample means for carrying out the great purposes for which it was raised up.

A. Undoubtedly it would. God, whose providence so amply and so richly provides for all the other purposes of life, has surely not left the ordinances of his grace without an adequate supply of means for the accomplishment of their high purpose.

B. The money question is a rock upon which many souls have been lost.

A. Yes. It was upon this rock that the soul of the rich young ruler was lost. Upon it also was lost the soul of the man whose fields brought forth plentifully. And it made in hell a grave for the rich man who was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And Demas for the love of the world forsook the Gospel.

B. These are hard sayings; but I fear these men are types of many professors of the present day.

A. Hard as they may appear, we cannot alter them. We did not make either the law or the Gospel; neither have we power to alter the terms of their application. It will be well to take God's benefits upon his own terms. God does not confer his bounty upon any man for his sole benefit. Man must consider himself as a steward or agent in dispensing God's provisions for the evangelization of the world and assisting the poor.

B. I thank you for the trouble you have taken to enlighten me on this subject, and intend to act in a manner suitable to my convictions.

A. Fare thee well!

B. Farewell!

CONNEXIONAL INTELLIGENCE.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

ENLARGEMENT OF CLUNTON CHAPEL, BISHOP'S CASTLE CIRCUIT.—The above chapel, built in the year 1853, having become too small for our increasing congregations, has been enlarged by lengthening it ten feet, thus making additional accommodation for about sixty persons. The chapel was re-opened on October 26th, 1862, when two sermons were preached by Mr. Thomas Wood, of Nantwich, and collections were made, amounting to £16 5s. 9½d. On the Monday following a tea meeting was held, when addresses were delivered by Messrs. T. Wood, J. Webster, R. Jones, Norton and Griffiths. The cost is over £60. We desire to make grateful mention of the neighbouring farmers for their kindness in drawing the materials gratuitously; and of the Rev. E. Williams, who superintended the work, and generously gave a donation of £5, besides aiding us in other respects.

J. WEBSTER.

THE GREEN, BISHOP'S CASTLE STATION.—Through the blessing of God, and the kindness of friends, we have succeeded in the erection of a neat and comfortable chapel at this place. The foundation stone was laid on May 28th, 1862, by Miss Farmer, of the Down, in the midst of a large concourse of people; after which, a tea meeting was held, when about 380 sat down to the social board.

Sermons were preached in connexion with the opening, on November 2nd, by S. Ward, Esq., of the Wood, and Mr. J. Jones, Llandyssil. And on November 9th, two sermons were preached by J. Nott, Esq., of the Farlands; on November 3rd, about 270 sat down to tea. The pecuniary result of the collections and tea meetings is more than £40. The amount of donations is not yet ascertained. The cost of the chapel is about £150. Whilst we are grateful to all the friends, who have interested themselves in the erection of this house of prayer, we desire to make special mention of Miss Farmer, who gave £10, Mr. Maddox, who gave the land, and Brother John Davies, the treasurer, who in various ways has manifested his interest in this work.

J. WEBSTER.

[We regret, that in consequence of this and the preceding account having been sent to us with other papers, they have been mislaid. We give them insertion as early as possible after discovering the mistake. EDITOR.]

MARYPORT STATION.—We are happy to inform you, that in our station, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." The Lord's arm hath been made bare in the conversion of many sinners, and the Church blessed with an increase of moral power. Our increase of members for the nine months we have been a circuit, is 103; one Connexional chapel has been built, and five new places taken on our plan. At two of the new places we have missioned, viz., Greysouthen, and Wigton, we have had a pleasing and gracious visitation of the Spirit. Greysouthen is a village containing nearly 700 inhabitants, principally coal miners. It was missioned last midsummer by a few brethren from Wyndham-row and Ellenborough, and appeared on the Circuit's plan, July 20th. A house was kindly offered for the meetings—the place generally processioned and prayer meetings held—sometimes in the open-air. A camp-meeting was held July 27th, which caused a wonderful move in the place; one soul professed liberty, and bread was cast upon the waters to be seen many days hence. A class was formed soon after of three members, and taken in charge by Brother Joseph Ross, which at September quarter-day numbered seven members. Revival services were commenced early in December, conducted and supported principally by Brother Ross, and assisted by the travelling and local preachers. The Word of God was with power, and a mighty influence spread through the place; sinners of the most daring and outrageous character were arrested, and though at first they opposed and blasphemed, they were ultimately found at the penitents' form crying for mercy, until they could rejoice in a sin-pardoning God. A few backsliders were reclaimed, and some far advanced in life are amongst the saved. A few brave women having themselves found the Lord, made their husbands the subjects of special prayer in public and in private, and they soon had the pleasure of witnessing their conversion, and hearing them rejoice in the God of their salvation. In one row of four houses, with a population of thirteen adult persons, who were notorious for their disregard of religion, eleven are amongst the saved, and have united in Church fellowship with us. A great change has come over the village; the publicans are nearly at a stand-still; from their own declaration they sell little drink to what they formerly did. Groups of young men and others used to lounge about the street, and with oaths, yells, or laughs, mock the preacher, &c.; but now, nothing of the kind is seen or heard.

A year ago there was not a Primitive Methodist in the village; now there are thirty consistent members, and about forty children have been gathered from the street, and taught in a Sabbath-school.

Wigton is a market town, twelve miles from the city of Carlisle, and sixteen from Maryport, containing 4,000 inhabitants. It was formerly in the Carlisle Circuit, but was given up above eleven years ago, and has had no preaching from the Primitive Methodists during that time. Brother Joseph Jopling, who was residing in our circuit, felt impressed about opening a mission in Wigton, and requested the September Quarterly meeting to take it up; permission was given to Brother Jopling to mission it, promising him a change of each of the travelling preachers; and a few of the local brethren promised their help. A school room to contain 150 persons was taken at a moderate rent, and as an introduction to the place, a camp-meeting was held, which closed with a service in the room. The meeting was powerful, and good was done. There was preaching in the school-room regularly every Lord's-day and Tuesday night, and it was soon filled to overflowing. House to house visitation was attended to, and occasional meetings were held in cottages. Amongst the hearers were many who had never been accustomed to attend any place of worship. The move on the minds of numbers was visible in deep feeling and marked seriousness in hearing the word; the converting work broke out, and a goodly harvest of souls has been gathered—upwards of thirty members are united in society. A great change has taken place in the east part of the town, which was notorious for drunkenness, swearing, and open ungodliness. The general character of the neighbourhood is altered for good, and a moral reformation has taken place in many who have not professed a change of heart, while many decided conversions have been witnessed. In one family, much addicted to drinking and ungodliness, the father, mother, four sons and two daughters have experienced a saving change, and are on their way to heaven.

The good work, however, has been opposed, and some would like their place to be minus the Primitive Methodists; and from this feeling we were denied the use of the school-room; but the Lord raised us up a friend in time of need. A Mr. Dodgson, (belonging to the Society of Friends), was waited upon, and he very generously, for the good he believed we were doing, granted us the use of a room free of rent, providing we would put it in repair; this was thankfully accepted, and in a few days was ready for meetings. It was opened on March 8th, by three sermons preached by Brother Taylor, and by public meeting the following evening; the expense of repairs was met by the sum realized at the opening services; souls were saved the first night; and others have professed to receive pardon since. The place is well seated with forms, and will hold about 180 persons.

In Oulton, two miles from Wigton, we have a steady congregation, averaging fifty in attendance, and six members in society. One great wrestler and fighter has been saved, and serious impressions appear on the minds of several. In some of our old places the Lord has graciously visited us. Cockermouth for many years has been low, but of late has much improved; the society has risen from sixteen to thirty-four members, and there is a proportionate increase in the congregation. Darham, within the last few weeks, has had a powerful work, and upwards of thirty souls have been saved. On the whole, our station is in a healthy working condition; our official laymen and members render excellent help, and in general take a hearty interest in the welfare of the cause. To the great Head of the Church we tender our grateful thanks, and pray that he may vouchsafe to shine upon us more and more, on the whole Connexion, and on all who call on the name of the Lord Jesus. By order of the March Quarterly Meeting, March 16th, 1863.

ADAM DODDS.
JOSEPH ROSS.

CROSBY, MARYPORT STATION, is a small village, containing about 250 inhabitants. It was missioned by our people a little more than four years since, when several persons were awakened and brought to God; a society was formed, and our meetings were held in the village school. About two years ago we were deprived of the school, and had to meet in a cottage. This was found inconvenient, and the society was impressed with the necessity of having a chapel. Applications were made to several persons for a suitable site, but we met with a denial. Brother John McDowall, class-leader in the place, purchased a house and front in order to sell us the front for a Connexional chapel. This has been obtained, and a beautiful chapel is now erected in the centre of the village. It is 24 feet 6 inches by 22 feet 6 inches outside; the front wall is built of stone, and the rest of brick, and the chapel is lighted by two circular windows in front, and two square ones at the end. It is neatly fitted up with rising pews on either side of the pulpit, and at the opposite end, and has free sittings in the centre. It was opened on March 22, 1863. Mr. J. McDowall preached in the morning, and the Rev. J. Taylor afternoon and evening, to large congregations.

On Monday, March 23, there was a public tea, about 140 persons being present. The public meeting was addressed by the Revs. J. Snaith (Hexham), J. Taylor, Messrs. H. Thompson, T. Dobinson, and the writer. The total cost, including price of ground, chapel deed, painting, &c., is above £160. By subscriptions and opening services we have realized £66; a few subscriptions are yet to come in. The sittings are all let, and souls have been saved in the new sanctuary.

A. DODDS.

THIRSK MISSIONARY ANNIVERSARY.—The services of our missionary anniversary were held as follows. On Sunday, March 29th, 1863, sermons were preached—in the morning by the Rev. J. Milner, and in the afternoon and evening by the Rev. William Lister. On the Friday following, being Good Friday, services were held in the following order:—a sermon in the morning by the Rev. J. Spoor; and in the evening by the Rev. William Sanderson. At two o'clock in the afternoon the annual missionary meeting was held, J. Waites, Esq., of Sowerby, in the chair. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Hall (Independent), Revs. J. Rumfit, J. Spoor, William Lister, William Sanderson, and the writer. The sum total of the proceeds is £31 17s 6d. We give thanks to the donors, collectors, and friends, and the glory to God.

J. M.

BOUGHTON, CANTERBURY STATION.—The fifth anniversary of the Primitive Methodist Sabbath-school at this place was held March 29th, and the following day. The proceeds amounted to £8. The services were well-attended, and of a very interesting character. The school has increased from 70 to 104 scholars during the year.

G. HULL.

MILTON - NEXT - SITTINGBOURNE.—This place was visited about sixteen years ago by some of our missionaries, and after surmounting many difficulties, a chapel was built in 1855, on which there has been some time a debt of £196. The members latterly felt anxious to reduce this debt, and therefore resolved on getting up a bazaar to accomplish their object, which was opened Tuesday, 31st March, and continued open on the three following days. The last of the four days being Good Friday, a tea-meeting was held in connection with the bazaar, after which a public meeting took place. A report of the success of the undertaking was given by the secretary, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. J. Williams and W. H. Brightman, and the Revs. W. Moore and W. Cooper. The congregation which filled the chapel was much interested in the meeting, and a liberal collection was obtained.

April 5th two sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Cooper to good congregations, and a collection was made at each service. Great praise is due to the ladies for begging and working in this important matter. Thanks are also due to the members of other denominations and the friends generally who felt interested in the affair and helped considerably.

W. H. ALCOCK.

[We should have been happy to learn what was the total amount realized by this effort.—Ed.]

MISSIONARY SERVICES, SCOTTER CIRCUIT.—On Thursday, April 2nd, 1863, a series of missionary services was brought to a close in this circuit. We were efficiently served by the Revs. J. Petty, W. Harland, T. Whittaker, J. R. Parkinson, and J. Burroughs. £78 7s. 1d. were raised. To our numerous collectors, donors, and friends we tender our thanks, and to the Giver of all blessings we present praise.

T. WHITEHEAD.

PENRITH.—We held our annual tea-meeting at Penrith on Good Friday, April 3rd. The public meeting was held after.

On Lord's-day, April 5th, three impressive sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Fulton, when collections were made on behalf of the trust funds. The proceeds of tea and sermons amounted to £6 6s. 7½d.

T. ATKINSON.

BOYLESTONE, BURTON-ON-TRENT STATION.—The annual ten-meeting in connection with the Sabbath and day schools was held on Good Friday, April 3rd, at which a large number of friends were present. All the trays were given by persons who feel anxious for the welfare of the schools, and the proceeds amounted to the noble sum of £10 19s. After tea a public meeting was held, over which Mr. W. Tunstall presided. The claims of the schools were then ably and efficiently advocated by Rev. W. J. Brownson, Messrs. Scragg, of Derby, and Smith, of Stramshall; thus a very pleasant evening was spent.

On Saturday, the 4th, the children were favoured with their usual treat. Though the friends in this locality have to struggle with High Church influence, we are happy to say the schools are beginning to look up.

E. HIRST.

LANGTHORNE, THIRSK STATION.—SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—On Good Friday the annual tea-meeting was held here. The day being fine, great numbers, as usual, attended, and sat down to tea in a large tent erected on the premises adjacent to the Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Outhwaite, at the Hall, kindly afforded the use of their kitchen for boiling the water, &c. The tea was excellent, and the provisions were rich and abundant. About 500 sat down to tea, beside the children of the school. The ladies presiding at the trays were Miss King, Miss Ascough, Miss Ellison, Miss Clarkson, Miss Metcalf, Miss Hobson, Miss Smith, Miss F. Jackson, Miss Lockey, Mrs. Kirton, Mrs. W. Stone, and Mrs. W. Hobson. After tea a public meeting was held, the Rev. J. Hedley presiding, when twenty-six pieces of poetry and appropriate dialogues were recited by the children. The choir, under the tuition of Mr. W. Wright, of Hunton, gave great satisfaction. A more successful anniversary has never been witnessed at the place. The total of the proceeds was about £26.

W. STONE.

HAZLEBURY, STURMINSTER BRANCH.—On Good Friday the Sabbath-school anniversary was held here. The writer preached in the open air to an attentive audience in the afternoon, and a tea party then took place; after the tea the chapel was crowded to excess, and the children recited pieces in a creditable manner, at the close of which the superintendent, Mr. R. Brown, received a handsome Bible, subscribed for by the school. On the Lord's-day following, three services were again held in the chapel, and also one on the Monday evening. Many expressed the opinion that this was the best anniversary ever held in Hazlebury. The proceeds of the anniversary, including profits of the tea, amounted to £6 9s. 3d. G. CRIPPS.

BUBWITH, SELBY BRANCH, CHAPEL OPENING.—During the last nine years five new chapels have been erected in the Selby Branch, at a total cost of £2,155 3s. 2d., of which sum £1,089 15s. 5d. have been contributed. The last of the above number was opened at Bubwith, April the 3rd and following days, by a series of services, in which Capt. McCulloch, of York, the Revs. C. Procter, W. Sanderson, J. R. Parkinson, and T. Waumsley, with Messrs. J. Dodsworth, G. Smith, W. Empson, W. Middlebrook, and T. Pratt took part. The chapel is beautiful for situation, and furnishes sittings for 204 persons. The pews are all let, and more are wanted. It is lighted by six windows, all of ground glass with coloured margins, by which means the light is equalised and modified, instead of that alternate glare and gloom so frequently experienced in places of worship. The wood work is stained and varnished, and the walls are boarded a proper height, while the form of the pulpit and the arrangement of the pews give to the interior a very neat and chaste appearance. The total costs of the erection amount to £206, towards which sum £130 have been given. The thanks of the trustees are hereby tendered to Mr. Burt for the day of which the bricks were made; to Messrs. R. Longhorn and M. Thompson for making the same; to the ladies for providing tea for 600 people, and supplying articles for the bazaar; to Mr. T. Pratt for drawing the plans and specifications and for a donation of £5; and to all other friends who have assisted. Twelve months ago we had no cause in Bubwith; since that period, by the blessing of God, a society has been formed of twenty-five members, and the above-named house of prayer has been erected.

J. R. PARKINSON.

CHILTERNHAM.—Services in connection with a special effort for the reduction of the debt on our chapel in this town were held on Lord's-day and Monday, April 19th and 20th. On the former day three sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Mottram, of Bath. The congregations were good, and the collections liberal. On Monday, at five o'clock, 120 persons sat down to an excellent tea. In the evening a public meeting was held, and ably presided over by J. Gillett, Esq. A financial account was read, and interesting and appropriate addresses were delivered by the Revs. B. Smith, H. Souby, W. Mottram, and W. Robinson. The proceeds of the services are as follow:—by collecting books, £22 10s. 2d.; profits of tea-meeting, £4 10s. 2d.; public collections, £3 7s. 10½d.; total, £30 8s. 2½d. It is unnecessary to say that the pecuniary results of this special effort are very gratifying to those who have toiled hard for the accomplishment thereof.

J. HALL.

HADNALL CHAPEL OPENING.—The concluding services in connection with the opening of our new chapel at Hadnall took place on Sunday, April 19th, on which occasion three excellent sermons were preached,—those in the morning and evening by Mr. T. Bateman, of Chorley, and that in the afternoon, by the Rev. D. James, Independent minister, Hadnall. A tea meeting was held on the following day at which upwards of 150 persons were present: at the close of the same a very able and well digested Lecture on "The Origin of the Primitive Methodist Connexion" was delivered by Mr. J. Walford, of Hastinggrove. The proceeds of both days amounted to upwards of £15. Mr. Walford was the architect and builder, and great credit is due to him for the efficient manner in which he has discharged his duties. We believe that the model of this chapel is original. The front is of drest brick-work enriched with white polished stone, and each pilaster terminates with a spire-like finish. The roof is covered with ornamental pottery tile. The interior is lighted up with five circular-headed sash windows, three at the back and two on the front side, one square window in the gable end, and a fan-light over the door. There is a beautiful rostrum, part canopied with a moulded arch. The windows also are moulded. Opposite to the rostrum there are sixteen rising pews of different sizes, all of which are let. There is a communion in front of the rostrum, with mahogany hand-rail and banisters. The whole of the wood-work inside and outside, excepting the roof and ceiling, is well painted, varnished, and finished oak colour. The pilasters in front of the rostrum are marbled, which greatly tells in appearance. There are a good vestry and other conveniences attached to the chapel, and a spacious yard in front of it, with double gates and palisades, the brick and stone work in connection with which are in the same style of architecture as the front of the chapel. The chapel is 30 feet by 24 inside, and 14 feet 6 inches from the floor to the ceiling, and will accommodate about 180 persons with seats. It stands in an elevated position fronting the turnpike-road, leading to Shrewsbury, and is decidedly an ornament to the village. The entire cost inclusive of vestry, land, deeds, &c., is about £320, towards which we have already raised, with the sale of the old chapel, upwards of £140, and we hope, as there are moneys yet to obtain, that the debt remaining on the premises will not exceed £140 or £150.

ST. GEORGE'S, WROCKWARDINE WOOD STATION.—Our Jubilee Chapel at the above place having become too small we determined to erect a gallery, and having accomplished this, on Lord's-day, April 26th, we held our opening services. John Wood, Esq., of Nantwich, preached morning and evening, and the Rev. J. Prosser, in the afternoon. The collections amounted to the sum of £8 17s. 5½d. We shall pay the whole cost, for we do not intend to have any debt on the gallery.

J. BOOTH.

WIGMORE, LEINTWARDINE BRANCH.—The foundation stone of a new chapel was laid April 29th, by Mrs. J. Nott, of the Farlands. The Rev. W. Jones, of Kingstone, preached a very excellent sermon on the occasion; after which subscriptions were paid in which amounted to £115 12s. 5d. James Nott, Esq., of the Farlands, with his excellent lady, headed the list with £100. At the close of the service the people adjourned to the Odd Fellows' club-room, where a tea-meeting was held. After tea the Rev. J. Middleton took the chair, and the meeting was addressed by the Rev. W. Jones, Messrs. J. Nott, E. Norton, J. Evans, and the writer. S. PEAKE.

LEICESTER FIRST STATION.—You will doubtless allow us a little space in the Magazine to report the case of a noble effort to reduce the debt on Curzon Street Chapel; as it may be a stimulus and encouragement to others to go and do likewise. The chapel was built during the superintendency of our late lamented Brother Brownson. From unforeseen circumstances it cost considerably more than was originally intended. One matter was, the site had been a brick-yard, and although the materials which had been put in to fill up the pits were sufficiently strong to bear houses of an ordinary size, they were too weak to sustain a chapel designed to hold a thousand persons; in consequence of which the foundation had to be laid a great depth; which, of course, occasioned a serious item of extra expense. More than £600 were obtained, and yet more than £1,000 were left, when all ordinary means were exhausted. This was found to be by far too large a sum for a society of few more than a hundred members, of whom but few are in respectable, and none in what may be called affluent circumstances.

The March quarter-day of 1862, made it a peculiar case to retain the preacher who had been more or less connected with the chapel from the beginning. That done, "Ways and Means" were next considered.

It was proposed to have a bazaar of eight guaranteed ten pound stalls. The social gatherings for the cup that cheers, and collections, were to do the rest. A society meeting through the medium of a cheap tea was called, and the case was stated. It was suggested that four or more friends should unite to a stall to bear the responsibility and secure the amount. Mr. F. Warner nobly engaged to take two, the preacher one, four friends took another, the choir took one, a leader engaged his class to take one, two other leaders did the same. So the eight stalls, £10 each, were guaranteed. Mr. J. Roscoe engaged to give ten per cent on any amount that could be raised. And to crown the whole, a goodly number of the "angels of life," formed themselves into what they called a "sewing meeting," to make anything within the "long range" of the thimble and needle. The meetings were to be held monthly at any friend's house who would give tea, for which each attending was to pay sixpence. But, like all other "angels' visits," the monthly meetings were soon found to be too "few and far between." Fortnightly ones were adopted, and before the close, so many places were on hand they became weekly; and such interest was taken in the matter, that the last two meetings produced £3 8s.; and thus the affair was spread over the whole society, each one doing according to ability, with ardour and friendly emulation. To wind up the whole the bazaar produced more than £90. Mr. F. Warner gave his in cash, Mr. J. Roscoe gave £12. The sewing meeting produced £17 12s. Tea-meetings and collections made the whole the noble sum of £130. With but little exception the whole was raised by the society. George Street friends were raising at the same time £44 for painting and cleaning their chapel. And not one who has contributed but will say with David, "But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee." W. J.

HULL SECOND STATION.—Cottingham is a large and populous village distant about four miles from the flourishing town of Hull, in which we have had a good cause for a considerable length of time. During the last three years great progression has been made. A large chapel has been erected, with accommodation for more than 400 persons, and it is attended by a good, respectable, and attentive congregation. However, owing to some oversight, no effort was made to establish a Sabbath-school in connection with our place of worship until last year, when Mr. Pentith, sen., a warm-hearted official belonging to our Jarratt Street society, took the matter up, and volunteered (though residing a distance of four miles from the place) to assist in commencing and carrying out the noble project. His offer was gladly accepted; his experience and tact in Sabbath-school matters being well known. And on the first Sabbath in May, 1862, the school was opened. The beginning was comparatively small but promising, the superintendent being well supported by an intelligent staff of teachers.

A year has fled, and we have been holding the first anniversary services. May 3rd, the Rev. J. Tongue, from Hull, preached three appropriate sermons; and anthems and recitations were rendered by the children in such a manner as would have done credit to an old-established school. On Wednesday, May 6th, the anniversary proper was celebrated. A repast was provided by the ladies of the congregation. Afterwards a public meeting was held in the chapel; the chair being occupied by our old friend, Samuel Hodge, Esq. Interesting addresses were delivered to a crowded audience by Messrs. Pentith, sen., Render, Robson, Pentith, jun., Whittaker, and Worsnop. From the report it appeared that more than 50 scholars are already enrolled, and the money raised during the last twelve months for the support of the school, including collections, donations, &c., amounts to the goodly sum of £17 8s. 9d. To God be all the glory. J. WORSNUP.

PENARTH CHAPEL.—This place of worship was opened for Divine service about seven years ago. Prior to its erection the society worshipped in a rented room, which was fitted up for their use; but the owner requiring it, they were obliged to make an effort to provide a place for themselves. They succeeded in building a chapel, school-room, and cottage, during the ministry of the Rev. J. Wilson; and during the Rev. W. Alderson's ministry, they erected a dwelling-house, intended for the minister's residence; but owing to the low state of the station the trustees were obliged to let it on lease for a few years. The accommodations afforded by these buildings are great, and our interests are much increased; but the trustees have been burthened with a heavy debt, and the financial affairs have been difficult to manage. About a year and a half ago the trustees decided to make a special effort to liquidate the debt, by having a bazaar. Things looked very dark for a time, but step by step was taken, circulars were printed and circulated in the town and neighbourhood, and the ministers commenced soliciting contributions towards the bazaar; and they met with good success, receiving upwards of £30 in money, and different kinds of articles were promised. A weekly sewing meeting was appointed, and a few of the lady members of the society and congregation commenced and continued to attend, and for several months were busily engaged in making all kinds of useful wearing apparel. Some friends in the town and neighbourhood, belonging to other religious societies, have kindly furnished all kinds of fancy and ornamental articles. And after a long season of great anxiety and hard toil, amidst much discouragement, we have been able to hold our first bazaar. We held it in the George Hotel Assembly Room, on Monday, May 4th, and the two following days. The amount taken during the three days was about £83. On Thursday a tea-meeting was held in the school-room, and a lecture was delivered in the chapel by the Rev. J. A. Bastow, of Carlisle. The net amount raised by contributions, the bazaar, the tea-meeting, and lecture, is about £86. We have paid £60 off, which we had on notes, and all the interest up to the present. The General Chapel Fund has promised to give us £20, and we intend to pay £50 off the mortgage, and thus reduce the debt on the property £110. T. ARKSON.

COLONIAL DEPARTMENT.

THE CANADIAN CONFERENCE.—My dear Sir,—Thinking it might interest your numerous readers, I have taken the liberty of sending you a few particulars about our Conference, lately held in Canada. Our tenth annual Conference was held, according to appointment, in the beautiful and prosperous city of Toronto, on Friday, April 10th. On the morning of the previous Wednesday, the Conferential meeting of the Ministers' Mutual Improvement Association was held. A large number of the brethren were present, and were much interested and profited in listening to the excellent essays read by the Revs. W. Lomas, J. Natrass, and T. Crompton. In the afternoon the annual meeting of the Canadian branch of the Primitive Methodist Itinerant Preachers' Friendly Society was held. Several brethren were admitted members on probation. We were glad to see that our junior brethren felt the importance and necessity of this truly benevolent society, and were anxious to connect themselves with it. It is, in our opinion, the most equitable insurance society existing in this country, and is far preferable to those companies which hold out strong inducements to the clergy to enter them. In the evening the Preparatory Committee met. The business of the committee (which is composed of the President and the Secretary of the Conference, and the General Committee Delegates to the District Meetings), is to arrange in proper order and under distinct headings, the entire business belonging to the Conference; and the orderly and speedy manner in which business is done in Conference, is greatly owing to the labours of this Committee. The following day, Thursday the 9th, was occupied with the business of the General Missionary Committee and the General Committee. In the evening several of the brethren addressed missionary meetings in Yorkville and in Yonge Street, appointments belonging to Toronto Circuit. On Friday morning the Conference proper assembled in our handsome church in Alice Street; nearly all the delegates were in attendance. After devotional exercises, the credentials of the delegates were read, and all being found correct, the Conference proceeded to elect its officers. The Rev. John Natrass was unanimously elected president, and Rev. Thomas Crompton, secretary. The usual committees, on Finance and Statistics, on Grants to Missions, on Children's Fund Apportionments, and on Missionary Deputations, and the Stationing Committee, were appointed and read out, and the remainder of the morning session was spent in prayer and praise. It will not be necessary to detail the business of each day during which the Conference was in session; suffice it to say, each day was devoted to its appropriate duties. Resolutions were passed condemning the separate School Act for Roman Catholics, and objecting to the assistance afforded by Government to educational institutions under denominational control, and petitions based on these resolutions were directed to be forwarded to the legislature now in session. A memorial was read from the Order of the Sons of Temperance, requesting the co-operation of the Conference in the efforts made to abolish the liquor traffic, and a favourable reply was directed to be forwarded to the proper authorities. Our increase in membership, after filling 1,183 vacancies, caused by removals, backslidings, deaths, and left, was found to be 575. The following statistics will be gratifying. Ministers, including hired local preachers, 65, increase, 9; local preachers, 267, increase, 16; class-leaders, 287, increase, 51; Connexional chapels, 122, increase, 10; other preaching places, 206, increase, 6; Sabbath-school teachers, 631, increase, 62; Sabbath-school scholars, 3,920, increase, 363; members in Canada, 5,417, increase, 575. It was also ascertained from the report of the Finance Committee that 4,569 dollars and 64 cents, missionary money, was raised during the past year, being an increase of 143 dollars 82 cents. This comparatively slight increase was owing partly to deficient harvest crops in the new settlements, and partly to the derangement of commercial transactions with the adjoining republic, consequent on the war between the Northern and Southern States. The public meetings connected with the Conference were of a very interesting nature. On the evening of Friday the 10th, the customary Conference sermon was preached by the retiring president, the Rev. James Edgar, and many felt their love for the Saviour increased as they listened to the unctuous discourse founded on John iii. 16. On the Sabbath, sermons were preached in Alice Street church by the Revs. John Lacey, Thomas Crompton, and William Rowe; also in the other churches belonging to Toronto Circuit, and in some belonging to Scarborough Circuit, by ministers attending Conference. It is worthy of remark that all the pulpits belonging to our Wesleyan brethren in Toronto were occupied by our ministers. The temperance and missionary meetings were well attended and well addressed on the topics peculiar to each. The ordination service was of a solemn nature, and as our brethren, Haigh, Hughan, and Lacey, were stating their conversion and call to the ministry, many were the prayers offered on their behalf. The charge of the Rev. R. Boyle to the above-mentioned brethren was considered so good that the Conference requested it might be published. But the crowning meeting, in our estimation, was the Conference breakfast, held on Wednesday morning, April 15th, and which was given by R. Walker, Esq., to the ministers and laymen attending the Conference, to their hosts and hostesses, and to the officials of Toronto Circuit. After disposing of the good things with which the tables were furnished, several short addresses were delivered. These were eminently of a social character, and exerted influences of no ordinary nature. The retrospect of the past, the contemplation of the present, and the hope of the future of our church in this colony, on which the different speakers dilated, awakened grateful feelings to God, and these feelings found expression in tears, sobs, and resolutions to re-consecrate ourselves to his work. This blessed meeting will long live in the remembrances of those who were privileged to be present, and many and pleasing will be the thoughts which the minister of God, whether toiling on frontier or bush stations, will direct to that occasion. Before the close of the meeting, a handsome present of several theological works was, by the president, presented to our dear brother Boyle, on behalf of the ministers and laymen present, as a small token of their appreciation of his efforts to promote their comfort at the different Conferences he has had to provide for. All things considered, this has been the best Conference held by us in this province, and the brethren in dispersing to their appointed spheres of labour, did so with the determination to be more faithful and diligent in the discharge of their holy but onerous duties. To know that they have the sympathy and prayers of your numerous readers will greatly encourage them, and amongst them the writer, who is

A CANADIAN MINISTER.

[We should have given this article insertion last month, but were unable to find space.—Ed.]

BENDIGO CIRCUIT—SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—On Lord's Day, December 24th, 1862, three sermons were preached in connection with our Eagle Hawk school,—in the morning and evening by Mr. George Kitching, and in the afternoon by Miss A. M. Hall. In the afternoon and evening the chapel was crowded to excess, and many persons were unable to gain admittance. On December 26th, a large tea meeting was held, after which the chapel was literally packed in every part, and some who could not get in crowded around the windows. The Rev. G. T. Hall presided, and the evening was pleasantly occupied by the children's reciting dialogues and select pieces, and by appropriate singing. The net proceeds, after paying all expenses of children's tea, provisions, &c., amounted to £20 6s. 10d. An excellent library has been established in connection with this school. G. T. HALL.

BENDIGO CIRCUIT—CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY.—The anniversary sermons of our White Hills Chapel were preached in the morning and evening of January 4, 1863, by the Rev. I. H. Palfreyman, from Balaarat, and in the afternoon by the Rev. G. T. Hall. On Monday, the 5th, a tea and public meeting were held, on which occasion addresses were delivered by the Revs. Mr. Rennie (Baptist), G. Daniel (Wesleyan superintendent), I. H. Palfreyman, and Mr. Hayton. The Rev. G. T. Hall presided; the meeting was interesting and profitable. On Tuesday evening an excellent lecture was delivered by Mr. Palfreyman—subject: "Alcohol Physically and Mentally Injurious to Man."

P.S. The financial proceeds have not yet been correctly ascertained.

G. T. HALL.

ASHBY, GEELONG.—We held our ninth anniversary on Easter Sunday, April 5th, when two sermons were preached by our esteemed superintendent, the Rev. M. Clarke. The afternoon was devoted to recitations and dialogues; and at this and the remaining services many friends were unable to gain admittance. On Monday the 6th, we held our annual tea meeting, when about 120 friends sat down to a comfortable tea, kindly provided by the ladies. The Rev. M. Clarke presided at the public meeting; Mr. Lemon, the secretary, read the report. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. W. Higgs, (Independent) and Brothers Spalding and Burridge. Our income is considerably in advance of last year's, notwithstanding the present depressed state of the times.

E. J. ROWDEN.

HOBART TOWN, TASMANIA.—On February 15th and 16th, 1863, we celebrated our second Sabbath-school anniversary at Collins' Street chapel, Hobart Town. On the 15th, two sermons were preached—that in the morning at eleven o'clock, by the Rev. W. Lowe, Wesleyan superintendent, and that in the evening at half-past six, by the writer. At three p.m., the children of the school recited several beautiful pieces. On Monday evening, the 16th, a public tea was provided in the chapel; after tea a public meeting of an unusually interesting character took place. The chair was occupied by Mr. Stewart, the father of Sabbath-schools in Tasmania, an old gentleman eighty-six years of age, a member of our church here. He told us that he commenced the first Sabbath-school in Tasmania, on Christmas morning, 1819, nearly forty-four years ago. The secretary read the Report, which showed that the school had been increasing during the past year; also that several of the senior scholars were walking in the fear of the Lord; and that the monthly teachers and children's prayer-meetings were times of peculiar refreshing and joy.

The collections on the Sabbath, with the profits of the tea, amounted to about £8. This has been a good anniversary; for the best of all, at the close of the Sabbath evening service, two precious souls started for heaven.

E. C. PRITCHARD.

SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES.—The autumnal anniversary services of the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Kent Street, were held on Sunday and Monday, May 17th and 18th. The tea-meeting was well attended. After tea several addresses were given; the writer presided. After singing and prayer by Mr. Roseby, sen., the chairman entered upon the statistical matters connected with the chapel during the past year 1862. He said:—"It is with gratitude to Almighty God that we are able to record the following facts in connection with our struggles to meet the annual expenses, and lower the debt on this chapel. With a contribution from the school fund, and pew rents, house rents, tea-meetings, collections, bazaar, donations, and subscriptions, including the amount collected by Mrs. Crook for the harmonium presented for the chapel in August last, the amount of £344 17s. 10d. was received and expended as follows:—Balance due to the treasurer January 1st, 1862, £38 1s. 4½d.; ordinary repairs and painting, £5 19s. 9d.; interest of the debt paid during the year, £33 19s. 8d.; lighting and cleaning, £14 5s.; back interest paid, £16 17s. 6d.; paid part of the principal, £80; cost of the finishing of the chapel, £110 13s. 3d.; insurance, £2 12s.; anniversary expenses, advertising, rates and taxes, &c., £5 4s. 9d.; value of the harmonium, pulpit cushion, &c., £37 7s.; making a total of expenditure of £344 16s. 3½d.; leaving a balance in hand of 1s. 6½d. The amount of interest and outstanding bills due was £64 14s. 7d. The amount collected this year hitherto does not quite reach that sum; consequently, there are the interest and other needful expenses that have been incurred this year to the present time to raise, before we are straight with regard to current expenses. The debt on the chapel, for which we have to pay 8½ per cent., is a mortgage of £700; money on notes of hand at 6 per cent., £106, for which the Rev. J. Sharpe, Mr. S. S. Goold, and Mr. Bennett are responsible; and £112, for which the Rev. R. Hartley is responsible." The Rev. Mr. Humphries (Independent) expressed his sympathy with the congregation of the chapel and their minister, on overcoming some of the difficulties with which they struggled, and dwelt interestingly on the "Pursuits of the Bible." Mr. Curtis expressed his pleasure at seeing seated on the platform three roses, though of different colours, yet belonging to the one stem of Christianity. As a good man had said, it was no matter what ship they travelled in, so long as they were all bound for the same place. He had heard that the word debt was the ugliest in the English language; but he was of opinion that its ugliness depended on the motive in contracting it. Their debt was honourably contracted, and would be honourably paid. By undertaking to test the truth of the saying, "A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether," they, without doubt, would accomplish their desire. The Rev. W. Vanderkiste (Wesleyan) followed with an amusing and pithy address, during which he alluded to the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. When he heard that the royal cortège had, during its progress, halted to receive presentations from the representatives of cities, he felt that he, a poor Methodist minister, should have liked to have tendered his present of a scriptural text mounted on satin—"Ye must be born again." He wished that more scriptural matter was introduced into such worldly ceremonies. The age was one of great and glorious movements. The Primitive Methodist Connexion was an important one, and had brought forth fruit to the glory of God and the benefit of man. One sect stimulated another. If storms arose in the atmosphere of the Christian Church they should take courage, for many a success had broken out of a dark cloud. The meeting was subsequently addressed by Mr. S. S. Goold, the Rev. Mr. Pigeon, Mr. Goold, jun., Mr. Roseby, sen., Mr. Roseby, jun., and Mr. Mitchell. At intervals several selections of sacred music were tastefully sung by the members of the choir, under the direction of Mr. Woolford; and while Mr. Roseby was addressing the meeting the happy idea of singing a verse of the national anthem occurred to him, and the chairman happening to have a copy of the one sung at Colne, in Lancashire, on the royal nuptial day, the congregation rose, and it was sung in Sydney with much feeling, the choir performing their part admirably. The amount of the collections and the profits of the tea is about £10. R. HARTLEY.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Strong Meat for Christians; or, Entire Sanctification defined, explained, proved, experienced, and enforced; being the Substance of an Essay read before the Associated Ministers of the Brinkworth District (Primitive Methodist Connexion), and published by the Committee of the Association, and the profits given to aid its funds. London: R. Davies, Sutton-street, and may be had of the Primitive Methodist Ministers. 60 pp. 8vo. Price Sixpence.

THIS is a lengthy pamphlet on the doctrine of entire sanctification; and the full exposition of the subject herein given does credit to the heart of the devoted brother by whom it was written. The views expressed are distinctly and unquestionably Methodist, and it speaks well for the soundness of the faith and love of our friends in the Brinkworth district, that such a paper as this was requested by the assembled preachers for publication through the press. Of all the sentiments and expressions it contains, it could hardly be expected we could fully approve, nor can we say anything very favourable of the arrangement of the arguments, or the literary execution of the work in general; but, comparatively, these are points of minor moment. The great matter is the soundness of the doctrine, and then the adaptation of the work for usefulness. And on these, we have no hesitation in saying, our verdict is decidedly favourable. We wish both our preachers and people would devote increasing attention to the subject of personal holiness, and we trust this pamphlet will have the effect of stimulating some so to do. If we will be a useful, we must be a holy people. We shall be glad if a large demand be made for this production, as we are sure it will be of service if carefully and prayerfully read among us.

The Christian Ambassador: A Quarterly Review, and Journal of Theological Literature. No. 3.—August, 1863. One Shilling. R. Davies.

THE contents of the present number of the Ambassador are—Edward Irving, Intellectuality and Religion, Caird's Sermons, Madagascar, Colenso on the Pentateuch, and the Proto-Martyr. There is scarcely as much variety in this as in the preceding numbers, but the length of some of the articles precluded this. The articles on Irving and Madagascar are deeply interesting; those on Intellectuality and Religion, and Colenso on the Pentateuch, are argumentative, instructive, and valuable; while those on Caird's sermons and the Proto-Martyr are very readable. A few inaccuracies may be detected in this number, owing, we presume, to the haste with which it had to be worked off; but nothing of serious account is involved. It will be difficult, probably, to get a sufficient number of original papers to supply the quarterly demand of the Ambassador; but we should have no objection to a borrowed one occasionally. Some very superior papers could be collected very fairly from certain transatlantic, as well as English publications, which would be new to the generality of readers, and quite equal in interest and importance to papers for which large sums have to be paid by certain of our contemporaries. We hope, if the Editor find it necessary, he will not hesitate to select a good paper occasionally, after the fashion of the "British and Foreign Evangelical," for example. We hope our readers will give the Ambassador their cheerful and earnest support; and that our travelling preachers, especially, will use their influence to make it generally known, and to gain for it a circulation equal to its merits; and more we do not desire.

The Complete Works of Richard Sibbes, D.D., Edited by Rev. A. B. Grosart. Vol. V. Edinburgh: Nichol. London: Nisbet and Co.

THIS volume contains treatises on the Christian Work; the Providence of God; an Exposition of Philippians, chap. 3rd; the Redemption of Bodies; the Art of Contentment; the Power of Christ's Resurrection; the Hidden Life; the Spiritual Jubilee; the Privileges of the Faithful; the Christian's End; Christ's Exaltation purchased by Humiliation; the Life of Faith; Salvation Applied; A Fountain Sealed; and the Fountain Opened. With such a bill of fare, the traveller in this quarter of the literary and theological world will surely be gratified. Sibbes is a host who by no means spreads his dishes sparsely, or serves out his viands with a niggard hand. He makes us heartily welcome to the best his house can afford, and his table is therefore a thoroughly dainty and ample one. How many a hungry student would have been glad to satiate his longing appetite at such a table and at such a charge in times gone by! We can remember days when with a treat like this we should have been in danger of sitting till the night hours grew small, and till we had heard the watchman crying, "The morning cometh and also the night." Well, let our younger brethren rejoice "that the lines have fallen unto them in pleasant places, and that they have so goodly a heritage." If, as Bacon said, "reading makes a full man," we know not why we should not now-a-days have many full men around us; for assuredly there is abundant material provided for readers of all classes, of all capacities, and all circumstances. Among the many books worth reading are those of the present series; and if time be well husbanded by our official, and particularly by our ministerial brethren, many will be able to enjoy the company and counsels of the excellent Sibbes. We cannot well wish for them a greater treat.

The History of Modern Europe, for Schools and Private Students. By THOMAS BULLOCK. London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co. Three Shillings.

MR. BULLOCK is favourably known in the literary and religious world as a writer of considerable ability, and the author of several useful and excellent works. His fame will be enhanced by the present production. It is a beautiful compendium of European history, and cannot fail to be very serviceable to that large class for whom it is designed. The facts appear to be judiciously selected, well arranged, and eloquently narrated; and the amount of information placed within easy reach, and offered at so small a cost is really astonishing. Young persons of both sexes should embrace the earliest opportunity of procuring, perusing, and re-perusing this handy and handsome epitome. We ought to say that a beautifully-executed map is prefixed to the volume.

The Book of Bible Prayers; containing all the prayers recorded to have been offered in the Bible: with a short introduction to each. By JOHN B. MARSH. Manchester. London: Simpkin, Marshall, and Co. Manchester: John Heywood, 143, Deansgate.

This is the embodiment of a somewhat novel idea. We rather like it. It is pleasing to have these specimens of Biblical devotional exercises brought together in this manner. We should like to see our Sabbath schools supplied with such books as this very largely; nor would our congregations and societies be injured by an acquaintance with them. Scripture Promises, Scripture Prayers, Scripture Precepts, Scripture Doctrines, Scripture Examples, &c., might to some advantage, we think, be separately arranged, and published among Scripture readers. Every means of this sort to promote familiarity with the inspired book has our best wishes.

[As we send our "notices" to press early this month, we have not so large a supply of works for notice as we sometimes have. Persons who wish us to notice their publications would oblige by sending them early.—Ed.]

OBITUARY.

ANN JONES, wife of William Jones, Old Church-stoke, Bishop's Castle circuit, was born September 9th, 1808, and died February 3rd, 1862. Until about three years ago she lived an ungodly life. Before the erection of our chapel in the neighbourhood of her residence, our services were held in her cottage. She yielded to the Spirit, was converted to God, and became a consistent member of our society, and was regular in her attendance at the means of grace. For twelve weeks before her death, she was ill of a rheumatic affection. In her affliction she was sustained by Divine grace, and was happy in her soul; she said, "I shall soon be with Jesus;" and she wished to be "over Jordan, in the sweet fields of Eden." The Lord grant that her sorrowing family may meet her there. J. WEBSTER.

JONAS HUDSON, of Fleetwood, was born in or about the year of our Lord 1829. His parents were in low circumstances, and he was on this account compelled in early life to leave home, and become a farm servant; and, like many others, he grew up to manhood ignorant of Christ and of the plan of salvation.

In the year 1850, God in the kindness of his Providence sent a few Primitive Methodists to Fleetwood to hold a camp-meeting. Curiosity induced Jonas with many of his companions in sin and folly, to go and hear what these babblers would say; deep impressions were made upon many minds, but various were the results. Some went away to scoff, whilst others retired to search the Scriptures to see if these things were so. The message itself was simple and earnest, and did not return void.

Jonas, assisted by the light of God's Spirit, came to the conclusion to seek for mercy through simple faith in Christ; he was anxious to realize peace of mind in the enjoyment of the divine favour. For this purpose he retired to an out-house upon the farm; he there fell upon his knees, and supplicated for mercy. He told the Lord in his simple way all his desires, at the same time laying hold of the promise of God by faith, by which he obtained the remission of all his sins. Subsequently he often testified of the change wrought in his mind, both at love-feasts and band meetings. He was one of Christ's witnesses, setting forth in his life and conversation the great excellency of Christianity.

After his conversion he forsook his former companions. His earnest desire was to grow in grace and live in fellowship with God and his people, that he might be better able to persevere in his way to the land of promise. His motto was, upward and onward; his religion was not of a selfish character, but was pure, expansive, warm-hearted, and benevolent. He felt a special regard for the church to which he was united. He had an impression upon his mind that his stay upon earth would be of short duration, he felt that he was only a pilgrim here. He was not discouraged, however, though he knew the valley was before him; he knew in whom he had believed.

Frequent attacks of affliction reduced him almost to a skeleton, which rendered him unfit for his labour as a porter to the railway company. The company were very kind, and for some time bore with his infirmities. But human kindness failed, and medical skill could do no more. His lamp, however, was trimmed, and his light was burning; he was waiting for the coming of the Bridegroom; he was ready to be gathered to his fathers.

Three weeks prior to his death, he lost a brother, and in fixing the place for his interment, he requested to have a place by his brother's side, hoping soon to follow after him, quite enjoying the prospect of resting in the same grave.

Not many days after his brother's funeral Jonas was taken worse; he left his work, complaining of pain in his back and head. His family began to despair of his recovery. The doctor, who attended him, told his wife that his stay upon earth would not be much longer. His race was indeed run, the battle of human life was fought. He appeared sometimes delirious, but the chapel and school were much in his thoughts, and often did he pray earnestly on behalf of the children. At times he appeared upon the point of death, and as if his soul was just making its exit; and then again as if recalled for a little while, he would break out in a full and distinct voice,

"We've had a tedious journey," &c.

About three hours before his death, he told his wife he was going home; he prayed for the school children, and then offered a petition to heaven for his own release. His brother left the room at two o'clock to take a little sleep, and returned at five. But Jonas had just gone, his spirit had taken its flight to the celestial abode of angels and of God. Thus died in peace, with a bright prospect of immortality and eternal life, Jonas Hudson, on the 27th of March, 1862, in the thirty-third year of his age.

GEORGE SIMPSON SLATER, of Brailsford, Belper Circuit, died June 13th, 1862, aged thirty-seven. He was converted after a sermon preached by J. B. Rodgers, in January, 1860, from which time till the time of his death, he was a zealous, consistent, liberal member. May his sorrowing widow meet him in heaven.

ELIZABETH ATKINSON, of Harden Beck, Bingley Branch, was born December 21st, 1793. She was brought up to attending the Church of England; but remained a stranger to religion until after her marriage. Her husband and she came to reside at Ryecroft; she then went to hear the Wesleyans, and was converted under their ministry. She joined that people, and remained with them until God in his providence sent the Primitive Methodists to Ryecroft. She was one of the first to join the Primitives, and she continued a consistent member, except when beyond the reach of the means. For twelve years a class met in her house, and she zealously laboured and fervently prayed for its enlargement. During the last three weeks of her life the class-meeting was held in her bed-room, and at one of these meetings she said, "I never felt happier in my life, and I desire to depart and be with my Saviour, which would be far better." A few hours before she died she said, "My affliction is great, but I shall soon have done with it, I am going home to heaven." The last words she was heard to utter were, "Jesus, Jesus, Jesus." Thus died our dear sister in Christ, June 16th, 1862, in the sixty-eighth year of her age.

M. FOX.

On Friday evening, July 5th, 1862, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, of Grantham, departed this life to be "for ever with the Lord,"—aged seventy-two years.

After the death of her father she was often visited with the strivings of the Holy Spirit; and in the early part of her married life these good impressions ripened into conversion. The Primitive Methodists of Grantham at that time worshipped in an old granary. In this barn-like looking building she heard the truth, felt its power, and resolved to unite with the people of God. The time was Sabbath afternoon; the preacher, Brother Worsnop; Satan was tempting; the Spirit striving. Her feelings became intolerable; in the midst of the meeting she cried aloud for God to have mercy on her; and before the service concluded, she was happy in the Lord.

Thenceforth she was a steadfast friend of Primitive Methodism, and for years her house was the home of the preachers; and many a mile has she travelled to collect weekly pence for the Chapel Fund. To the extent of her power and ability she laboured for the good of the cause. Her assistance in a prayer-meeting was valuable, and whenever she spoke in public, a good feeling attended her words. Her latter end was a very painful one; her affliction was cancer; but her faith was firm. It was evident to all that saw her during the last week of her life, that she was clinging with confidence to Christ, and him crucified. S. T. MEADOWS.

CAROLINE MATTHEWS died at Brinkworth, July 7th, 1862. She was born at Ashton Keynes, 31st of May, 1830. She spent her life in sin, until through the ministry of the Primitive Methodists she was brought to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

In the month of November, 1856, she was brought into liberty, and she immediately united with the people of God. During her last illness she manifested great patience; and often, when prayer was offered for her, she would respond aloud. The writer often visited her, and found her waiting upon the Lord. When asked as to the state of her mind, she replied, "Full of peace;" she said, "I feel happy, very happy." She continued in this delightful frame until it pleased God to call her sanctified spirit to the world above. Her desire for her mother's salvation was ardent and prayerful. In the month of February, 1862, she earnestly pleaded with her mother and prayed for her. The power of God came down, the aged woman was humbled at the foot of the cross, and the dying daughter had the unspeakable pleasure of rejoicing over a new-born mother. The morning before she died she was praising God aloud at seven o'clock. Her husband going up to her, she said, "Oh, John, be faithful to your work," (he is a local preacher) "live to the Lord, and if the child should live, bring him up in the way of salvation. Mother, meet me in heaven, and may all my friends meet me in glory." After this she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. J. HILL.

Mrs. MARGARET BROWN was born at Willington, July 16th, 1840. From a child she delighted to attend the Sabbath-school and the public worship of the sanctuary, whither she was led by her affectionate mother and grandfather.

About three years ago Brother R. Thompson, a local preacher, visited her house, and after suitable conversation and prayer, invited her to our chapel at South Hetton (Sunderland Circuit) where she received her first deep and effectual impressions of religion, and was soon led to a saving acquaintance with the Redeemer. She then joined our society, and held fast her integrity to the end. After her conversion she became anxious for the salvation of her family, and was made the honoured means of leading her husband and others to the Saviour. Her natural disposition, which was very amiable, was remarkably sweetened by divine grace, which shone forth conspicuously in the whole of her deportment. Her piety was of the most decided kind; she repented sin, and recommended religion wherever the opportunity offered itself. Her confidence was strong in God; she believed he was too wise to err, and too good to be unkind. Her attendance was regular at the house of God, and she was much grieved whenever prevented from joining in public worship; she delighted in the society of God's people where the conversation was of a spiritual character, and often looked forward with joyful anticipation to the period when freed from imperfection, she should enter into the presence of the King eternal, and participate in the sweets of uninterrupted communion with him and all the heavenly hosts before the throne. Under her hospitable roof the ministers of the Cross were heartily welcomed, and their visits anticipated with considerable pleasure. During her affliction she manifested the utmost patience and submission to the will of God. When she saw her friends weeping she requested them not to grieve for her, remarking that they might have wept if she had been sinking into hell, and reminding them of the fact, that death entered the palace and could not be resisted there. If it was the Lord's will, she said, she should be glad to recover, but if not she was prepared to die; and then she added, "The will of the Lord be done." Her husband then asked her if she felt any doubts or fears respecting her safety; she replied, "No, no, not a doubt, not a cloud, not a fear, all is well, all is well!" Her last words to her husband were, "Don't fret, we shall meet in heaven to spend a long, long eternity together." Early on Monday morning, July 7th, she fell asleep in Jesus, at Risca, in Pontypool Circuit, aged twenty-two years. T. HOBSON.

MARY CHOLERTON, of Belper, died in the Lord, July 8th, 1862, aged sixty-four years. She had been a consistent, liberal member of our Society for about forty years. Her dying words to her children were, "I want to take you all with me; I want to have you all in the Lord's Covenant, but—I can't get you." These words kept ringing in the ears of the family, and one daughter has given her heart to God, and taken her mother's place in the class-meeting. May all the others be saved, and follow the mother to glory!

J. BARFOOT.

ROBERT PUGH was born in the parish of Churchstoke, March 27th, 1792, and died at the Gritt, in Bishop's Castle Circuit, July 20th, 1862, aged seventy years. Though frequently convinced of sin, and the necessity of a change of heart, he remained a stranger to saving grace until about thirty years ago. During the last twenty-five years he was a consistent member of the Church, and adorned the doctrines of the gospel. For the last six years he was a class-leader. His health began to fail in February, 1862; but he bore his affliction patiently, although sometimes he would say, "Come, Lord Jesus." Towards the end, his affliction was so severe, that he was unable to leave his house; but his mind was fixed on heavenly things, and he would frequently give utterance to passages of Scripture and verses of hymns. On the Saturday before his death he exhorted his wife to hold fast, saying, "I shall be looking out for you." On the morning of his death, she read a psalm, and prayed with him, and asked him how it was with his soul; to which he answered, "I am the same in the storm as in the calm." He died in peace, resting on Jesus.

J. WEBSTER.

JANE PRICE, of Hadley, in the Wrockwardine Wood Station, died happy in the Lord, July 25th, 1862. Early in life she became connected with the Primitive Methodist Society, at Oakengates, and there is no doubt she was early converted to God. She was connected with the Sabbath-school at the same place, and for several years was employed as a teacher. She was a very consistent member of society, and tried to make herself useful. She was strongly attached to our ministers, and joyfully entertained them whenever they could visit her. In 1861 she was united in marriage with Jonathan Price, and they had the prospect of enjoying life together for years; but after giving birth to her first-born son, she was seized with fits, and on the day above-named she died, aged twenty-four years. She was interred at the ground connected with our chapel, Oakengates, and the number of people that attended her funeral, showed how much she was respected in life and lamented in death.

J. HUTCHINGS.

Mrs. HAIGH, of Dungworth, Sheffield first circuit, died July 27th, 1862. She became a Primitive Methodist about thirteen years before, and continued in membership until conveyed by "angelic bands" to the Church triumphant. She was one of the "excellent of the earth." The Rev. R. Parks, to whom she was well known, writes of her the following:—

"She was a lover of God's house. Notwithstanding her large family and extensive business, she was one of my regular hearers. She was consistent in her deportment. I never saw or heard of her doing or saying a wrong thing. She was a frugal and industrious wife. She ordered well the ways of her household; cleanliness, order, and quietness reigned in the house. She was given to hospitality. Liberal to the cause of Christ, she took pleasure in ministering to the servants of God."

After a short illness, her spirit ascended in triumph to heaven, whence her voice thus speaks to the sorrowing Church and weeping friends,

"Dry your tears,
The pure in heart shall meet again!"

C. H. BODDY.

ELIZA ATKINSON was born at Friskney, May 24th, 1814. In early life she was lively and intelligent, fond of books, and especially of her Bible, which she read and "hid in her heart." Her conversion to God occurred in the days of her youth. She then became a member of the Wesleyan Church. Her devotion to God was entire; her spiritual enjoyments were rich. Led beside still waters, in green pastures, her piety was healthy and vigorous.

In the year 1840 she became the wife of her now surviving and sorrowing husband, and Halton became her home. She then united with the Primitive Methodist Church, of which her husband was a member. In it she found a settled home; and from that time, amidst the cares of a family and of business, she "walked with God." Her closest was to her a sacred spot; seasons of high and holy communion spent there were manifold, and the grace obtained there shone out in her life. Her love to the house of the Lord was strong; her absence from the means of grace was the exception, not the rule. As a wife she was affectionate, diligent, and careful. As a mother, tender, attentive, and beloved. As a neighbour, respectful, kind, and respected.

The last few years of her life she suffered much from bodily weakness and mental sorrow—sorrow superinduced by the loss of a young, singularly pious, and lovely daughter, by what she deemed a premature death. Her affliction was, however, sanctified to her moral and spiritual benefit, and her sorrow gradually became more chastened and submissive as she advanced in life.

Her last illness was brief in its continuance, and its fatal issue scarcely anticipated by her friends. But though severe, it did not alarm her. While visiting her I asked some vital questions relating to her state and prospects; and in reply received answers prompt and assuring. She knew whom she had believed, and that he was able to keep that which she had committed to him against that day. She often gave expression to gratitude to God for her comforts and his mercies, and on the 28th July, 1862, when her friends were hoping for her recovery, the night of death closed on her, and she fell asleep to awake in glory.

THOMAS R. GREGORY, of Belper, died July 28th, 1862, aged seventy-nine. He was converted through the agency of his pious wife more than forty years ago, and was a quiet, godly member until death. Shortly before his decease he said, "Jesus is waiting for me." He solemnly charged his family to meet him in heaven.

SAMUEL WOODWARD, of Weaverham, in the Northwich circuit, changed mortality for life July 28th, 1862, in the fifty-first year of his age, having been a consistent member of our society for twenty years. He lived according to the course of this world till he was about thirty-one years of age. His wife started for heaven first; and for a while he had very strange notions of religion and religious people. For some time he watched their conduct very closely, and not finding anything in their doings but what he thought was right, he concluded religion was right and he was wrong. The Spirit of God strove powerfully with him, and led him to believe on Christ to the salvation of his soul. He then joined our society at Weaverham, of which he continued a steady, pious member, till removed to a happier clime. "He was a man who was faithful, and feared God above many."

For several years the preaching service was held in his house, and the class-meetings are held there yet. His house was always open both to the travelling and local preachers; they were welcome to the best he had. He was a cheerful supporter of the good cause.

When he joined society, he also signed the pledge as a total abstainer from intoxicating drinks, and such he continued while he lived.

For the last few years of his life he worked on the railway, under the London and North-Western Company; and he was killed while assisting to adjust some plates on the line near the Hartford station. He was attempting to get out of the way of a cattle train from Liverpool, and came into contact with the express from Crewe; he was knocked down, and killed on the spot.

He had a very narrow escape a short time before; and speaking of it to a friend, he said, had it been sudden death it would have been sudden glory. All who knew him believe it was so at last. His fellow workmen begged that they might have the honour of carrying him to his grave. Many attended his funeral, and the whole village appeared to be in a move when the procession passed through. The writer preached his funeral sermon at Weaverham, in the Wesleyan Chapel, to a crowded congregation; many could not get in. He was highly respected by all who knew him. In his removal his wife has lost a good husband, his children a kind father, and the Church one of its brightest ornaments. May his family, the reader, and the writer meet him in heaven.

A. KIRKLAND.

MARY EDWARDS died August 1st, 1862, at Scaford, Melton Mowbray Circuit, under very painful circumstances, being fearfully burnt.

When Scaford was missioned by the late John Brownson, she was convinced of her state as a sinner, and at once sought salvation through faith in Jesus; and now she became a pillar in the church. She was the oldest member but one; she was valiant for the truth, a burning and a shining light in the village. After the conversion of her husband, she turned her attention to the building of the chapel in which we now worship. A plot of land was purchased, and the work of building commenced, her husband digging the foundations, while she went into the village to beg money. Her love for the cause of Christ was never quenched; for thirteen years she swept and cleaned the chapel gratis. Her love for missions was known to all, and besides being a collector she gave the produce of a gooseberry bush annually. Her attendance at the means of grace was constant and regular.

On going to the chapel, July 20th, 1862, she expressed her thought that it might be the last time, and so it proved. Ten days subsequently her husband left home for work, and as she was re-kindling the fire, her clothes ignited; she ran into the yard, and was instantly encircled with flames, burning her arms, breast, and face terribly—the fire could only be extinguished by tearing the clothes from her person. She was put to bed, burnt in the most frightful manner; still she was happy and quite resigned. Her husband having asked her how she felt, she replied, "I have faith yet! I have faith yet!" "Should you like to die and go to heaven?" he asked. She answered, "Yes, yes!" When asked by Mrs. Lock and others if she was happy, she said, "Yes, to be sure; I shall soon be with Jesus; bless him!" She was mostly insensible, but when reason returned she expressed her assurance that her hopes were fixed on the Rock of Ages. She lingered till the above-named day, when her happy spirit took its flight to the paradise of God, aged seventy-three years.

A. BEANLAND.

Died August 1st, 1862, GEORGE BURNHAM, of Swanwick, in the Ripley Circuit. In youth he was not grossly wicked; he possessed an amiable disposition, and was preserved from many of those vices in which young people indulge. His father says he never knew him swear in his life. When a child he was sent to the Baptist Sunday-school, but he lived a stranger to the saving grace of God until he was eighteen years of age, when, under a sermon preached by the Rev. J. Norton, he was convinced of sin, and was soon enabled to rejoice in a sin-pardoning God. He immediately united with the Primitive Methodists; he loved our mode of worship, was a sound and constitutional member of the Connexion; the books he read were chiefly the holy Bible and our Magazines, large and small; he was a great admirer of our Connexional literature, and read it with pleasure and profit. He was a working Christian; he believed that the way of duty was the way of safety. He was very useful, both in the Society and the Sabbath-school. His character was good, his life consistent. The affliction which terminated his life was consumption; his sufferings at times were great, but he bore them patiently. On being asked if he should like to get better, he calmly answered that he had no will of his own in the matter, but for him to live was Christ, and to die would be gain.

G. WHITTINGTON.

ELIZABETH QUIRK departed this life, August 2nd, 1862, at Whitehaven, aged fifty-eight years. Her afflictions were somewhat severe and protracted, but amidst all she maintained a confidence of her acceptance with God; and when visited by her minister and friends, she expressed herself as being a sinner saved by grace. Although she was naturally reserved and timid, yet she would at times greatly rejoice and bless the God of her salvation. She was a kind neighbour, a loving mother, and an affectionate wife. As a member of society, she was regular in her attendance at the means of grace, consistent in her conduct, and upright in all her conversation. Her experience in class was generally expressed in few words, he showed a pure Christian spirit, and a soul hungering and thirsting after righteousness. The salvation of her husband and son was to her a subject of deep concern, and for it she earnestly and devoutly prayed. In all the walks of life she adorned the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, and she feared the Lord above many.

T. YATES.

ELIZABETH MARCH was born at Coates, in the county of Gloucester, March 9th, 1796, and died at Oaksey, in the Cirencester Circuit, August 11th, 1862. Being the daughter of the clerk of the Established Church, she was brought up according to the rites of that church; she learned to read the Word of God, and was taught her duty as a Christian.

In the year 1850, she was led to see that the way she was travelling in would lead to eternal death; she then decided to come out from the world and join the people of God; she joined the Primitive Methodist Church at Oaksey, and was a sincere and useful member until she was called to join the church above. She was of great service in the prayer-meetings; her words were plain and full of meaning.

About twelve months before her decease she was unable to attend the house of God for several weeks; but this only made her joy more sweet when her recovery from illness again permitted her to attend the house of God.

On Sunday, the 10th of August, on acquaintance from her native village called to see her, and asked her if it was dark in the valley; she replied, "No, light; Jesus is there. Sweet Jesus! all is light." Those who stayed with her during the night, say, if they asked her anything about her soul she would say, "All is well; Jesus is here."

On Monday evening her son, kneeling by her bed-side, asked her if she knew she was dying; she replied, "I am not dead; I am alive in Christ Jesus, God's own Son." He said, "My dear mother, can you tell me where you are going?" She said, "To be with Jesus." Thus her happy spirit took its flight to be with Jesus. The church has lost a useful member, and the inhabitants of Oaksey a dear friend.

J. KERR.

JOHN LEWIS, of Padeswood, in the Chester Station, was removed from this region of toil, suffering, and death, on the 11th of August, 1862. He lived without saving grace until he was twenty-five years of age, when in answer to the prayers of a pious and devoted mother he was brought to God, and obtained redemption in Christ, the forgiveness of sin. He joined the New Connexion, and continued with them until our people missioned Buckley, Padeswood, and other places in the neighbourhood. Brother Lewis heard their lively singing, and earnest appeals, and his heart warmed towards them. He offered his house for them to preach in, became a member, and subsequently a local preacher. He was simple and unaffected in his manners, steady and consistent in his deportment; and although his talents were not of a high order, he was a light in the church and neighbourhood, and highly esteemed. The writer of this sketch having enjoyed his friendship for more than twenty years, felt naturally drawn frequently to visit him in his last and painful affliction, to try to console him as a brother; but his chief joy was from above; the Divine hand was stretched forth to help him, and with an unshaken confidence he could say, "I know in whom I have believed." The day before his death, being the time for our annual camp-meeting at Buckley, several of the Chester friends called to see him, and this was his testimony before them, "The foundation standeth sure;" and he fervently prayed,

"Rock of Ages cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

A short time before he expired, being still sensible, two of the Buckley friends called to see him, and reminded him of one of his old texts,—"Say ye to the righteous that it shall be well with him." "Yes," he said, "it is well with me now; though I pass through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." And in ten minutes our aged brother fell asleep in Jesus. May we meet him in the skies.

E. DAVIES.

Mrs. ANN LEVER was born on the 5th of September, 1806, in the parish of St. George's-in-the-East, London, and was sent to a Sabbath-school, where she received those impressions which never wore off. She went to service when very young, and was much respected, but lived without God and without hope in the world until the year 1838, when she heard a sermon on the ten virgins, and became alarmed. She then sought him who hears the cry of the penitent, and obtained "the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." She could say, "I know in whom I have believed." She soon joined the Church, and she continued a humble follower of Christ till her death.

In the year 1861 Providence brought her among the Primitive Methodists at Limehouse, in the London third circuit, where she was regular at her class unless prevented by sickness. Her experience was sound and scriptural. The latter part of her life she endured much affliction, but she bore it all with patience. I visited her in her affliction, and always found her happy; and she would say, "The will of the Lord be done." She died in peace, August 12th, 1862.

J. BEDWELL.

CAROLINE COOK was born at St. Alban's, Hertfordshire, in the year 1834, and departed this life August 12th, 1862, at Hadley, in the St. Alban's mission. At an early age she was sent to a Sabbath-school; but she remained a stranger to saving grace till 1851, when through the labours of brother J. Rackham she was convinced of the danger of her condition; and she believably and successfully sought to become a child of God. She became a member of our society at St. Alban's, and by an upright walk showed forth the praises of him who had called her from darkness into his marvellous light.

About six years ago she entered into the marriage state with one of our local preachers, and they endeavoured to promote each other's growth in grace until our sister was removed to a better world.

For two years previous to her death she was greatly afflicted; but she never complained of her lot, nor wished her sufferings less. About ten days before her departure I visited her, and conversed with her about her confidence in Christ, enjoyments of grace, and future prospects; and she replied with seriousness and animation, "I feel Christ is precious now, and when the earthly house of this tabernacle is dissolved, he will give me a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." In this state of mind she passed away to glory.

B. B. ROGERS.

Died at Byker Bar, in the Newcastle circuit, August 13th, 1862, THOMASINE SOUTHERN, aged eighteen, deeply lamented by a knot of young companions, amongst whom she was acknowledged as a model of piety. At nine years of age she entered our Sabbath-school at Ballast Hills, and from that time was orderly and faithful in her attendance, and she profited by the instructions she received. As she grew older, and showed ability and aptitude for teaching, she was appointed to head a class of girls, an office which she filled with credit to herself and satisfaction to the school. Teaching was a work of love with her. Though she was so young she conducted a day-school for some time. Bereft of her father when but two years of age, she was thrown solely on the care of her mother, who also died about four years and a half ago, leaving her and an elder sister to struggle for themselves, with the aid of a little property left to them.

Our sister became a subject of grace early in the year 1858, during a time of "refreshing" with which our Ballast Hills society was favoured. At that time the door of grace was thronged, and she entered amongst others, and joined the female class, having seen her sinful state, and found peace in Christ. Her walk was in every way such as to entitle her to Christian membership, and to command the esteem and affection of her companions. She was of an amiable nature, of an even temper, and had "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." Very pleasant she was to her young compeers. But the flower was favoured to be plucked and gathered early by the Hand which none can stay or hinder, and which does all things well and wisely.

In the month of April her health declined, baffling all attempts at restoration. Symptoms of decided consumption pointed to an early grave. She was not apprehensive that death was so near till within the last few days of her life; but she continued to cherish hope, as it is natural for youth to do. When it became manifest that she was dying, she readily gave up the hope of life, and clung with stronger grasp to the hope of immortality, charging her sister not to fret for her; "for," said she, "you know where I am going." On the day before she died she tried to sing the hymn called "The Pilgrim," ending with "But my Father knows;" but she could not finish it: the spirit was willing, but the flesh was weak. We magnify the grace of God which can reconcile and more than reconcile a young Christian to forego life at a time when it has most charm and promise. To her companions her removal is a voice and a lesson, which we trust will be heard and heeded. She lies interred in a quiet churchyard in the country, awaiting a joyful resurrection.

T. GREENFIELD.

SARAH HANSON, of Enchmarsh, in the Church Streeton branch of Bishop's Castle circuit, was born October 31st, 1839. From her childhood she attended the ministry of the Primitive Methodists, and at an early age was the subject of religious impressions. She gradually yielded her heart to God, and became a member of our society. Henceforth she adorned her Christian profession by a lovely disposition and unblamable conduct. She loved the people of God, and when she heard any one speak against them, she would warmly defend their character and plead their cause. She was anxious for the welfare of our Connexion, and was deeply pained when any of its members walked disorderly. Her seat in her accustomed place of worship was never vacant, unless some pressing duty detained her. Singing was her delight, and in her home her sweet voice might be heard from morning until night hymning the praises of God.

In the month of April, 1862, she was laid aside by affliction, which proved to be consumption. During her illness she was occasionally depressed with doubts and fears, and would repeat those lines—

"At times I'm almost led to think,
I ne'er shall reach my journey's end;
But Jesus will not let me sink,
While on His mercy I depend."

Renouncing self, and deploring her shortcomings and negligence of duty, she would say, "I have thrown myself on Jesus, and if I perish I will perish there." She frequently and earnestly prayed for the family, particularly for her father and eldest brother, and exhorted them to relinquish every evil practice, and to walk in the paths of holiness. Her sufferings were severe, especially during the last week of her life; but through Divine grace she bore them all with exemplary patience and resignation, praying and asking others to pray, that she might be willing to suffer all her heavenly Father's will; thus she waited in hope till the 13th of August, when she gained admittance into her heavenly rest. In her death the family circle has lost a kind and loving sister, her parents a dutiful daughter, the church a consistent member, and the writer a faithful friend. May we all meet her in heaven. ANN EDWARDS.

Died at Lynn, August 14th, 1862, in the sixty-second year of his age, JAMES CAUSE. He was brought to God under the labours of the Primitive Methodists about thirty years ago. He opened his house for preaching at Inglethorpe. He removed to Lynn about twenty-five years ago. He subsequently became a member of brother Lincoln's class. It would seem, however, that for some time he was dismembered, through non-attendance at his class; until a revival broke out in Lynn, when brother White invited him to join his class. He did so, and from that time he was a consistent member to the day of his death.

Our departed friend was of a weak constitution, and for several years he was the subject of affliction,—especially for the last twelve months he was in a very enfeebled state of body. He was confined to his house for the last twelve weeks of his life, during which time he was severely tempted by the devil. At this time he was visited by Mr. Gibson and Mrs. Hillen, when the snare was broken, and the cloud dispersed. As he neared the eternal world his faith strengthened, light was in the valley, and he could say, "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

He was frequently visited by the sick visitors of the North End district, belonging to our Benevolent society. A short time before he died, while they talked and prayed with him, a holy joy animated his countenance; and while he spoke of his consolations in Christ, he gave a happy illustration of the language of the immortal Young—

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate

Is privileged beyond the common walk
Of virtuous life, quite on the verge of heaven."

On the last Sabbath of his life the friends of the town mission held a service in the yard where he lived. It was a precious season to his soul. His daughter propped him up in bed with pillows that he might be able to see the people, and he did rejoice in the God of his salvation. He died in the triumph of faith. May the reader and the writer meet him in heaven. Amen. G. DAWSON.

Died at Northampton, August 22nd, 1862, JEREMIAH HUMPHREY, aged fifty-eight years. About ten years ago, our departed brother united with our society at Northampton, and continued a member to the day of his death. His last illness was of short duration, but his sufferings, which he endured with Christian resignation, were great. I visited him several times, and always found him resting on the "Rock of Ages." The day before he died he said to his wife, "Give me my hymn-book, and I will read one more hymn to you, it will be the last." Having reached him the old hymn-book, which he prized much, he read clearly and distinctly those beautiful lines,

"For ever here my rest shall be,
Close to thy bleeding side;
This all my hope, and all my plea,
For me the Saviour died."

The morning of the day on which he died, he said to Mrs. Payne, "Jesus is precious!" to which she replied, "He is, Mr. Humphrey." "Yes," he added, "Jesus is precious to them that love and fear him." Shortly after his spirit passed away "to be with Christ which is far better." May the reader and writer meet him there. P. COATES.

MONTHLY SUMMARY.

THE Wesleyan Conference has opened its sessions at Sheffield; Dr. G. Osborn is the President; and the Rev. John Farrar the Secretary. The annual assembly of the United Methodist Free Churches is also in session at the time we write, but we have not yet received any intelligence respecting its proceedings. The New Connexion Conference, as well as our own, was held this year at Leeds. An old friend of our own, and an ex-travelling preacher with us—the Rev. W. Cocker—is their president. Their increase of members for the year is reported at 328: the total number in the Connexion now being 32,808. A fraternal communication was received by our Conference from theirs, and was cordially responded to by ours. More kindly feelings seem to be growing up among the different sections of the great Methodist body, as well as among other denominations; and in this we see cause for mutual gratulations.—The Spanish Protestants who were awhile ago sentenced to the galleys, have since been favoured with a commutation of the sentence, the Pope himself, it is stated, (?) having joined other parties in remonstrating with the bigoted Queen. They are now banished from the kingdom, and some of them, Metamorphosed among the rest, have recently been in London. Madagascar has lately passed through another of the strange series of moral earthquakes for which it has become so remarkable. The Protestant king has been cruelly butchered by a conspiracy of his subjects. Heathenism, and jealousy of foreign, chiefly French, aggression, seem to be the most probable causes assigned for the bloody deed. However, the Christians of the country seem, so far, to have been unmolested. Many prayers, doubtless, ascend daily to heaven in their behalf. The widowed Queen now reigns, and some suspicion it seems is attached to her in regard to her husband's murder. But this may be groundless.

Poland is still struggling against the Russians, and so far Providence seems to be on her side. But the end is not yet. How soon the Western nations may become embroiled with Russia no one seems able to say. "Give peace in our time, O Lord," is now a timely prayer.—American slavery is not in very promising circumstances at present. The Southerners are going to the wall, and the Northerners are in high glee. A shocking outbreak has recently taken place in New York, which was accompanied by incendiarism, pillage, and several murders. Ostensibly the cause was opposition to the conscription; but it is supposed the real cause is antipathy to the government and to emancipation. A deputation, consisting of Dr. Massie and the Rev. Mr. Rylance, of London, has been to America to convey the sentiments of European, particularly English, Christians and ministers, to the American Churches, on the subject of slavery. A very hearty reception was given to the deputation.—In India and China the cause of the Redeemer is advancing. The temples of heathenism are going to decay; such a thing as a new temple is never heard of; the reverence paid to the Brahmins is declining; and on the whole the people seem to be awaking to the fact that Christ is the only Saviour and Christianity the only true religion. A missionary hospital at Peking is the centre of a salutary moral as well as physical influence; and several natives have received Christian baptism.—Dr. Colenso keeps his place as one of the notorieties of the day, and in Ireland as well as England he has been killed several times over.—France has been recently annoyed by Popish interference with the elections; but the Ultramontane or "high Church" party seems to be losing influence. Austrian Popery seems also to be waning, and "freedom to worship God," according to the Bible, to be gaining ground there.—Our Parliament has broken up once more without having done anything very remarkable during its session, except, perhaps, rejecting Mr. Somes' Bill in favour of closing public-houses on the Sabbath-day. Mr. Lawson, M.P., has intimated that he will (n.v.) next session introduce the Permissive Bill, by which the people would be enabled to determine whether they would have the public-houses open on any day. The Duke of Hamilton, the Marquis of Normanby, and Sir Cresswell Cresswell, among the great men of the land, have lately been called to their long home; and several persons of standing in our own denomination have likewise been taken to their rest. May we and all our readers be ready when the Master shall call us!

POETRY.

THE GOLDEN YEAR.

We sleep and wake and sleep, but all things move;
The sun flies forward to his brother sun;
The dark earth follows wheeled in her ellipse;
And human things returning on themselves
Move onward, leading up the golden year.

Ah, though the times when some new thought can bud
Are but as poets' seasons when they flower,
Yet seas that daily gain upon the shore
Have ebb and flow conditioning their march,
And slow and sure comes up the golden year.

When wealth no more shall rest in mounded heaps,
But smit with freer light shall slowly melt
In many streams to fatten lower lands,
And light shall spread, and man be liker man
Through all the season of the golden year.

Shall eagles not be eagles? wrens be wrens?
If all the world were falcons, what of that?
The wonder of the eagle were the less,
But he not less the eagle. Happy days
Roll onward, leading up the golden year.

Fly, happy, happy sails and bear the Press,
Fly happy with the mission of the Cross;
Knit land to land, and blowing heavenward,
With silks, and fruits, and spices, clear of toll,
Enrich the markets of the golden year.

But we grow old. Ah! when shall all men's good
Be each man's rule, and universal peace
Lie like a shaft of light across the land,
And like a lane of beams athwart the sea,
Through all the circle of the golden year?—TENNYSON.

I am,
Yours as ever
Thomas Parr

BIOGRAPHY.

MEMOIR OF THE REV. WILLIAM LONSDALE.

HIDDEN among the hills of Durham is a fertile dale of great natural beauty ; to a traveller, in winter, the surrounding hills present a stern and frowning aspect, but in summer time the influence of a mild sun, of balmy breezes, of a murmuring river, of rich meadows and extensive pastures, make Weardale lovely. Its people, too, are manly and vigorous, being employed partly in lead mining, and partly in pastoral farming ; they love music and singing, and it is delightful to hear them, as you sit on the mountain side, uplifting their united voices till the valley rings, as they return from their worship. Their simple manners and retired habits exert a favourable influence on their relative character. But Weardale possesses the still higher attraction of having been the scene of several religious revivals.

In this beautiful dale, Mr. Lonsdale was born. His parents, John and Susanna Lonsdale, resided at the time at High Mount-Pleasant, Westgate. His father was a very amiable man, of irreproachable character. William's youth was spent in honest industry, but he knew little of business and nothing of anxiety. He was fond of rural sports, and excelled in running and leaping. He was popular in village debate, was a musician, and could sing sweetly. On the whole he was a pleasant companion, nor did he neglect to say his prayers and attend the chapel. He could tell many interesting stories of Oxtoby, Batty, Suddards, and Flesher, and many others, who had preached in the dale prior to his conversion. His mind was gentle and generous, and to some extent it had surrendered itself to the influences of these good men.

William was converted in a religious revival. One Sunday night he became greatly alarmed as if overwhelmed with shame, grief, and fear ; he obtained a full view of his own heart and life, and refused to be comforted ; but after much prayer he found peace. His conversion was thorough. His peace passed understanding ; his joy was unspeakable and full of glory. This truly evangelical conversion had much to do with making him a soul-saving minister, as well as in supporting him in seasons of temptation and trial. William joined his brother Thomas's class, and in this he did well, for Thomas deservedly bore a very high character for Christian simplicity and fervent piety. William was very humble, and sought much to be taught of God. While others went to their books he went to the throne of grace; with him the Bible was a supreme authority. The prospects of his life soon began to shape themselves definitely in the direction of the Christian ministry. In his application to be taken on the list of approved preachers he gives the following account of himself:—"I was converted," he says, "on the 14th of March, 1830, under the ministry of Mr. William Sanderson. I was put on the local preachers' plan in December, 1831, and was taken into the Itinerancy by Hull Circuit, in March, 1833, and was stationed to travel in my own native dale."

The quality of his mind showed itself by the preference it ever gave to the great truths of religion. In his sermons there was freshness and power; he was never dry or long; he was more given to proving than to painting. Genius would sometimes have given more graceful forms to his thoughts, and taste would sometimes have made greater use of the lights of science; but he sought not such helps. He excelled in homeliness; he spoke much in the parabolic style. He had a good head, a very good heart, and by no means a feeble imagination. Perhaps it was not of a lofty type, but it was potent of its kind; very apt in making common things available for illustration. "One day," says W. T., "he was on his way to a camp-meeting, where he was expected to speak to a number of infidels, some of whom were mechanics; he plucked a flower, and when called upon to speak, he held it up to the view of the congregation, and said, 'Can any of you make a flower like this? It is not large, and many of you are ingenious, can you do anything in this way? It has form, colour, scent, life, and is sustained in the storm by a feeble stem. To the God that made this flower I bow my knee;,' an infidel in the congregation bowed his also, and gave his heart to God."

He was remarkably earnest; his tearful eyes, his lifted hands, his troubled accents, and every lineament of his countenance indicated the depth of his feelings. Salvation, present, free, and full, by faith in Christ, was the favorite theme of his ministry; he had no notion of delays, exceptions, or limits, his great cry was "Come." He was never very clerical in his appearance, there was no assumed air of decorum; he was much in the style of a north country farmer, his dress was usually a little behind the fashion; to be sure he honoured the cloth and the necktie, but he was not near so dainty in such matters as some of his brethren. He honoured all men, but his preferences were with the pious poor ; he ridiculed the idea of human condescension. A humble brother told him one day of the condescension of one of our talented ministers in chatting freely with some pious old women, "Pshaw ! my friend," said Mr. Lonsdale, "where had my good brother been that he had to come down to talk with his people ? It is no coming down to talk with the humblest saint."

It is no mean commendation of him to know that God could use him without the danger of destroying him by pride and vanity, and that his friends could entertain him without the danger of destroying him by their generous hospitality. He was a great lover of the prayer meeting. Being fruitful in expedients and illustrations, he assisted the understanding and strengthened the confidence of many a penitent ; he fully believed that his faith could bring a degree of gracious help to the mourning soul, and so assist the vessel in taking the bar and entering the harbour.

In June, 1837, Mr. Lonsdale was married to Elizabeth Baty, of Nenthead. Elizabeth was a good girl, but of delicate health ; she was brought up chiefly by her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, who were among the few first and fast friends of the early preachers. They were rich and without children of their own, and they brought Elizabeth up, in a delicate way, so that in some respects she was very unfit for the discomfords of the early Itinerancy. She bore two children, Harrison and William, and died a most triumphant death, October 5th, 1841. Mr. L. travelled in Westgate, twice in Driffeld, in Canterbury, twice in Scotter, in Whitehaven, Barnard Castle, Bradford, Whitby, twice in Gainsborough, in Doncaster, twice in Swinefleet, in Grimsby, Pocklington, Brigg, and Hornsea. Several good chapels were built under his superintendency. His station at Canterbury was a failure ; he was sent to that city to open a mission, but his health failed ; so also to some extent did his heart and hope. After six months, he was re-stationed for Driffeld. During his station in Whitby, Mr. Harrison died, and Mrs. Harrison who had undertaken to make a home for Lonsdale's children, under the severity of the shock and the importance of her undertaking, prevailed on Lonsdale to resign his ministry and go home. She meant well but advised ill ; she was a kind woman, but like winter fruit she ripened late. But thank God she did ripen, and died well in a good old age. This was the most serious mistake in Lonsdale's religious career ; he went to a good home, to plenty of land, and trade, and money, but he could not be happy out of the ministry. He resigned in 1842, and in December of the same year he went to Scotter Circuit as a hired local preacher, and at the Conference of 1843, he was again restored to the ministry as a probationer. In August, 1844, he married Mrs. Longmires, one of the earliest and best of our female preachers.

Mr. Gibson, of Liverpool, says, "Dear Sanderson,—Having heard that you are requested to prepare a memoir of Mr. Lonsdale, I think it my duty to say, that it was my good fortune and great pleasure to travel with him two years in the Driffield Circuit ; he was a devout, humble-minded man ; a laborious, acceptable, and successful preacher. When we entered the station we found the members in a very agitated and unhappy state ; Mr. Lonsdale led the way to much prayer, family visiting, circumspect walking, kindness, and faithfulness. I well remember his saying to us on one occasion, ‘ Now, my lads, we are one hundred members below last March, and except we pray much, visit much, and in every sermon aim at saving souls, we shall be down at the district meeting.’ We united in effort, the work broke out, and scores were saved ; so we were able to report an increase. He was an efficient family visitor ; his words were few but appropriate ; his prayers were brief, simple, pointed, and often powerful. He was mighty in the prayer meetings ; and for sweet singing and powerful praying few could surpass him. He once said to me, ‘ I have never been able to raise a circuit without paying special attention to Sunday night prayer meetings.’ On the whole he was a superior man. JOSEPH GIBSON.”

Mr. Waumsley, of Swinefleet, says, “ My departed friend was dear to me ; he was every inch a man and a Christian. He was true to the Connexion, a kind superintendent, and to me a father. He knew the great truths of Christianity, and how to place them within the grasp of a child. Many in this circuit acknowledge him as their father in Christ : his crown won’t be starless. I have gone through the reports of his stations since 1843, and find that he never had but once to report a decrease ; he once had a decrease of five members, but in every other instance he had an increase, and some of them large—making in the whole many hundreds. THOMAS WAUMSLEY.”

His death was not sudden, his constitution broke up gently ; the soft hands of angels might have untied the bands of animal life ; for long there was no sigh, or pain, or doubt, nor did his mental energy ever fail. His last conversations were highly interesting ; the bearing branch was purged into greater fruitfulness ; he exhibited all the triumphs of faith, and greatly rejoiced in the promises. He was fully persuaded that his end was at hand ; death accompanied him as a presence, both in his best and worst hours. Several of his old friends united with him during the last few days of his life in carrying the needed promises of the Bible to the mercy seat ; and we ever found Heaven’s broad windows wide open.

A few days before he died, I told him of an excellent article which had just appeared in the magazine on the late revival in Weardale. I said, “ Mr. H. Philips, the writer of the article, says it is the mightiest revival there has ever been in Weardale.” At this, his face grew bright ; he shook his head, and said, “ That was the greatest revival when I was converted." Of that wonderful revival he had some good stories. His preferences were very pardonable, and I confess as I looked on so good a relic, and thought of others of the same standing, and in many respects of equal credit, I was ready to subscribe to my friend's opinion. Of the living I say nothing, but it was no small affair to add a William Lonsdale to the church of Christ.

Mrs. Lonsdale says, "My dear husband's earliest struggles to obtain peace were intensely distressing, but he never afterwards lost the blessing. In speaking his experience I have often heard him exultingly exclaim, 'I feel I am converted; I have my trials, but I am converted; I feel I am failing fast, but I am converted; my head is getting grey, but I thank God I am converted.' This was a great, a living fact in his experience, and often he said to me with great emotion, 'As I get nearer eternity, my gratitude increases from the fact that I am converted, and that the greatest portion of my life has been spent in the service of God, and that I have not lived in vain.' He was full of zeal for God and pity for man; he was often in labours more abundant. I cannot forget with what gladness he was wont to hail the prodigal's return, and what pains he took in pointing the sinner to the Saviour. Many on his different stations have acknowledged him as their father in Christ. He was strictly just, 'Owe no man anything,' was in his way of reckoning as binding as repentance and faith.

"One day as I stood weeping at the prospect of my approaching widowhood, he affectionately urged me to look to the Lord, adding, 'Thou wilt soon follow me.' I said, 'My sorrows are crushing me, and I fear I shall not hold out.' He said, 'I too might fear; I have many defects, but it is all through mercy.'

"His confidence was unshaken, even in the near prospect of death. There was a grandeur in his character and movements which covered me with holy awe and reverence. He scarcely seemed, at times, like an inhabitant of earth; he assured me that Satan was not permitted to hurl a dart at him; that he was going home because his work was done. I saw that virtue (or rather piety) alone has majesty in death. He was a conqueror, and more. To an old friend, who asked him how he was, he said, 'just alive,' but added

"Tis done, the great transaction's done,
I am my Lord's, and he is mine.'

"At another time he said to me, 'My bodily sufferings are indescribable.' I said, 'I hope they are not intolerable.' He said 'O no.' I said 'You feel Jesus is with you.' He said, 'O yes; I had need. He is my constant companion;' and then added, 'The covenant is signed and sealed.' When he thought of the District Meeting, and of his application for superannuation, he said, 'It is most likely I shall cease at once to work and live.' He spoke of his departure as if he was going to take a pleasant journey. Towards the last he suffered much ; but his mental powers remained unimpaired. About half-an-hour before he died he said with great solemnity, 'I have a conviction that I am going.' And then in a tone of holy awe and gladness he exclaimed, 'He is coming!' And he ceased to live."

He died on Tuesday, May the 19th, 1863, nine days after he had attained the fifty-sixth year of his age. On the following Friday his body was buried in the cemetery at Gainsbro.' The service was performed by his friend the Rev. W. Harland. W. SANDERSON.

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN GILPIN.

JOHN GILPIN, of Doncaster, was born March 9th, 1804, at Whitehaven, in Cumberland. In early life he lived according to the course of this world, and neglected the salvation of his soul. From various causes he was called to pass through heavy troubles and trials ; and on those occasions he had recourse to the intoxicating cup, instead of looking to Christ, who has promised to help those who call upon him. While thus pursuing the downward path, the good Spirit of God wrought upon his mind, and he began to reflect upon his ways, and to cease in some measure from those practices in which he had indulged. He was blessed with a pious mother, who prayed much for the conversion of her children. One Sabbath evening she went to John's house on purpose to talk with him about the salvation of his soul. She was led by the Spirit to speak in such a way to him, that he felt deeply his sinful state. He wept, and his family too. It appears from this time deep conviction seized his mind ; he felt as he had never felt before. He called his family together, and cried for mercy ; but did not then find pardon. The next day he went to see a brother who was ill, and he told him the state of his mind. His brother understood the plan of salvation, and at once pointed John to the "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." The day following he went to a friend's house at High Bentham, where he then resided, and he told her to enter his name in the class-book, as he wished to become a member of society. After a little conversation on the subject of religion, believing him to be sincere, his name was put down. He soon after obtained pardon, and was filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory ; and he continued a faithful and consistent member till removed to a higher and a better place.

About twelve months after his conversion his name appeared on the plan, with a few appointments. This circumstance greatly troubled his mind, as he did not feel satisfied about his call to the work. Some of the brethren talked to him about it, and he felt a little encouraged to go on and do his best in trying to win souls to Christ. He did go forward in the work, and God honoured him and blessed his labours. He sometimes spent hours in prayer before he went to his appointments ; and the word preached was so mighty, that on one occasion thirteen souls professed to be saved and made happy. Some of them became local preachers, and some have died in the Lord, and are now happy before the throne.

About twenty years ago he came to live at Doncaster, in which station he laboured hard, and was made a blessing to many. He was soon appointed to the charge of a class, and he strove well to lead his members into the enjoyment of a full salvation. He was a man of much prayer and of strong faith in God. Several remarkable conversions took place through his instrumentality. His pleadings with God in prayer at times were extraordinary, and many have wept while he has been pleading with God. He was employed for some time as a town missionary in Doncaster, in which sphere he was made a blessing to many souls. He well understood the plan of salvation, and many no doubt will be "the crown of his rejoicing in the day of the Lord."

The affliction which terminated his useful life was a cancer in his face, from which he suffered much pain; but in the midst of all his sufferings he possessed a good hope through grace of reaching the place where affliction and pain are for ever unknown. Satan at times endeavoured to take advantage of his weakness, but through the merits of Christ's death he was enabled to overcome and say, "My heart and flesh fail, but God is the strength of my heart and my portion for ever." He found Christ to be precious to him in time of need. He was enabled to look forward to the time when he should be with his Saviour for ever. His sufferings at times were great, but he endured them with great patience and resignation, believing that all would work together for his good.

He was regularly visited by the preachers and friends, who all bear testimony to his happy state of mind, and the confidence with which he spoke of heaven as his home. I saw him the day before he died, and found him happy, and fully ready for his departure. He said, "Tell the people where you go that the religion I have recommended to them supports me now I am dying. I feel," said he, "I am on the Rock. I have not one pain too many; if I could alter my position, I would not. It is all right. Nights are not long to me, I am so engaged in blessing and praising God. It gets brighter and brighter; I can view the goodly land by faith, and in a little time I shall be safe before the throne of God, and enjoy the fulness for ever." He died happy in the Lord, and in full assurance of a glorious resurrection to life eternal, December 24th, 1862, aged fifty-eight years.

MEMOIR OF MR. RICHARD COOPER.

RICHARD COOPER was born at Hetton-le-Hole, in the county of Durham, on the 30th of August, 1830, and killed December 30th, 1862, at Spennymoor, in the Durham circuit. Richard when but a child was remarkably kind and tender-hearted ; but he evinced signs of a corrupt nature, and the necessity of a change of heart. He was privileged above many, having a father who was brought to a saving knowledge of the truth through the agency of the Primitive Methodist ministry, and who has been a member of our church and a useful office-bearer therein for nearly thirty years. Feeling anxious for the spiritual instruction of his children, he placed them under Sabbath-school tuition. Richard's mind—like a flower in summer, unfolding its petals to receive the rays of a warming sun—opened to receive the light of Divine truth, which disclosed his moral condition and melted his heart. His father, discovering the religious impressions of his son, strove to lead him to God. On retiring to rest one night, he kneeled near the bed on which Richard lay asleep, and poured forth his soul in prayer, especially for his penitent boy. Richard awoke, and hearing the voice of his pleading father wept and prayed also. The father, anxious for the conversion of his son, wrestled on and on, until He who spoke to the Galilean lake, and said, "Peace, be still ; and there was a great calm," spoke to his weeping boy, and said, "Thy sins which are many are all forgiven thee." By faith he heard the welcome sound, and sang with joy,

" ' I have liberty found
Through the blood of the Lamb.' "

Glory ! glory ! glory ! " He at once identified himself with the people of God, exclaiming, "This people shall be my people, and their God my God."

He was punctual in his attendance on the means of grace, desiring "the sincere milk of the word, that he might grow thereby ;" and the ministry of the word was greatly blessed to his soul. He acquired a taste for and formed the habit of reading, which furnished and expanded his mind, and increased his store of information. The Church observing the progress of his piety and the growth of his intelligence, thought him capable of greater usefulness, and strongly recommended him to the quarterly meeting as competent for the local preachers' plan. And after passing through the usual preliminaries he occupied a place thereon ; but in consequence of a diffidence he felt in public speaking, and which he never fully overcame, he declined that sphere of usefulness ; but his so doing he afterwards deeply regretted. He possessed a talent for singing, and took great interest in that department of worship. Five years previously to his death he signed the teetotal pledge, and proved a great auxiliary to the temperance movement. For the last three years of his life he lectured frequently on the subject. His name is embalmed in the memory of many, whom he won from the sin of drunkenness to sobriety, social comfort, and Christianity. He also laboured to secure the best interests of the young, and delighted much in Sabbath-school teaching. He superintended our important Sabbath-school at Spenny-moor the last year of his life, with great credit to himself and satisfaction to the school. His counsel and addresses will long be remembered. On the evening before the day of his death he attended the house of God; the droppings of the sanctuary were sweet to his taste, and his soul enjoyed the preaching of the word. The next morning he descended the dark mine, cheerful, well, and happy in God. At three o'clock in the afternoon, while engaged at his work, a ponderous stone fell from the roof of the mine and crushed him to death. He was not heard to sigh or groan. How sudden, yet how safe! His death exclaims, "Be ye also ready!" He has left a widow and three children to lament the loss of an affectionate husband and a loving father. His remains were followed to their resting-place by an immense concourse of persons, who manifested their sympathy and respect for departed worth. E. RUST.

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN SILVERWOOD.

JOHN SILVERWOOD was born at Emley, Yorkshire, December 2nd, 1794. His parents being Wesleyan Methodists, trained him up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; hence he was never heard to take the name of the Lord in vain. John was led regularly to attend a place of worship. He was not brought to a knowledge of the truth by the eloquence of the sons of thunder; but, like Lydia of old, his heart was gently opened to receive the truth; and on December 29th, 1816, he found peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

He and his wife joined the New Connexion Methodists at Clayton West. In about two years they removed to Shelley, and continued with the same body of worshippers. In the year 1826 they removed to Manchester where they united with the Primitive Methodists. This was the commencement of a new era in John's life. Providence pointed out that he had something to do for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom in another capacity. He was appointed to assist in the Sabbath-school, and visit the absentees; he gave short exhortations, and grew in favour with God and man.

He subsequently removed from Manchester to Emley, in the Barnsley Circuit, and continued to spread the savour of religion wherever he was. In the year 1838 his name appeared on the Barnsley plan as an exhorter, and he gave general satisfaction in his pulpit ministrations and was a local preacher up to the time of his death. Some time ago a friend said to him, when he was on his way to preach the gospel, "John, the weather is unsettled and likely for rain." He replied, "My plan says nothing about rain; it says I am planned and must go." He frequently said, "I am not a fair weather preacher." There was no trouble about his appointments. The friends in the circuit felt confident that John's appointments would be supplied unless something very uncommon transpired.

At our Quarterly Meeting, December 25th, 1862, there was a little complaint about neglect of appointments. John rose from his seat and made a solemn appeal to the local brethren. With seriousness in his countenance he said, "I wonder what the preachers mean troubling the circuit-steward and committee with their appointments; I never troubled the committee in my life with appointments." He was not the man to be remiss in his duty, or to shuffle the work on some one else. He went to his work in the Primitive style, relying on the promises of the Bible, and he delivered his message in a plain, pointed way, believing that God would bless his efforts and comfort the people. His piety was deep and fervent, which caused a regularity in his general deportment through life. He did not move by frames and feelings. A sense of duty actuated him to labour for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom and the happiness of his fellow-men. He tried to make the best use of both worlds, and enjoyed a tolerable share of them. Little did we think on the 25th of December, at our Quarterly Meeting, that his voice would be heard no more to give advice and counsel in conducting the affairs of the circuit.

After he arrived at his home on the date above mentioned, he led his class and exhorted his members to be ready for death. On the 27th he was seized with a pain in his side,—which caused a difficulty in breathing—(called inflammation of the pleura). The writer called on Sunday the 28th, and found him in bed. He was a little concerned about his appointment at Clayton West. He said, "It is fifteen years since I have been unable to move about on the Sunday." I read a portion of the Scripture, and prayed and commended him to God, and he heartily responded and confided in God. A short time before he died his wife asked him how he felt, and if he was ready. He could not speak, but he lifted his hands in token of victory. This gave her satisfaction. On the morning of January 2nd, 1863, he calmly fell asleep in Jesus, in the sixty-ninth year of his age; and he was carried to his grave by a number of the oldest local preachers in Clayton West circuit. J. BALDWIN.

[I have been reminded while editing the above sketch of my old friend, of a conversation I once had with a respected brother at Emley, about the neglect of appointments. I said to him, "Brother Frudd, I have no complaint of neglect of appointments by the Emley local preachers as I go round the circuit." (And we had about half a score of Emley brethren on the plan—Brother Silverwood being one—and the journeys were many of them long and trying.) "No," said he; "our lads never miss if they can go. For if they did the whole society would give it them. We would not be disgraced by having our lads miss their appointments." —ED.]

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN PARKER.

and was born near Frosterly, in Weardale, in the county of Durham, in the month of September, 1803. His parents, though not wealthy, were of true nobility, being sober, industrious, and persevering.

John was a coal miner, and soon excelled in this branch of industry, which ministers to our domestic comfort and social happiness. The late George Stephenson, observing John's native talent and genial spirit, soon brought him into prominence by entrusting him with authority and power, and in time he became one of the best servants and most able managers of the coal mines in Derbyshire; and as proof of the high esteem in which he was held by the Claycross Company, it may be said in passing, they bore the expense of his interment, and followed his corpse to the grave.

His connection with our society was of the highest order. His fine loving heart beat with warm and glowing emotions for the weal of our Zion, and his bowels yearned for the salvation of the villagers, and he was most anxious to assist in any project for extending the cause of his dear Redeemer. Frequently would he say to me, "Now what can we do to get on the good work?" Again, "we must have this and that done."

In his last address, on the evening of the first day of this year, and at the close of a tea-meeting, where he much enjoyed himself, he said, "Each of us must try to save one soul this year. How?" he asked. "By binding them round our warm and loving hearts, and by carrying them daily to the 'throne of grace,' and there pleading the blood of sprinkling. Then," said he, "our numbers in Claycross will be more than 200."

In June last this part was made a branch of the Chesterfield circuit, and Mr. Parker was chosen the branch steward. This election was the means of bringing out his plans for general usefulness; and during his brief stewardship our numbers in Church-fellowship rose from 204 to 257, and our finances improved accordingly.

As our sketch is designed to be more religious than social and commercial, we will glance at a few traits in his character. John Parker loved the house of God; and I speak this to his honour. His attachment to the sanctuary was sincere and fervent. He could say with David, "Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thy honour dwelleth." Again, "I was glad when they said, Let us go up into the house of the Lord;" and again "My feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem." The Bible was also his chief book; though he had other books,—some on the arts, sciences, and literature, and others on the Bible,—notes, comments, and expositions;—and I have heard him say, "I like to read the Bible alone, and in the spirit of true devotion." On another occasion he said, "Never did I see such light and feel such power as when I was reading God's word. I could sit up all night to read the Bible. O how I love thy law! 'Great peace have they which keep thy law, and nothing shall offend them.' 'Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to glory.'"

In the pulpit Mr. Parker was one of our most able and efficient local preachers. His views of divine truth were clear, vigorous, and evangelical; and his discourses rich, vivid, and instructive. While preaching his eagle eye would dart round his congregation and pierce through his audience, and now and then his fine face and noble brow would light up with more than earthly radiancy. Having an appearance that was commanding and authoritative, a voice full, round, and sonorous, and other prepossessing accompaniments for a public speaker, he was well received, and his class, pulpit, and platform exercises were highly instructive and profitable.

The youths of this village were to him objects of deep, anxious, and earnest solicitude. A short while after my arrival at Claycross he laid his plan before the officials for forming a Bible class for the moral and religious improvement of the young men in our school and society, and for this noble purpose one of the houses under our chapel was turned into two rooms for them, and there he was to be found on a Friday night, from seven to a little after eight o'clock, teaching them the great truths of the Bible, and kindred subjects bearing upon their present and future welfare. Thus our Bible class has lost a wise teacher and kind benefactor. O that the members may ever experience the reality and power of his oral instructions, so that at last they may meet him around the throne of the Infinite and Eternal. Mr. Parker also formed a society class, and in a few weeks it rose to more than twenty members. In this religious service he took great delight. He used to call his members his little flock, and he was beyond doubt a good and wise shepherd.

To most of us of late it was obvious that Mr. Parker was ripening for heaven. Never in my travels did I see one in so short a time make such sure and rapid progress for another world. It was a pleasure to be in his company. His sudden departure was deeply lamented by all classes in this neighbourhood. The accident which closed his valuable life fell upon us like a clap of thunder.

As he was coming up out of the pit on Monday morning, January 5th, seeing his danger of being drawn over the wheel, he sprang from the cage, fell upon the office roof, rolled upon a loaded skiff, and thus in less than two hours ended his life in the midst of physical torture and agony. But the Lord did not leave him in the hour of severe affliction, for he was enabled to triumph over the last enemy death, and was heard to say, "Lord Jesus, receive me into thy kingdom." Feeling our great loss, and also deeply sympathizing with his widow and family, we sent a letter of condolence. The following is an abstract :—

"TO MRS. PARKER AND FAMILY,—

"The officials of the Primitive Methodist society in Claycross Branch do hereby desire to express their deep sympathy on account of the great loss you have just sustained by the death of your dear husband and father, and hope and pray that you may be comforted with the rich consolations of the Gospel of Christ, and that at last you all may meet him who now sleeps in Jesus. Moreover they do hereby testify that as a branch steward, preacher, leader, and member, he was every way adapted for and useful in these spheres of labour, and we mourn most deeply his sudden and unexpected departure from us ; but at the same time firmly believe that our and your loss is his gain.

Yours in the bonds of affliction,

JOHN BRINING, Secretary."

The Rev. William Jefferson, of Leicester, who knew Mr. Parker for more than thirty years, has sent the following sketch of his life and character :—

"Dear Brother Brining,—I had not heard of the melancholy fact your note to me contained,—the death of one of my oldest and best friends, John Parker. Nothing in my life so nearly resembled the impression produced on my mind by the sad intelligence as the communi- cation concerning the death of my brother, who sacrificed his life at the Burradon explosion on March 2nd, 1860, in going into the pit to attempt to save the lives, if possible, of some of the men in* that great catastrophe. I know something of Mr. Parker ; our friendship has been intimate and strong for considerably more than thirty years. We have worked together, worshipped together ; we were put on the plan nearly together, and have travelled many a mile to and from our appointments together. And yet that is all nothing, or next to nothing towards me saying anything, to my own satisfaction at least, on his character. The fact is, he was one of those characters which is very difficult indeed to delineate. His character was too original, too unique, to be easily described. His mind in my opinion was distinguished for two characteristics or traits, breadth and depth. He had not a glowing fancy, or what might be called a brilliant imagination. Hence things new and somewhat curious, and rising into cloudland, never gained much favour with him. He was slow in heart to believe in the upstart opinions of the day. But for solid views of Divine truth he was second to none within the range of his own circumstances and education. His sentiments were large and liberal ; he would do nothing by halves or in little. Had Providence led him into trade he must have been a whole- sale dealer ; and such were the sentiments of his heart in the great cause of truth and righteousness, and to all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. He was a man of the Church, not of a sect. He belonged to a society, but could not be confined in love and labour within the boundary lines of any Connexion. He respected rule and order, but no human authority could have set bounds or limits to the exercises of his free and unfettered bond-hating soul. In friendly debate he was very interesting, had great command of temper, and reasoned fairly, was ready, clear, and cogent; would give any opponent the utmost liberty and fair hearing, and then meet him openly and honourably. These are traits for which he always commanded respect. In fact it were impossible to know him and not respect him. I mourn his unexpected and sudden departure; but that he has gone to be for ever with the Lord is my solace and support, and ought considerably to assuage the grief and modify the sorrow of his bereaved one and her family."

Mr. Parker's funeral sermon was preached in the New Connexion Chapel, Claycross, by the writer, on Sunday evening, January 25th, from "This mortal must put on immortality." It is said that hundreds could not gain admission, such was the respect in which our friend and brother was held by the people.

He has left a widow, four sons, and two daughters, to mourn his loss. It is expected that a neat and suitable tablet will be put up in our chapel to perpetuate his memory.

"Thus star by star declines,
Till all are passed away;
As morning high and higher shines,
• To pure and perfect day:
Nor sink those stars in empty night,
But hide themselves in heaven's own light."

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN SAMUEL.

JOHN SAMUEL was born about the year 1777, and departed this life at Forden, Montgomeryshire, January 10th, 1863, being in the eighty-sixth year of his age. The first forty-two years of his life were spent in sin; and the remaining part in the service of the Lord. He was living at Bellan when he first heard the Primitive Methodists preach. The truth reached his heart, he humbled himself before his God, and soon found the "Pearl of great price."

For more than forty years he was a local preacher, and warmly attached to the Primitive Methodist Connexion. His love to the Connexion will be seen by the following:—Bellan, where he first joined the society was given up for some time, it being too far away for any circuit to supply it with preaching. The members thought and talked of joining some other section of the Church, but the old man said, "You can join where you like, I got my good among the Primitives, and I shall be one through life." He laboured on with the little society, and kept it together, preaching nearly every Sabbath until it was taken up by one of the Salop Circuits.

After some years our brother removed to Church Stretton, where he opened a great many places on the branch. He laboured much in the Bishop's Castle Circuit during the hot persecutions that were carried on in that quarter. And like his companions in tribulation, he often had to put up with a shower of stones, &c., at the same time feeling himself highly honoured to suffer for his Master's sake. Rough weather, long journeys, and cruel persecutions, could not keep him from his work. At whatever place he was planned, the congregation was never disappointed.

For the last two or three years, his physical strength would not permit him to take any appointments on the plan, yet in the social circle he pointed men and women to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."

Brother Alsop (one of our local preachers) saw him a little before his death; his confidence then was unshaken, the witness clear, and his hope blooming with "immortality and eternal life;" he was then in the "furnace," but he gave his friends to understand that he should come forth reflecting the image of the Purifier.

In life our brother's difficulties were very many. The sea over which he sailed was often stormy, but the harbour in which he anchored was calm. When standing upon the deck of his tempest-driven bark, he took a retrospective and prospective view at the same time; viewing the past he could say, "I have kept the faith;" looking at the future he exclaimed "There are my house," &c. And then without a single struggle the tabernacle fell, and the inhabitant passed away from this troublesome life, and he is now resting in the calm and sunshine of the eternal world.

MEMOIR OF MR. RICHARD TEECE.

MR. R. TEECE, of Birkenhead, was born at Bewdley, Worcestershire, January 1st, 1777. Of his parents, or his early life and habits but little is known. After residing in various parts he settled at Liverpool nearly forty years ago; soon after which, through attending Maguire Street chapel he was so deeply convinced of sin as to lose all relish for food for several weeks. When, however, he sought the Lord with his whole heart he found him to his joy and satisfaction. He always looked on Mr. John North, who was then stationed in Liverpool, as his spiritual father, and spoke of him frequently in terms of affectionate respect. Having joined our society he sought in every way to promote its prosperity.

For many years he was a class-leader and assistant, and once for a little while he had his name on the plan, but in this he did not feel at home, hence his name was taken off. His forte in Christ's vineyard was family visiting. Believing what had blessed him would bless others, he strenuously laboured to induce all he could to go to his place of worship, and as desires to serve Christ appeared, he would strongly urge the subjects of them to join his Church. Nor did he labour in vain; many were led to the house of God and the blessings of Christian fellowship through his agency; while many more were happily preserved from falling away through his timely visits and counsel. Nor can we doubt but that were this godly jealousy for each other's welfare more manifested by the members of Christ's Church in general, many more would be preserved from backsliding, while multitudes might be led to Christ.

During the awful visitation of cholera, in 1832, he, in company with Mr. T. Oliver (then stationed in Liverpool), spent much time day and night in visiting the sick and dying. For many years a class was met in his house, which was ever at the service of our Connexion. During the last few years of his life he was subject to much infirmity and feebleness, which prevented him from getting to the public means of grace; to his class-meeting, however, he would go, and he took a lively interest in its welfare, and while rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, he would frequently rejoice that God had so graciously blessed our Connexion. For his family, too, he was much concerned, and he habitually prayed that his three sons might become the adopted children of God. His patience under affliction, and his resignation to God's will were manifest more and more to the end. However often he was questioned, his hope was full, "a glorious hope of immortality;" and although diffident of self, he had strong confidence in God, and would frequently say, "God who has kept me so long, and brought me to the dock gate, will not leave me now, but bring me safely into harbour." Then when anticipating the meeting with old friends, he would say,

"And when in heaven appearing,
With rapture we'll each other greet;
And palms of victory bearing,
We'll cast our crowns at Jesu's feet."

In our frequent visits to him in his last affliction, we had good opportunities of knowing his spiritual state and prospects, which we always considered highly satisfactory. When no one suspected death was near, he said, "I lie in God's hands, waiting to see what he will do with me; I have lived to a great age, and am willing to live or die as he may appoint." A few hours afterwards he said, "Come, Lord, now, and receive my spirit;" this was repeated several times. Just before his last breath his partner said, "The Lord bless you!" He quickly answered, "He will;" after which he soon fell asleep in Jesus, on January 20th, 1863. After all, the question may arise,—had he no faults or failings? Without doubt he had, but these were better known to God, himself and family, than to others; he reckoned himself a sinner freely saved by grace; and we doubt not but that he has joined the church above in singing "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, be glory and dominion for ever." May his prayers be answered in the salvation of his sons. Amen.

MEMOIR OF MR. PETER LUCAS.

OUR late brother was born at Buglawton, in the Congleton circuit, 1791. Little is known of his career previous to his marriage, but it appears his moral and intellectual education was much neglected; and for some years after that period he was notorious for vice, such as drunkenness and profanation of the Sabbath; he was also a noted pugilist, and a bitter persecutor of the people of God. When living at Daneinshaw he was taken ill, and brought near to the house appointed for all living. While in the furnace he was led to see the exceeding sinfulness of his past life; and on his recovery he gave up keeping a public-house, and took a farm near Congleton. Here he had an interview with his brother, then a local preacher, and afterwards a travelling preacher in our Connexion; this conversation had a salutary effect upon his mind, and led him to go to a class-meeting held on the Sabbath morning at Congleton. His persecuting spirit being known, the members were wishful to have him put out, but the leader said "No." At that meeting he gave his heart to God, joined the society, and afterwards became the leader, for which office he was in every way adapted. Eventually his name appeared on the plan as a preacher, and, though his talents were slender, his piety was deep, his faith strong, and he had a burning zeal for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom; he was really a home missionary. On the Sabbath morning he would rise early and visit the neighbouring farm houses and cottages, praying a minute or two with all to whom he could have access, exhorting them to flee from the wrath to come, and to attend the house of God. The following places at which we now preach were opened by him:—Marton, Gawsorth, Loach Brook, Weston's Edge, and other places. He was also an extensive visitor of the sick, and was made a blessing to many; and as far as his means would allow, he was a liberal supporter of the cause.

A few weeks before his death, he met a person on the road, to whom he said, "I am going to see my brother, to know how he is getting on for heaven, for," said he, "I am going to live there before long." He had been unwell for some time.

On the 25th of January, he appeared to be fast sinking, and he said to his wife, "My confidence is strong in God; I have religion for myself, but none for you;" exhorting her to give her heart to God, and prepare to follow him. On the morning of the 26th, he exchanged mortality for life. His death was improved at Marton, February 22nd, by Mr. J. Broad, to a large and affected congregation.

THE QUALIFICATIONS FOR THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY REQUIRED BY THE TIMES.

Being the Substance of a Sermon preached at Grimsby, on Tuesday evening, May 5, 1863, before the Ministerial Mutual Improvement Association, of Hull District, and published by request of the Association.

BY THE REV. JOHN PETTY.

"Who is sufficient for these things?"—2 Cor. ii. 16.

MY DEAR BRETHREN,—It has been announced that I am to address you on "The Qualifications of the Christian Ministry required by the Present Times." This is confessedly a subject of vast importance, and one which I certainly should not have presumed to discuss, had you not requested me to do it. Its momentous character arises from the tremendous importance and fearful responsibility of the ministerial office. All other professions, and all other callings, however honourable and useful, are but of trivial importance, compared with the ministry of the Gospel. The profession of the law is exercised in order to protect the secular property and civil rights of men; the medical profession seeks to promote the health of men's bodies, and the preservation or prolongation of their lives; but the ministry of the Gospel is designed to promote the highest and eternal well-being of men's souls. The views of the Christian ministry entertained by the Apostle Paul, appear to have impressed him with an almost overwhelming sense of its vast importance, and he evidently trembled under its tremendous weight when he wrote the impressive passage of which the words of our text form a part, "For we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish: to the one we are the savour of death unto death; and to the other the savour of life unto life. And who is sufficient for these things?"

And if the great Apostle, notwithstanding his extraordinary natural gifts, his liberal education, his eminent piety, and his miraculous endowments, was so deeply and forcibly impressed with the importance of the Christian ministry, with what modesty and diffidence, with what seriousness and prayerfulness, should ordinary men attempt to discuss the requisite qualifications for the important office! And this is the principal part of our subject, though the special requirements of the present day should occupy our particular attention. With becoming lowliness and solemnity of mind, in humble dependence upon Divine help, and craving your candour and indulgence, would I enter upon its discussion.

I begin by remarking that the requisite qualifications for the Christian ministry may be arranged in two classes, namely, natural and acquired. We notice

FIRST. THE NATURAL QUALIFICATIONS REQUIRED IN THE MINISTRY BY THE PRESENT TIMES.

These qualifications may also be divided into two classes, physical and mental.

I. Physical. Among the physical qualifications required for the ministry in our day, we name the following:—A strong constitution, a good voice, a fluent utterance.

(1.) A Strong Constitution. Many persons indeed can see no great need of a strong constitution for the Christian ministry. They imagine that the life of a minister is the life of a gentleman; a life of ease, if not one of indolence and sloth. And certain statistics are occasionally published, which seem to sustain their opinion; presenting, as these statistics do, greater longevity among divines, than among either medical men or lawyers. But these statistics are, doubtless, derived from the ranks of the established clergy, whose duties, generally, are not to be compared with those of the majority of dissenting ministers, much less with those of Methodist preachers, and least of all with those of Primitive Methodist preachers, whose active duties are confessedly more numerous and laborious, than those of any other class of ministers in the land. For the efficient and regular performance of these duties much bodily strength is required. It is an utter delusion to suppose that a young man of feeble constitution, or delicate health, is fit for our laborious ministry. Many who enjoy tolerable health, and who fulfil the duties of their respective callings with comparative ease, would soon break down in our regular ministry. Numerous facts corroborate this statement. Scores of men have some of us known, who entered our ministry strong and healthy, who in a few short years were either carried to the grave, or were compelled to relinquish the ministry for a less laborious calling, which many of them have since followed for many years with health and comfort. Our ministry is not, it is true, in some districts at least, so laborious and exhausting as in former years; and in most established circuits such privations and hardships have not to be endured as were frequent in the early days of the Connexion. But still our ministry unquestionably requires a strong constitution; otherwise its numerous duties cannot be performed in such a manner as the times require, nor as our people generally expect. Let no feeble, delicate, effeminate young man, ever think of becoming a candidate for our ministry; and let no injudicious friends puff such a one up with the idea that he is equal to its onerous demands. All such young men are physically unfit for the work of our ministry; and to push them into it would be to inflict a serious injury upon them, and make them a burden to the Connexion instead of a blessing.

(2.) A Good Voice is another physical qualification required for the Christian ministry. A Christian minister is a public speaker, and therefore needs a good voice for the acceptable discharge of his duties. This is especially necessary for Primitive Methodist preachers, whose vocal powers are almost constantly called into exercise. Preaching six or seven times a week, leading classes, conducting other religious services, and praying with thirty or more families weekly, will in time severely test the voice of any man; and unless it be naturally good, it will prematurely fail. Some of our congregations, it is admitted, are small, and the demand made upon our vocal organs when addressing such assemblies is not heavy. But others of our congregations are large, and are likely to become increasingly so, as our places of worship are rapidly increasing in magnitude, as well as in number; and our frequent open-air exercises, especially at large camp-meetings, at which thousands of persons assemble to hear us, require no ordinary strength of voice. The regular and acceptable performance of these onerous and important duties for a number of years in succession, can only be expected from those whose constitution is strong, and whose voice is naturally good.

(3.) A fluent utterance is a third qualification for the ministry of the present day. This is of great importance in all popular assemblies, whether political or religious. It is more than ordinarily important in Methodist congregations. Methodist preachers as a body have hitherto been distinguished by a fluent and animated address. Many of them may have less polish, less accuracy, less elegance and chasteness of expression, than numerous ministers of older denominations; but most of them have always been and still are gifted with a free and fluent utterance, which has largely contributed to their acceptability and success among congregations long accustomed to such a mode of delivery. A free and fluent utterance is especially necessary in our congregations. A slow, hesitating delivery, or any material impediment of speech, would be a serious drawback to the usefulness and success of any of our preachers, as such impediments would greatly lessen their acceptability among our people. With these physical defects and imperfections it would be difficult for them to gain the attention of their hearers, and far more so to win their confidence and esteem. Scarcely any qualification would be deemed a compensation by many of our people for the lack of a fluent utterance. Such an utterance may be regarded as an essential qualification for acceptable preaching in our community.

2. Among the mental qualifications required by the ministry of the present day we mention a clear understanding, a sound judgment, and a retentive memory.

(1.) A clear understanding. This qualification is requisite in order to form accurate conceptions of things, to discover their nature, and to discern their relation, their resemblances, their differences, and their comparative importance. Without it we cannot well distinguish truth from error, nor discern the difference between matters of the first or highest moment and those which are of secondary or even of trifling importance. The lack of a clear understanding produces misty and confused ideas, and is one fruitful source of unscriptural doctrines and pernicious errors. Hence the importance and value of this qualification for the ministry of the Gospel. And intimately connected with it, and equally necessary for the Christian ministry, is

(2.) A sound judgment. This is truly an invaluable faculty. It is of great importance in all the affairs of life : in the practice of medicine, in the profession of the law, in the administration of justice, in commercial enterprises, and in all secular concerns ; but it is of unspeakably greater worth in the Christian ministry, which has to deal with matters of the highest moment, and those which concern the eternal well-being of men. Religious errors, to which a man of unsound judgment is constantly exposed, are incalculably more serious in their results than errors in mere secular affairs ; for religious errors affect more or less the highest interest of mankind, and not a few of them imperil the eternal salvation of those who entertain them. It is difficult, if not impossible, to estimate rightly the value and importance of a sound judgment in a Christian minister. A fertile imagination is a distinguished gift, and when properly regulated may render eminent service in the cause of Christ. It enables its possessors to present religious truth in ever-varied forms, to clothe it in rich and beautiful drapery, and to exhibit it in the most winning and enchanting aspects. But if not under the guidance of a sound judgment, it is ever liable to run wild, to produce serious error by extravagant representations of truth, or to create prejudice against the vital doctrines of the Gospel by the fantastic forms in which it arrays them. A sound judgment is a safeguard against these perils, and by keeping the imagination under proper restraint, renders it eminently subservient to the cause of truth. It is, therefore, of incalculable importance in the Christian ministry.

(3.) A retentive memory is a third mental qualification required in the Christian ministry. Without a good memory no great progress can be made in learning, no great acquisition in knowledge ; for without a tolerable faculty to retain what is learned or acquired, it is necessarily soon forgotten. A retentive memory is indeed sometimes improperly employed. It is the custom of too many preachers of all denominations to commit to memory other men's sermons, and to repeat them in the pulpit as if they were their own ; a practice which cannot be recommended, and which, when discovered, never fails to lower a preacher in the estimation of his hearers. Some excuse may be made for men who are engaged in worldly business during six days of the week, if they borrow a skeleton or an outline of a sermon, and use it on the Sabbath ; but those who are wholly devoted to the work of the ministry, if they would be "workmen that need not to be ashamed," should acquire the habit of studying and composing their own discourses. A good memory, however, is of unspeakable importance to the Christian minister in many respects. When well stored with sacred learning and useful knowledge, it is a rich and valuable treasury, out of which he can at all times bring "forth things both new and old," in all needful variety, for the edification and profit of his hearers.

A good verbal memory is a qualification of much worth to a preacher, as it enables him to quote correctly the passages of Scripture which are necessary to confirm his statements, or to beautify and adorn his discourses. It is also of service to him in the citation of passages from other writings, either for the illustration of his subject, the confirmation of his statements, or for controversial purposes; accuracy in all such citations being absolutely necessary.

But all these natural qualifications, physical and mental combined, are not sufficient to fit a man for the ministerial office. Many persons possess all these qualifications in a respectable degree, who are nevertheless utterly unsuitable for being public religious instructors. Hence we proceed to consider,

SECONDLY. THE QUALIFICATIONS WHICH SHOULD BE ACQUIRED AS A PREPARATION FOR THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY IN THE PRESENT DAY.

Among the acquired qualifications we deem requisite for the ministry among us we name—

1. Some acquaintance with the general branches of human learning. To understand thoroughly all the sciences, or all the branches of learning now cultivated, is too much to expect or require. Life is too short, and the means of acquiring knowledge too limited and imperfect, to admit of such vast attainments. No ordinary man can become eminently skilful in more than a few sciences. A critical acquaintance with numerous sciences is not practicable, except to men of extraordinary powers, and who also enjoy the advantages of the most liberal education. Yet some general knowledge of the principal branches of human learning is desirable for a Christian minister. It is even necessary that he should have, at least, some tolerably correct conceptions of the subjects to which they relate, and some knowledge of the meaning of the terms employed in teaching them, lest his entire ignorance thereof should create a prejudice against him in some circles of his acquaintance, and thereby injure his usefulness. But he should acquire

2. A more intimate knowledge of those branches of learning which are more especially serviceable for the ministry. Among these we may class,

(1). Geography. A knowledge of the various countries of the earth,—of their extent, their population, their languages, their laws and customs, and their religious rites and creeds, is necessary for those who take part in the management of missionary societies, or who are frequently called upon to plead in public the missionary cause.

(2). History. A knowledge of history, ancient and modern, assists the student to understand many portions of the Old and New Testaments, both historical and prophetic. History also illustrates the principles of the divine government, and therefore affords numerous lessons of instruction and admonition. An enlightened and devout believer sees "God in history," overruling all the affairs of men, and without interfering with their free agency, yet "working all things after the counsel of his own will, "rewarding virtue and punishing vice,"—communities and nations rising or declining in proportion as virtue or vice obtains among them.

Ecclesiastical history especially demands the study of the Christian minister. It will teach him many lessons of useful instruction, and may stimulate him to holy diligence in his calling by the many noble examples of faith and piety which it presents; and it will afford him most solemn admonitions against those evils which in different ages have corrupted the Christian Church, impaired its usefulness, and in many instances assimilated it to the world. The history of Christianity in our own country should be very familiar to British ministers, and our preachers should especially be thoroughly acquainted with the history of the Lollards, of the Protestant Reformers, of the Puritans and Nonconformists, of the Methodists in general, and of our own denomination in particular.

(3). Astronomy. A knowledge of the number, the magnitude, the distances, and the revolutions of the heavenly bodies, and of the laws by which they are governed, greatly enlarges our conceptions of the wisdom, power, and goodness of God, and tends to strengthen our confidence in him, and to promote our reverence for his greatness and majesty. Hence the sacred writers direct our attention to the numerous and mighty orbs which shine in the starry firmament for illustrations of the divine character and perfections. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy-work."

(4). Grammar. A minister should have a good knowledge of the rules of grammar, in order that he may speak correctly, and not excite the smiles of his hearers, nor awaken their prejudice or aversion by gross or flagrant blunders. To be able to convey his meaning in clear and correct language, so that his hearers cannot possibly misunderstand him, nor be prejudiced against him on account of his glaring ignorance and errors, is an acquisition of no mean value, and one which every young preacher should earnestly labour to obtain by all the means in his power.

(5). Logic. As a Christian minister has frequently to refute errors, and to establish truth by clear and solid arguments, a knowledge of logic, or the proper mode of reasoning, is of great importance. What an example of powerful reasoning have we in the writings of the apostle Paul! What acuteness and strength of reasoning appear in his argumentative epistles! Dr. Priestley might call this apostle an inconclusive reasoner; but if Dr. Priestley had been a believer in evangelical doctrines, he would probably have regarded the argumentative or reasoning powers of the great apostle in a very different light. By such an example of clear, acute, and powerful reasoning as Paul presents, and by the rich benefits which flow from it, a powerful motive is furnished to all young ministers to covet the art of reasoning well.

(6). Rhetoric. As rhetoric is "the art of persuasion," it must be of great importance to public speakers. And to no public speaker is the art of persuasion of such vast importance and value as to the Christian preacher. His great object is to "persuade men" to turn to God, to seek salvation through Jesus Christ, to live a holy and useful life, and to persevere in the ways of the Lord to the end of their pilgrimage, so that they may be finally saved, and enjoy eternal felicity in the immediate presence of God and of the Lamb. An object surely of unrivalled importance this! But what numerous and formidable difficulties are in the way of accomplishing it! What reluctance on the part of men to yield to the kind and gracious invitations of the gospel, though yielding thereto would promote their highest interest, their present and eternal well-being! And what opposition on the part of Satan to their conversion and salvation! No orator has a task so difficult of accomplishment as the Christian orator. None should therefore be better qualified for his task. And as a correct knowledge of rhetoric, and the ability to use it, are of great service in gaining the attention, convincing the judgment, arousing the passions, and persuading the will of an auditory, they should be earnestly and prayerfully sought by Christian ministers; so largely contributing as they do to efficiency and success.

3. A Christian minister should have a respectable degree of sacred learning. By sacred learning, we mean learning immediately connected with his sacred calling. Every minister should have a good knowledge of that blessed Book which professedly contains his creed, which should be the rule of both his faith and practice, and which it is the great business of his life to explain to others. But is an acquaintance with the original languages of Scripture necessary to this knowledge? An acquaintance with these languages is certainly desirable in most ministers wholly devoted to the great work of publicly expounding the Word of God. No translation can fully express the meaning of every Hebrew and Chaldean word in the Old Testament, and of every Greek word in the New. An intelligent and learned writer in a recent number of the "Quarterly Review" says, "We have just risen from marking every place in which it [our English version of the Scriptures] falls short of the original, as any translation must do, in perfect distinctness and precision, and they are to be counted by thousands. 1237 in the single gospel of St. Matthew, 1082 in that of St. Mark (and the proportion is the same throughout), will give some idea of the increased light which is thrown upon the interpretation of the New Testament by referring to the original Greek." Besides this we may state that there are many beauties of style in the original languages of Scripture, which are necessarily lost in the process of translation into modern tongues. But notwithstanding these assertions, we cannot go so far as to affirm that a knowledge of Hebrew and Greek, though certainly a truly valuable acquisition, is absolutely requisite to a good knowledge of the Scriptures, and therefore absolutely necessary for every Christian minister. It is admitted by every competent critic that the English translation of the Scriptures is, on the whole, a faithful and excellent version of the original, and that every important doctrine and precept of the inspired volume may be readily learned and correctly understood by a diligent and prayerful examination of it. The writer just quoted, adds to the words we have cited, "But this reference [to the original Scriptures] will only bring out more clearly and prominently the great truths and doctrines which at present are expressed perhaps less clearly in the authorised Version."

But though a knowledge of the original languages of Scripture is not absolutely necessary for every minister of Christ, an acquaintance with Hebrew antiquities, and with other Oriental, and with Greek and Roman customs, is really necessary for him. Without this acquaintance many passages, both of the Old and New Testaments cannot be well understood. Many learned and excellent works on these subjects are within the reach of most young ministers, and with the assistance of such works, and that of able commentaries on the Scriptures, they may readily become familiar with this useful and necessary branch of Biblical learning.

But Christian ministers should especially possess an accurate and comprehensive knowledge of theology. Theology is the grand and glorious science which they profess to teach; and to be content with a slight and superficial knowledge of it would therefore be a shame. May we not say that in most cases it would be a sin, and a sin without excuse? Ignorance of other sciences may be excused, especially in those whose means of acquiring a knowledge of them have been but small; but there can be no excuse for a minister who is not well acquainted with divinity, which is the science emphatically belonging to his sacred profession. A lawyer who is but slightly acquainted with the laws and customs of his country, is contemptible. A physician who knows but little of physiology and anatomy, of the diseases to which the human frame is liable, and of the quality and power of medicines, is unworthy of our confidence, and unfit for his honourable and useful calling. What then shall be said of a Christian minister who has but superficial or confused ideas of the most important Christian doctrines, and an imperfect acquaintance with theology in general? How poorly is he qualified for the important office which he has presumed to enter! How little deserving of the confidence and respect of the people to whom he ministers! Let it be the earnest and prayerful effort of all young ministers to become sound and skilful divines. However defective they may be in other desirable attainments, let them be careful to make proficiency in the study of theology.

But important and valuable as are the natural and acquired qualifications which we have hitherto considered, they all fall far short of what is absolutely requisite as a proper qualification for the Christian ministry. To all the gifts and acquirements we have named, there should be added

4. Eminent spiritual endowments. The Christian ministry is not a mere profession. It is a Divine institution, a heavenly calling. The great Head of the Church, whose right it is to call men to the work of the ministry, can alone bestow the spiritual qualifications which are requisite for it. Among the spiritual endowments which the ministry requires, we mention

(1.) Strong faith. Strong faith in the truths of God's blessed word, causes these truths to make a deep and vivid impression on the mind. It makes the preacher feel that he deals not in doubtful speculations, or in vague uncertainties, but with important verities and momentous realities. It brings death and judgment, heaven and hell, immediately before him; surrounds him with the solemnities of the future state; and enables him to study, and preach, and labour, with eternity in view. It gives a solemn earnestness to all his addresses, and makes his hearers both see and feel that he believes all he teaches. Strong faith in God and in the truth of his gracious promises, enables the preacher to take hold of the arm of Omnipotence in times of peril; and to repose in him that cannot lie an unshaken trust in the midst of distressing disappointments and other discouraging circumstances, and nerves his arm with strength in the day of battle. It brings God nigh to him in the study and in the pulpit, and fills him with Divine energy and spiritual power. It secures for him through the mediation of Jesus Christ, large measures of Divine influence in his public ministrations, and enables him to say with truth, "Our Gospel came unto you not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance;" for he preaches the Gospel "with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." If but small measures of Divine influence attend our preaching, it is because our faith is weak. If we have strong faith, a large measure of this influence will usually, at least, accompany our public ministrations, and convey the word we deliver, with power to the hearts of our hearers.

(2.) Fervent love to God is another spiritual endowment requisite for the Christian ministry. There is no true minister of Christ without a measure of this love. But an ordinary degree of it should not satisfy the Christian minister. His heart should glow and burn with this sacred flame. He is an ambassador for God. He has to "speak in God's behalf," to "justify the ways of God to man;" to convey the Divine message of grace and mercy to our fallen rebellious race, and to bring as many as possible to submit to the rightful authority and sovereign rule of God, and to accept of pardon at his hands. And surely he should not do this with a cold and unfeeling heart, or in a dull and lifeless manner. His heart should kindle and flame with love to that gracious Being whose authority he seeks to maintain, and whose glory he professedly aims to promote. A cold heart in him who proclaims the boundless mercy and melting compassion of God to our rebellious race, and who has himself shared in that infinite kindness and love, is a great disgrace and a great sin. Angels sent from heaven to earth on errands of mercy or of judgment; burn with ardent love to him whose they are, and by whom they are sent; and shall not pardoned sinners, entrusted with an embassy of mercy from their gracious and forgiving God to their sinful fellow-men, burn with love to him from whom they have received such wondrous displays of kindness and benevolence, and to whom they are laid under infinite obligations? Shame on us, my brethren, if our love to God is cold; if we, who have been saved by his matchless grace, and honoured with conveying the tidings of his love and mercy to others, convey those tidings in a cold, or in a dull, lifeless, or unfeeling manner! With what confusion of face should we confess our fault at the mercy-seat, if at any time we have delivered the gracious message of God to our fallen race, with coldness and indifference! What flaming love becomes our character and calling! With what fervour of desire to promote the Divine honour, and the maintenance of the Divine authority, should we study, and preach, and pray! If our hearts do not glow and burn with love to our gracious, forgiving God and Father—if our love to him is cold and feeble, we may be assured that whatever gifts we may possess, whether natural or acquired, we are but poorly qualified for the high and holy calling upon which we have entered. May a live coal from the altar of God touch our lips, and give us a "tongue of fire," and a heart of burning love!

(3.) Ardent zeal for the honour of Christ and the extension of his kingdom, is a third spiritual qualification requisite for the Christian ministry. The Christian minister is not to seek his own honour, but the honour of Christ his Lord and Master. He is not to make a display of his learning, gifts, or attainments, in order to gain the applause of men ; but to proclaim “ the unsearchable riches of Christ,” and seek to promote his glory in persuading men to acknowledge his authority and bow to his sceptre. Satan, that arch-rebel against the government of God, has set up his throne in this fallen world, and usurped the dominion among the majority of mankind. “ The whole world lieth in wickedness ;” hundreds of millions of our race render Satan homage and obedience. But “ the Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil,” and turn men “ from the power of Satan unto God.” And it is the duty and privilege of his ministers to make known the Saviour’s wondrous condescension and love, and to conduct as many as possible to Christ in penitence and faith, that they may obtain pardoning mercy and renewing grace, and hereafter shine as stars in the Redeemer’s crown.

And with what ardent zeal should we perform this duty ! If faithful ministers of an earthly sovereign are zealous for his honour, and do their utmost to put down rebellion whenever it arises, to make all his subjects dutiful and loyal, and to maintain at all times his rightful authority, what zeal for the glory of Christ and the maintenance of his royal sway should burn in the hearts of Christian ministers ! With what ardour should they labour to extend his dominions ! With what quenchless zeal should they prosecute the glorious enterprise of bringing the whole world into subjection to his authority. The zeal of the Lord should be like a fire in their bones, and prompt them to deeds of noble daring and acts of constant self-sacrifice. Forgetful of their own honour and reputation, comparatively indifferent to their personal ease and comfort, and altogether unmindful of worldly gain, they should live only for the glory of Christ, and uniformly devote all their energies to the great work of extending his empire among men. The zeal of the Lord should “ eat them up.”

(4.) Melting compassion for the souls of men is another spiritual endowment requisite for the Christian ministry. The Gospel message is a message of love and mercy. It is founded upon the grand scheme of human redemption, which originated in the boundless love and infinite mercy of God to guilty man. It contains, indeed, fearful threatenings and solemn admonitions ; but these are addressed to the impenitent and disobedient. The Gospel is nevertheless good tidings—tidings of pardon for the guilty and salvation for the lost. It breathes divine benevolence and infinite pity to fallen man. And the Christian preacher should imbibe its spirit, and proclaim its message in love and tenderness. He should pity the erring and wayward, and grieve over their sins and misery. The thought of their precious souls perishing for ever should fill him with unutterable sorrow, and cause him to entreat them in tenderest terms and in the most compassionate manner to turn to God in penitence and faith. What tenderness and compassion moved the Son of God when regarding the impenitence and approaching misery of his countrymen! "And when he was come near he beheld the city, and wept over it, saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes." On another occasion he exclaimed, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!" Similar was the compassion of the apostle Paul towards his unbelieving countrymen. "I say the truth in Christ, I lie not; my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh."—Rom. ix. 1—3. Writing to the Philippians, he says, "For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." Phil. iii. 18, 19.

Such is the compassion for the souls of men which should characterize the Christian minister. It should be seen in his looks, and heard in his tones whenever he addresses perishing sinners. It should influence him in his studies and assist in moulding his discourses. It should prompt him to labour and toil, to wrestle and agonize in prayer, that sinners may be converted and saved. This compassion for souls will reconcile him to hardships and privations in the prosecution of his labours, and make him think lightly of suffering, weariness, and pain, if souls be saved under his ministry. And it gives him power with men, and thus tends to render his ministry effective. Melting compassion for sinners, seen in a minister, melts and subdues an audience, and usually succeeds in winning many souls to Christ. These spiritual endowments are requisite for the Christian minister,—

(1.) On the ground of consistency. Ministers exhort others to exercise faith in God, and they should therefore themselves be distinguished by the exercise of faith in him. They call upon others to cultivate love to God, and should therefore themselves love him with a perfect heart. They seek to provoke others to zeal in the service of Christ, and should therefore themselves be zealous in his cause. They enforce kindness and compassion to their fellow-men upon their hearers, and should therefore themselves be moved by tenderest sympathy and compassion for perishing souls. Surely what they preach to others they should practise themselves, or they are mournfully inconsistent. May you, my brethren, never dishonour yourselves, nor throw a stumbling-block in the way of others by this melancholy inconsistency.

These spiritual endowments are requisite—

(2.) As an example to others. Men need the aid of a pious example, as well as of pious exhortations and godly instructions, to influence them to lead a Christian life. The lack of such an example in Christian ministers would, in most cases, neutralize the most eloquent preaching. Many of their hearers would be ready to say, "Physician, heal thyself!" There is, on the contrary, a powerful and beneficial influence attending consistent conduct in Christian ministers, which gives weight to their addresses, and adds force to their exhortations.

These spiritual endowments are requisite in the Christian minister, (3.) As a moral fitness for the discharge of ministerial and pastoral duties. Without faith in the truths which a minister ought to preach, without love to God whose servant he is, without zeal for the honour of Christ whose kingdom he should seek to extend, and without compassion for souls whom he should labour to benefit and save, no preacher can be morally fit for the office which he has presumed to enter. He can have no sympathy with evangelical truth, no delight in his work, no real earnestness in his preaching. His duties must be irksome and burdensome, and the service of God a weariness. He may have mental gifts and scholarly attainments which would qualify him for other professions, whose duties he might perform with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of all concerned; but he is morally unfit for the sacred ministry, and should never dare with his unhallowed hands to serve at the altar of God.

These spiritual qualifications are requisite for the ministry,

(4.) In order to secure the Divine approval and the accompanying blessing of God. Ever since the Christian religion was taken under the protection of the Roman emperors, and Christian ministers have been supported by the state, multitudes of unconverted men have been thrust into the ministry as a respectable profession, and in order to obtain a comfortable livelihood. And while human nature remains as it is, such will continue to be the case more or less in all Established or State Churches. But no unconverted minister can surely have the Divine approval, nor reasonably expect the Divine blessing to attend his labours. All such ministers are intruders into the sacred office, and retain it without the sanction of the Most High. "Unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth?"—Ps. l. 16. Occasional instances have doubtless occurred of souls being converted under unconverted ministers; but these instances have been comparatively rare, and form an exception to the general rule. The infinitely holy God cannot approve of his holy Word being preached by unholy men, nor can his blessing on the preaching of such men be consistently expected. Would you, my brethren, enjoy the approbation of him whose servants ye are, and be favoured with his blessing, without which all your labours will be in vain, seek to be holy. Would you be eminently useful? labour to be eminently pious. Would you have large success? pray to have strong faith, and cultivate fervent love to God, ardent zeal for the glory of Christ, and melting compassion for the souls of your fellow-men. The greatest blessing we can wish for you is that you may be eminently holy and entirely consecrated to God. Much as we desire you to excel in all those gifts and qualifications for the ministry which have come under our consideration, we are most devoutly solicitous that you may be eminent for piety, that you may be "full of the Holy Ghost and faith," and that "much people may be added to the Lord" under your ministry.

In conclusion, allow me to address a few words to those who are not preachers, but who are members of our churches, or hearers in our congregations. My Christian friends, you perhaps discern that many or most of us who are in the ministry come far short of those high qualifications we have been considering as requisite for the ministry in the present day. But are not you partly to blame for our acknowledged and lamented imperfections? Have you helped to promote our improvement all you could? Have you kindly and frankly given us useful hints for our guidance? Or have you rather complained of us to others, or made our infirmities subjects of amusement in your families or among your friends? How easy it is to find fault! It requires neither talents nor grace to complain that our preaching is cold, lifeless, dull, or uninteresting. But does this habit of complaining, especially to others and not to ourselves, tend to make our preaching better? Would you really help to promote our improvement? Then earnestly wrestle and agonize in prayer that we may have all needful assistance from on high, and become "able ministers of the New Testament." How earnestly is prayer for ministers enforced upon the Christian Church in the writings of St. Paul! How anxious was he to share in the prayers of those to whom he wrote and among whom he laboured! And if an inspired apostle needed the prayers of the Church to render his labours most effective and successful, how much more must ordinary ministers require such help! Do you, my friends, daily and devoutly discharge this duty? Do you help your ministers in their arduous work by fervent supplications to heaven in their behalf? Do you earnestly pray that a rich measure of holy unction may attend their discourses and thus render them effective in the conversion of sinners and in the sanctification of believers? By this means, if by no others, you may render them effectual aid, and greatly promote their efficiency and success. But seek also to co-operate with them in all practicable and prudent efforts to promote the prosperity of the work of God and the salvation of precious souls. Both ministers and people should be zealous and active in efforts of this character. The state of the world and the character of the times in which we live loudly call for active and zealous efforts to extend the kingdom of Christ, and save souls from sin and death. O! for a working ministry and a working Church! It is cause of devout thanksgiving to Almighty God that we have been favoured, in some considerable degree, in our own community, with this happy combination. But may it be much more fully realised among us throughout the length and breadth of the whole Connexion. So shall we have no district decreases to record, but we shall be blessed from year to year with continued and enlarged prosperity. "God, even our own God, shall bless us," and shall crown the labours of our hands with continued and abundant success. Amen.

WORKS OF CREATION.

POLARIZED LIGHT.

Most persons who have looked through the "wondrous tube," the microscope, have, at one time or other, witnessed the gorgeous phenomena of polarized light. Nothing that the artist can do, can truly represent the magnificence of many objects when thus seen. But, while brilliancy and splendour characterize this mode of observation, the extreme delicacy of many of the tints is not less remarkable; and, by proper management, even with a single object, an almost infinite variety of colour may be obtained. No wonder, therefore, that this particular mode of using the microscope should be so popular as it is; and no wonder, either, that an idea should prevail that polarized light is much more beautiful than useful. It must be confessed that microscopists have, for the most part, been content to enjoy the varied beauty of its effects, and have greatly neglected its practical application. No great use, however, can be made of polarized light, except as a sort of empirical test, without a familiarity with the optical principles involved in its phenomena; and although this department of optics is one of the most difficult and abstruse in the whole range of science, yet whoever will take the trouble to master it, will be amply repaid by the intrinsic interest of the study, by the beauty and strangeness of the phenomena with which it is concerned, and by the great practical uses to which, in competent hands, it may unquestionably be applied.\* Briefly stated, the case is this. Polarization divides a single ray of light into two rays. These rays pursue different courses, and have different properties. When produced by double refraction, one of them follows the ordinary law of refraction, and is called the ordinary ray, while the other is refracted out of the usual course, and is called the extraordinary ray. These two rays are said to be oppositely polarized. If they are examined by means of a Nicol's prism, (a crystal of Iceland spar so prepared as to transmit only one of the two rays,) it will be found that there is a particular position of the prism in which one of the rays will be completely transmitted, and the other completely stopped. If the prism be then carried through half a revolution, the same results will follow. But if it be carried through only a quarter of a revolution, the ray that was transmitted will be stopped, and the ray that was stopped will be transmitted. On carrying the prism through half a revolution from this point, the same results will be obtained. Glass polarizes light, when the ray falls on it at an angle of  $56^{\circ} 45'$ , with the perpendicular to its surface. The polarizing angle of water is  $53^{\circ} 11'$ . Indeed, much of the light that we ordinarily see reflected from windows, sheets of water, and other brilliant objects, is really polarized, though it cannot be thus recognised by the naked eye.

There are various modes of polarizing light, as by bundles of plates of mica, or of glass; plates of agate, or of tourmaline; crystals of Herapathite, &c. : but the usual apparatus supplied with the microscope, consists of a Nicol's prism, in a revolving fitting, to be received below the stage; and another Nicol's prism, which may either be used in the compound body, where it has the advantage of not contracting the field, though considerably diminishing the brilliancy of it; or it may be placed (as it usually is) over the eye-piece, in place of the ordinary cap; in which position a more brilliant, though smaller, field is obtained, and there is greater facility for the rotation of the prism. The lower prism is called the polarizer; the upper, the analyzer. As a large portion of the light is stopped out in its passage through these prisms, a very strong and brilliant light should always be employed with the polariscope.

Many objects having the property of double refraction display, when examined under the polariscope, the most gorgeous colours, which change with the revolution of either the polarizer, the analyzer, or the object itself. But where the power of double refraction is too small to produce these colours they may often be obtained by laying a slide containing a thin film of selenite beneath the object. For an explanation of the cause which produces these colours, we must refer the reader to Mr. Woodward's little book. Suffice it to say here, by way of correcting a popular error, that it is altogether distinct from the prismatic decomposition of light; this latter depending on the different refrangibility of the several colours which make up white light; while the colours of polarized light depend on what is called "the law of interference."

By the marked action of doubly-refracting bodies on polarized light, the presence of such bodies is readily detected; when, if examined with ordinary light, they might easily escape notice. Thus we recognise at once silica, raphides, (crystals found in some kinds of vegetable cell,) starch-grains, hairs, spicules, &c., in organized structures; certain peculiarities in the structures themselves,—as inequalities of density, elasticity, and thickness; many adulterations and impurities in food and drugs,—as of alum in bread,* and quinine in quinine; the presence in urine of phosphates, and carbonates of lime and magnesia, and of alkaline phosphates, sulphates, and urates. But the peculiarities of different bodies under this mode of examination can only be studied by actually making such examination. So much for the practical. As to the beautiful and curious, some of the most noteworthy objects are,—the circular crystals of salicine, cinchonidine, and magnesio-sulphate of copper; crystals of chlorate of potash, nitrate of potash, alum, sugar, &c.; siliceous cuticles of Equisetum, Deutzia, and many plants of the grass tribe; scales of Eleagnus; hairs of rat; scales of fish; palates of Gasteropods, (a branch of the snail family;) sections of horn, shell, teeth, &c. Many of these are dull and most uninteresting objects when viewed by ordinary light; and very marvellous is it to note the change not only in the play of the investing colours, but in the appearance of the structure itself, as soon as it comes under the influence of polarization.

Another very desirable addition to the microscope is the Parabolic Illuminator. The most ordinary form of it is a paraboloid of glass, with the apex cut off; and this blunted extremity ground out into a hemispherical cavity. In the centre of the cavity is fitted a stop, which cuts off all direct light from the object. The apparatus fits into a tube below the stage, or into a secondary stage as the case may be, and can be used with any object glass except the very high powers; but it requires to be moved nearer to the object, the higher the power employed. The plane mirror should always be used, and if the illumination be unsatisfactory, the light must be concentrated upon the mirror by means of the condenser. The light enters the base of the cone in parallel rays, but the central rays are stopped out altogether, and the remainder, being reflected out of their straight course at the curved surface of the glass, are thus made to converge upon the object, which is most brilliantly illuminated from every side; while the rays are projected upon it, or rather across it, at such an angle as not to enter the object-glass at all. The result is an apparently luminous object upon a black ground; an arrangement by which silicious and other structures are seen to great advantage.

Here, for instance, is one of the suckers of a specimen of Holothuria, better known as the sea-cucumber. Longitudinal and transverse sections of the skin show abundance of spicules which are disposed in no regular order; but in the suckers they take a circular arrangement, forming a sort of rosette of crystal flint, which viewed in the ordinary way, shows very indistinctly through the fleshy covering; but with the black-ground illumination the rays strike upon the clear edges of the spicules, and each one is seen outlined in brilliant light, with a sharpness that not only makes it a pretty object, but leaves a definite impression on the memory. On another slide is a minute annelid; and here, certainly, we see that the Paraboloid may be put to real, practical service; for, while it is difficult by transmitted light to detect any difference in the structure of the œsophagus, as compared with the intestinal tube which joins it, and of which the latter appears to be a simple continuation, yet, by the dark-ground illumination, the different character of the two structures is unmistakable, and cannot escape the most careless observer.

The shells of the smaller Foraminifera, with their often curious and always graceful forms, are by this means seen to much advantage. Still more beautiful are the shells of Polycystina, inhabited by the same low organisms, and formed on the same general plan as those of the Foraminifera. Both groups exist in such countless numbers as to cover—we might almost say to form—a large proportion of the sea-bed; and they are scarcely less widely distributed on land. The infusorial earths of Bermuda and Richmond, (the seat of the Confederate government,) certain rocks of Sicily and Greece, and especially a rocky stratum in the island of Barbadoes, abound in them. The slide now on the stage contains specimens from the latter locality; and, under a curious old-fashioned objective (of about half an inch focus) of unknown origin, and which does not look worth five shillings, we have as pretty a sight as the eye can well look upon. The diversity of form is, perhaps, the first thing that strikes the attention; but this, though considerable, is not so great as it seems to be. Some are merely imperfect specimens, others are shells of the same pattern in different positions, and thus seen from different points of view; still there are seven or eight species very well represented. The most numerous are nearly the shape of a bishop's mitre; others resemble the skeleton of one of the Pedicellariæ of the star-fish. Other shapes bear more fanciful resemblances. In any collection of war-clubs from the South Seas, there is pretty certain to be one particular pattern,—evidently a favourite. The long, straight, smooth handle grows gradually thicker towards the bent extremity, which swells out into a circular disk, with a sharp beak projecting from the face of it. The edge of the disk is certain to be neatly carved, and very often the space between that and the angle also. Now, if the New Zealanders had possessed microscopes, and had studied the Polycystina, we should have said that they had simply copied one of these minute shells; for here is the club, carving included. Some, again, are circular, with elaborately-sculptured disks, and plain, projecting rays. These simple projections are a characteristic of the group, and are often strangely placed. Seeing how exquisite is their general finish, we cannot be surprised that for some time the tenants of these wonderful structures were placed high up in the various systems of classification. They have, however, been reduced to their true and very humble position; and are now placed in the same category as the sponges.

EXTRACTS.

PLAINNESS IN THE PULPIT.—A man who cannot make things plain, is not qualified to fill a pulpit. First of all, let the preacher think out his subject so thoroughly, that his ideas shall lie clear and distinct, like crystals, in his own mind; and then let him remember that a "straight line is the shortest distance between two points," and speak accordingly. What right has he to use an involved and tortuous manner, when declaring the great things of God—"darkening counsel by words without knowledge"? What right has he to come before plain people in a strait-jacket of professional dignity, and talk of "volition," instead of will, "intellectual processes," instead of thinking, and "moral obligation," instead of duty, and the like, as if the very use of language were, as Talleyrand suggests, "to conceal one's thoughts"? What right has he to give his hearers the hard stone of metaphysics, when they are dying for the bread of heaven? What right has he to bring forward profound disquisitions and curious speculations, when the command is, "Preach the preaching I bid thee?" And what right has he to hide that Christ whom he is to make known amid flowers of rhetoric, as Verelst, in his portrait of James II., virtually hid his majesty in a profusion of sunflowers and tulips? When the late young preacher, Erskine Hawes, was dying, he said, "I wish to live to preach the Gospel more simply." How many at death's door have felt as he felt!—Dr. H. C. Fish.

THE CROSS IS THE STRENGTH OF A MINISTER.—Give me the Cross of Christ. This is the only lever which has ever turned the world upside down hitherto, and made men forsake their sins. And if this will not, nothing will. A man may begin preaching with a perfect knowledge of Latin, Greek, and Hebrew; but he will do little or no good among his hearers unless he knows something of the Cross. Never was there a minister who did much for the conversion of souls, who did not dwell much on Christ crucified. Luther, Rutherford, Whitefield, M'Cheyne, were all most eminent preachers of the Cross. This is the preaching that the Holy Ghost delights to bless. He loves to honour those who honour the Cross.—Rev. J. C. Ryle.—Home Truths, 2nd Series.

SAID a minister once when I gently hinted to him that he had not preached the Gospel that morning: "No! I did not mean to preach to sinners in the morning; but I will preach to them in the evening." "Ah!" said I, "but what if some of your congregation of the morning should be in hell before the evening?"—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. (Sermon, "Paul before Felix.")

LET us remember as ministers of the Gospel what M'Cheyne beautifully said: "Depend upon it," said he, "it is God's Word, not man's comment upon God's Word, that saves souls." And I have marked that if ever we have a conversion at any time, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the conversion is rather traceable to the text, or to some Scripture quoted in the sermon, than to any trite or original saying by the preacher. It is God's Word that breaks the fetters and sets the prisoner free; it is God's Word instrumentally that saves souls; and therefore let us bring everything to the touchstone. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. (Sermon on "Search the Scriptures.")

REMEMBER, before you fix your mind upon a text, to go upon your knees and ask your Master for one. If he give you one, he will speak by it to you and your flock. Oh! you know not what a blessing will always attend this child-like faith in your heavenly Father. Be much in searching the Scriptures, for, in so doing, you will find rich food for your own soul, and for the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseer. If you have only a dozen poor people, never let it be a temptation to be less earnest and fervent in your preaching. If you watch the wind, you will not sow; but keep your eye upon the Lord of the harvest, and do his work faithfully, and he will give you your hire.—Mrs. Mary Winslow. (Extracted from her life, by Octavius Winslow, D.D., p. 199—200: Being a letter to her son on ministerial work.)

FOR THE FAMILY.

PIOUS INSTRUCTION.

THE most wayward children never forget the precepts of pious parents. They may seem unmindful of them—their life may be in direct variance with them, but in their sober and thoughtful moments, in sickness, in trouble, after retiring to rest, in the wakeful hours of the night, those precepts will return. The still small voice of conscience will repeat them; a bitter experience will enforce their truth; the thoughts and eternity, which none can entirely forget, will point them out. The case of Richard Cecil affords an interesting illustration. He writes thus :—

“Where parental influence does not convert, it hampers. It hangs on the wheels of evil. I had a pious mother who dropped things in my way; I could never rid myself of them. I was a professed infidel in company rather than alone. I was wretched when by myself. These principles, maxims, and data spoiled my jollity. I went with one of my companions to see ‘The Minor’—a profane play; he could laugh heartily at Mother Cole, I could not. He saw in her the picture of all who talked about religion; I knew better. The ridicule on regeneration was high sport to him—to me it was none; it could not move my features. He knew no difference between regeneration and transubstantiation, I did. I knew there was such a thing. I was afraid and ashamed to laugh at it. Parental influence thus cleaves to a man, it harasses him, it throws itself continually in his way. My mother would talk to me and weep as she talked. I flung out of the house with an oath, but wept when I got into the street. Sympathy is the powerful engine of a mother.”

That mother lived to see him an altered man. The remembrance of her precepts and example was the means of his conversion, and he became one of England’s choicest ministers.

“No mother’s care
Shielded my infant innocence with prayer,” wrote the poet Savage in extenuation of his life’s failure. Alas, how many might trace their ruin to the same source! Parents who can give their children but little else, can impart to them pious instruction. This makes noble and successful men more frequently than riches, and it may lead them to obtain a priceless and eternal heritage for their souls.

THE SHEPHERD SAVED BY HIS DOG.

FARMER STEWART came home from the hill one evening, looking grave and vexed. A favourite dog had met with an accident, which was likely to cause its death, “He is a most valuable animal,” said the farmer; “he cost me money at first, and has saved me much more. But this is not all; he knows and loves me so well, I shall almost feel as if I had lost a friend, if poor Oscar dies.”

The children ran off to visit and comfort the invalid. When they came back to the parlour, after discussing Oscar’s merits and sufferings, the conversation took a more general turn.

“Papa,” said Jane, “why are dogs so wise? How do they come to know so much more than the pigs?”

"As to the why and the how, all we can say is, that God has so ordered it. He has made the dog a higher species of animal than poor piggy, and given him a higher degree of that wonderful faculty which we call instinct."

"When you or William speak to the collies, they really seem to understand what you say; they do exactly as you bid them."

"Yes, it is wonderful how much they can be brought to do among the sheep, which other kinds of dogs could not do nearly so well. No part of natural history seems to me more interesting than that of dogs, their different species, characters, and uses, in various parts of the world. When you are older you will enjoy reading about them."

"If they could only speak, papa, as well as understand!"

"Ah! speech is one of the gifts which God has given to man alone, among all his beautiful and wonderful creatures. How anxious we should be to make a good use of it!"

"Parrots can speak," observed Johnny.

"They can repeat words, my dear, but that is all. I hope my little Johnny will never learn his lessons like a parrot."

"I often think," said Mrs. Stewart, "how feeble and helpless a child is for long, compared with a young animal. Look at our baby and our dog of the same age; what a difference!"

"Oh, yes!" said Jane, "baby cannot even feed herself, nor go out without being carried."

"Nor will she ever be able to do many things that Hector can. She will never bound over the hills, and scent out the game, or swim across the river. But there is one thing we shall soon be able to teach baby, which no dog can ever learn."

"What is that, papa?"

"Think a little. What shall we all do together before we go to bed to-night?"

"We will pray to God. Oh yes! baby will learn to say her prayers, and to know about Jesus and heaven; and dogs can never learn that, for they have no souls!"

"You are right. The great distinction between man and all the rest of God's creatures in this world is, that he only can be taught religion. A shepherd and his dog often go to the same church, and perhaps look both equally quiet and attentive; but you know the one understands what the minister is saying, and the other does not, and cannot. Therefore the most wretched of human beings is of far more value in God's sight—and ought to be so in ours—than the finest animal."

The children were thoughtful and quiet for some minutes. Then Jane came to her father's side.

"Tell us a story about dogs, papa."

"You like a story, Jane, better than this grave way of speaking? Well they are both good in their own place. You know that dogs have often saved men's lives?"

"Oh, yes! The Newfoundland dogs save people from drowning, and the dogs of St. Bernard save people from dying in the snow."

"Very well remembered. Each of these has his own wonderful instinct given by God, and makes the right use of it; and is a useful example for us to follow, by employing for the good of our fellow-men the higher powers we have received—our speech, and reason, and knowledge of the gospel. But you are wishing for a story—not a lecture. Well, I shall tell you one that I read lately, of a shepherd being saved from a very dreadful death by the sagacity of his dog."

"Oh, that will be nice! Where was it papa?"

"It happened in the Island of Arran, perhaps about fifty years ago. A stout, active sheep-farmer left his house on a fine autumn morning, to look after his sheep on a distant hill. It was a wild, romantic walk, through a glen strewn with large pieces of granite rock, which had fallen from the mountains on either side. Ronald had his two collie dogs with him, and he suddenly noticed that they had started a fine rabbit, and were chasing it down hill. He watched them with some interest, but just as they were on the point of seizing the creature, it slipped under one of the large fallen rocks, and disappeared."

"I am glad the rabbit escaped."

"Ronald was not glad; he thought a good rabbit would have made an excellent supper. So he went up to the rock, and found that it was a large mass of granite resting on some smaller stones, and that the rabbit had gone into the crevice between them. Without much thought he lay down at full length, and thrust his arm into the hole to feel for the animal. But, oh! what was his horror, when suddenly the great rock slipped down a few inches, and fixed his arm between itself and a smaller stone."

"Oh, papa! could he not draw his arm out again?"

"He tried, but found this quite impossible. There he was, firmly fastened to the earth, in great pain from the pressure of the rock, and in a solitary wilderness, miles from any human habitation."

"But," said Mrs. Stewart, "can this be true? How could he have moved such a large rock by touching it?"

"I am assured of the truth of the story, and there is nothing impossible in the rock moving. It is well known that in mountainous regions of our own or other countries, there are sometimes found what are called 'rocking stones.' One mass of granite rock rests upon another only at a point, and is so nicely balanced that a very small effort will make it vibrate or rock, like a cradle. I believe the most remarkable of these in Britain are found in Cornwall. Some of them are thought to have been so placed by human art, but in other cases this is evidently impossible."

"Are they very large?"

"I have read of one more than sixty tons weight, and others larger. One on the Cornwall coast, was long an object of great interest to strangers, and travellers would come from a great distance to see it. Not very many years ago, the captain of a revenue cutter was so foolish and barbarous as to employ his men in moving this rock off its balance. But the indignation of the country people at finding their marvel destroyed was such, that the culprit was obliged with great labour to get it replaced again. It weighed between eighty and ninety tons, so I think the sailors must have had hard work."

"But we are forgetting poor Ronald," said Mrs. Stewart, "do you suppose that he had touched a rocking stone?"

"Not exactly, but a rock which was resting so unsteadily on the broken pieces below, and the steep side of the hill, that a very little force made it move downwards."

"Then what a dreadful situation his must have been! What did he do?"

"He fainted from pain and terror, and when he recovered his senses, felt that he might die of starvation before any human being was likely to pass such a lonely spot. His first thought was to try to cut off his arm at the shoulder, with his pocket knife, and thus release himself."

"Horrible! did he do so!"

"Mercifully he could not easily get hold of his knife, and had time to consider that even if he succeeded in accomplishing the terrible operation, he should die from loss of blood before reaching home. Then suddenly, and most providentially, it occurred to him, that his faithful dogs might be the means of his deliverance. The poor animals seemed quite to understand that he was in distress, and were whining and fawning upon him, licking his face, and snuffing all round, as if seeking how to help him. He tried to order them home, but they seemed determined not to forsake him, and even when he scolded them away they soon returned. At last he recollected that one of them had a remarkable love for his youngest boy, and was his constant playfellow. So calling the faithful animal, he told it to go and "seek Alastair," and to his inexpressible joy beheld it with a joyful bark set off at full speed."

"But, papa, the boy could not save his father, he would not be strong enough."

"No, but the dog on reaching home behaved in a strange way, leaping upon the boy, running towards the hill, and looking back with a whine, as if entreating him to follow, and repeating this again and again, till at last the whole family were alarmed, and convinced that some accident must have happened. They called together their nearest neighbours, and set off in all haste, taking with them ropes and tools. The dog led the way, evidently with great joy. They arrived at the spot where the poor sufferer lay, and with much difficulty and great caution were able to release him."

"And was he much hurt?"

"It was long before he recovered, for besides the injury to the arm, the shock to his nerves had been so great."

"How they would all love that dog ever after!"

"They would indeed, and I trust they would long feel the deepest gratitude to their gracious God, who had made the wonderful instinct of this creature the means of such a blessed deliverance."

THE REAPERS' SONG.

Ye verdant hills, ye smiling fields,
Thou earth whose breast spontaneous yields

To man a rich supply,
Echo whose mimic notes prolong
The melting strain and bear along,
O'er distant glades and caves among
The mountain shepherd's artless song,
Soft swelling to the sky—

Attend the reapers' joyful lays,
And bear the tribute of their praise
To nature's boundless King;—

Whose voice loud sounding from the pole,
In thunder oft is heard to roll,
And oft has melted down the soul,
When murmuring along it stole
The Zephyr's silken wing.

With bread the heart of man to cheer,
See, bending low, the ripened ear,
Bow its luxuriant head;
In vain, ye swains, had been your care,

Had not he caused the blight to spare
The promise of the summer fair,
And bade the sun, the rain, the air
Their gracious influence shed.

He bade the soft refreshing gale
Blow gently down the teeming vale,
Nor hurt the peeping grain;
But when the ear began to rise,
To him we raised our anxious eyes,
Oft from the cisterns of the skies
He sent in mercy rich supplies,
Early and latter rain.

And now his hand hath crowned our toil,
We joy like those that share the spoil,
The harvest home to bear;
With shouts the laughing pastures ring,
With grateful hearts, ye reapers, sing
The praise of heaven's eternal King,
Through whose paternal care ye bring
The produce of the year.

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

HOW MAY THE INTEREST OF CHRISTIAN CHURCHES IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS BE INCREASED?

A Paper read by the Rev. A. REED, B.A., of Preston, at the Lancashire Conference, held at Blackburn, on Good Friday.

THIS question, like most others, has a double aspect. It may have a querulous, complaining form, or it may be practical and advantageous; the former has been only too frequently a theme of declamation, and even the latter has been subjected to some exhaustive discussions. I would wholly deprecate the fault-finding view of this subject, and seek some of the freshest branches of that which aims at improvement.

There has been too great a proneness, first to imagine an estrangement between Christian churches and Sunday schools, and then to propose various hypothetical remedies. The merry monarch (Charles II.) desiring to give his pedantic men of science a lesson, wittily propounded to them a query obscurely stated, in order to conceal his own knowledge of its absurdity, and gravely inquired the reason why so-and-so was the fact? After laborious search for reasons possible and impossible, one of the least foolish of these learned ones quietly suggested a prior question, viz. : Was the king's supposition a fact? Thus guided, they soon discerned the cheat played on them, and have been quoted as beacons ever since; let us avail ourselves of the lesson. Before we admit what may seem implied in the terms of our proposition, a certain want of interest in the Sunday school on the part of Christian churches, let us analyze the fact, and inquire in what sense, and to what extent, it is true; otherwise we may be trying to overtake a will-o'-the-wisp, or to catch the rainbow.

Well do I remember, in the good old City of Norwich, that the Sunday School Union had become defunct, or at least dormant, as I have occasionally known it elsewhere, from want of some individual with energy and ability to keep its machinery in order. I had always a sense of its value, and set myself to revive it, summoning my honoured brother, Mr. Charles Reed, to my aid, and to a task which ever finds him ready. It was a success—all was again instinct with vital earnestness; periodical meetings of the teachers were fixed for prayer and conference, the first of these was held in our school-room. I thought I would go down and see how the first essay passed off; I stood behind the door awhile not to interrupt the business, when to my confusion I found the assembled teachers engaged in assailing the Christian churches, and particularly the ministers, for their indifference to Sunday schools. I could not help thinking of that traveller who put a half-dead snake in his bosom, which, reviving with the warmth, stung his over-trustful deliverer. I entered the room, and did my best to turn the debate to less offensive and more useful channels; but since then I have often found Sunday schools and teachers haunted by this chimera. I dare say the ghost is here in some corner, and I hardly hope to exorcise or to lay the spirit, yet will try to throw a little light into his dark hiding-places, and make him shrink away into the gloom.

What is more unlikely than indifference from the church to the Sunday school; as institutions they are not only kindred, but mutually dependent; whence did the school originate—whence are its teachers and officers recruited—whence its pecuniary support obtained, but from the pastors and members of our congregations? And whence comes the continual stream of youthful converts and workers back into the bosom of the church, but from the classes of the Sunday school? Can the family neglect its nursery? Save in exceptional instances, where perverse jealousy or rigid formality occasions a collision of interests, or a chasm of distance, this should seem impossible.

How deep the injuries inflicted on both institutions by such estrangement; the school would lose much effective support, but the church would be by far the greater loser; she would alienate from herself most of the young and zealous workers; she would lose her chief source of increase, and condemn herself to joyless sterility and barrenness; she would part with her chief instrument for aggression on the careless population around her, with the precious spring whence her new pastors, evangelists, deacons, and missionaries may be early and well nourished for future service; and she would put from her the main power she possesses in the eye of the world, that of education, and neglect the most imperative command of her all-anticipating Lord, "Feed my lambs;" she would hazard the passing forth from her communion of her heartiest, most devoted children, in order to join with other fellowships of Christians, who better appreciated their momentous work. Such indifference would be a madness little short of self-annihilation in the course of time; it never can become general. No doubt the church is formed of imperfect human materials, and is too prone to be remiss in all its most solemn duties ; but that there is any special indifference to the Sunday school beyond what is, alas, displayed too often in every other field of Christian labour we cannot believe.

When we examine also some of the proposals on which the complainants rely for a remedy for the presumed evil, we find them sometimes measuring the whole question by standards which we venture to think utterly impracticable and undesirable. We have heard it loudly contended, that the interest of the church should be shewn by a frequent visitation of the Sunday school, by those not engaged in its pursuits, who are urged thus to manifest their sympathy in its work. Now, this we have always thought would be utterly destructive of all order ; troops of gazing spectators wandering about the rooms with no obvious business, speaking to the teachers, distracting the scholars, stumbling against the superintendents, and choking the passages, would be a nuisance sufficient to ruin the efficiency of the best school. I have heard of superintendents actually locking some door of access to the class-rooms to prevent any interruption. Occasional visits from persons experienced in the work, who may borrow or suggest improvements, and from pastors and friends able suitably to address the school are very useful ; but let the school once become a promenade and a show, and farewell peace, attention, and thought. The gentle dew falls freely in a still night, but is checked in a gusty atmosphere.

It has often appeared to Sunday school teachers that a larger proportion than usual of the members of our churches should be actively engaged in the Sunday school ; in these northern districts, however, a very large part of our communicants is so engaged. It is not uncommon for deacons to be Sunday school teachers or superintendents, and the post of teacher is generally popular. Then it should be remembered that many have no gift for instructing the young, and that you might as well fill your choir with persons having neither ear nor tuneful voice, and who could only scream in horrid discord, as your school with those who have little sympathy with youthful habits and modes of thinking, having wholly forgotten the feelings of their own early life. Many also are engaged at home, or in other walks of Christian labour. No doubt there is yet a considerable residuum of those who might work, and will not ; the dead weight of a church—the care and grief of the pastor—the barren fig trees, who provoke their Lord to cut them down as cumberers of the ground. But this fact shows no want of concern for the school on the part of the church, since these cannot be roused to share in any schemes of saving effort requiring a sacrifice of ease, time, or money ; and in their present state would be of small value in any cause to which they might be dragged.

But why, it is said, does not the church establish a more definite connexion with the Sunday school, assume more control over its arrangements, in appointing officers and teachers, and regulating its general plans ? May I venture to reply, that probably were this attempted, none would find more objection to it than teachers themselves, and not without reason. Most institutions will be best managed by those who are practically concerned in their working. It is not well for societies to lean too much on each other, or they inevitably rob each other of independence and strength ; let them be individually self-controlling, and let every bond of union be consistent with a free use of individuality. Let the church attend to its own work, and the school fulfil its own mission, and let their connexion be one of general cordial sympathy, which leaves them perfect liberty. It may be well for the church to be a final court of appeal and confirmation of what is ordinarily originated and executed by the body of teachers ; for since it lends so much material support to the school, and depends so much on its welfare and success, it may well expect some report of its proceedings, and some veto upon its main transactions. When more has been attempted than this, the result has usually been discord and confusion, rather than harmony and progress.

Why should any teachers permit crude ideas like these to give birth in their minds to feelings of discontent, which are as unhappy as unjust ? Let them feel they have the warm confidence and sympathy of the great body of pastors and churches, and though these may not be always coming to witness their exertions, still less to interfere with them, since they are for the most part earnestly working in other channels for the same end, let the teachers do their own work thoroughly, and cease to insist on being made objects of special attention, commendation, or sympathy. There is no vainer and more perilous spirit than that which sometimes infects an otherwise noble heart, when exaggerating the object in which it is absorbed, it yields to a morose isolation, and permits the bitter feeling to arise—"Ah ! no one appreciates my labour, yet my exertions are the most essential and invaluable of all ; I am passed by while others are caressed ; I work while others have the credit and fruits ; I may plod on regularly, but am ever unnoticed and obscure." It is necessary to shake off this numbing, paralyzing touch ; to exercise a genial faith and forbearance towards others, and especially to labour in this cause "heartily to the Lord, and not unto men." Once the Sunday school was a small and uncomely sapling ; its kind of toil of the drudging order ; it was pushed into wretched sheds, confined or underground ; its teachers were lowly, little educated persons ; small results were expected from it by the church and the world ;—but now it is a wide spreading tree ; its abodes are spacious and handsome edifices ; it shelters a large part of the population of the land ; it has attracted most of the wisest intellects and holiest spirits in the church to its classes ; its lessons are of the sublimest themes, and its results have been such as to elicit the adoring gratitude of pastors and churches, and the profound amazement of philosophers, educators, statesmen, and of the world. The Christian church is more likely at present to be overproud of her Sunday schools, than to neglect, or to be indifferent to them. Individuals, labouring on in their narrow niche at important work, which employs multitudes of others like themselves, are seldom able to realize the combined magnitude of what is being done by their fellow-labourers, or their age. Theirs is but a little section, and in it they are conscious of hard work, many difficulties and failures, and very slow successes. Their own weakness, weariness, and despondency often assist to prevent them from comprehending the joint and growing result. But when at times a laborious and earnest teacher lifts his eyes from the small area of his class, or school, and the separate church to which it may be attached, and from the littleness, and discouragements, and imperfections of the minuter scene ; and surveys the onward march of Christianity at home and abroad, and the gigantic and invaluable potency of a Gospel training of the little ones in the classes of the church, which is, undoubtedly, the main instrument of the revival and aggressiveness of the true religion in modern times, he will surely feel that these are not days for morbid complaint and jealous separation, but for believing gratitude, and unselfish and united ministration, each to the other, in the love of Christ.

Nor would it be fair to make these remarks without also asserting that the body of Sunday school teachers are, as a whole, as little prone to the querulous and unreasonable as any Christian workers ; and that their usual attitude is that of hearty, disinterested sympathy in all other Christian efforts ; and of patient, happy, unexacting, unexpecting disinterestness and contentment.

MISCELLANIES.

A TRIP TO THE CHANNEL ISLANDS.

At half-past three, in the afternoon of Friday the 7th of August, I jumped into a cab and drove to the Waterloo station of the London and South Western Railway, where I booked to Guernsey and back, taking a monthly ticket. At five o'clock we left London for Southampton, where we arrived about half-past seven. Having a few hours to wait before sailing for the islands, I purposed calling on the Rev. J. Wright, and in his company making the acquaintance of the lions of the town. But as he was from home I was glad to be accompanied by a kind friend whom Mrs. Wright had asked to escort me. I saw the statue of Dr. Watts, and that of the late popular mayor—Mr. Andrews, who was highly esteemed by the population of Southampton, and who represented the borough in Parliament. The chapel of the Rev. T. Adkins, and our own clean and well-situated sanctuary were also shown to me. And but for the darkness setting in I should have seen other objects.

At midnight the "Southampton" steamer left the docks for Guernsey. We had on board a considerable number of respectable passengers, and when I asked the steward for a berth, he had but one left. This, however, served me for a place for my luggage; as for myself, I preferred being on deck—the heat of the cabin, and the offensive smell of spirits, &c., I found would very soon operate unpleasantly on my stomach, and the sea threatening to be a little rough, I was not in any special need of stimulants of that order. Of course sailing out at midnight, and the night being dark, I could see very little beyond the vessel and the passengers. And what made matters worse, as daylight began to dawn on us, a thick fog came on, accompanied by a drizzling rain. Indeed towards six o'clock in the morning, our captain seemed a good deal concerned about his course, and the safety of his vessel, as he could not see many yards a-head. Hence he frequently blew his steam whistle, to warn other vessels of his contiguity, and kept walking to and fro on the bridge, straining his eyes to discover if any danger was near. At last he gave the word, "Stop her;" and we were at a stand-still some little time. The mist having in some degree cleared off, however, we were shortly on our way again, and not long after we saw Guernsey to the right. The tide being favourable we steamed into the harbour and up to the pier, where we arrived about ten o'clock, being an hour or more behind time. Messrs. Grigg, Brewer, and Litley kindly met me, and they having provided me with a cup of tea at a snuggerly kept by some of our kind friends on the pier, I felt refreshed, and made my way to Mr. Grigg's residence.

I had not been sick on the voyage, though I had felt certain sensations known by the name of squeamishness; but many of my fellow passengers were worse than I. The passage from Southampton is said to be 120 miles. After resting a little I took a walk round the town of St. Peter's Port, and enjoyed the fine sea view which is commanded from the higher parts of the town.

The town of St. Peter's Port is built on the side of a hill, somewhat amphitheatrical in form, and has from the sea a very pretty and picturesque appearance. The population of the town is about 17,000—that of the whole island about 30,000. The island, like the other Channel Islands, formerly belonged to Normandy in France, being situated in the gulf of Avranches, or Baie de St. Michael, close to the French coast, and hence it, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, &c., were commonly called the Norman Isles, until lately. Now, however, the common name is the Channel Islands. Guernsey is twenty-five miles from France, Jersey fifteen, and Alderney nine. Guernsey is nine and a half long and four broad; Jersey is twelve long and six miles wide; while Alderney is but three and a half long and one and a half in breadth. Sark is nearly the size of Alderney. In ancient records Guernsey is called Sarnia and Jersey Casarea. The islands have been under the crown of England in one way or other for centuries. But still they enjoy peculiar privileges, such as exemption from some of the duties and taxes which England has to pay; and the right of self government to a large extent. There are some pretty views in the islands, the lanes and walks are very romantic and picturesque, and the bays are charming.

On Sabbath, August 9th, I preached morning and evening in our Truchot Street Chapel, to good congregations, and had help from on high. Mr. Brewer, of Alderney, preached in the afternoon. The chapel is superior to what I expected to find it; it holds 300 or 400 persons, and it is frequently well filled. The society is composed of a warm-hearted and devoted people, and Mr. Grigg appears to be well received and sustained by them.

On the Monday we held our missionary meeting, which was well attended. Dr. Collonette ably filled the chair, and the Rev. W. Wedlock, Wesleyan, the Rev. W. Brewer, of Alderney, the Rev. G. Grigg, and myself addressed the meeting.

On Tuesday a tea meeting was held in connection with the missionary anniversary—which seems to be the custom of the islands—and after the tea the meeting was addressed by several persons with good effect.

On Wednesday evening I gave a temperance lecture in the Victoria Hall, which was crowded.

On Thursday the good people drove me round the island to see the most interesting spots on it; but on account of our setting out too late, I did not see so much as I otherwise should have seen. However, I enjoyed the jaunt, and shall long remember the kindness of the dear people.

On Friday the 14th, I sailed in the steamer to Jersey, and had a beautiful passage. The distance is about twenty miles, and the day being fine, I enjoyed it much. I had the company of Captain and Mrs. Baker who were going to see their friends. Mr. and Mrs. Loxton met me at the pier at St. Helier's, and escorted me to their abode, where I was hospitably entertained during my stay in Jersey. St. Helier's is the principal town of Jersey, but is not well situated—not at all like St. Peter's, Guernsey. It is flat, and not remarkably clean or healthful. The population generally speak French, and French habits prevail largely among them. Some say that the morals of Jersey bear too close a resemblance to those of Paris. The Sabbath is not so well kept as in the other islands, and religion in general is not very flourishing. Our congregations were not large, but on the whole they were respectable, and our people have an air of intelligence and decorum.

At the meeting on Monday evening the Revs. C. H. Bateman, M. Gallienne, jun., S. Loxton and myself delivered addresses, and Jabez Smith, Esq., Wesleyan, presided.

On Tuesday the 18th, we had a missionary tea and meeting at Old Pontac, St. Clement's Bay, and there I met with some interesting friends. I should have seen more of the island on the Wednesday, but the weather kept me in town, so that of Jersey I saw less than of Guernsey. Mr. Loxton and others are working hard to get the new schools completed, and their pious toils will soon, I trust, be crowned with success. If we could station a French-speaking preacher in Jersey, I apprehend we should succeed better than at present. There is comparatively little prospect of a strong English cause being raised. The Wesleyans have a powerful French Circuit, and but a feeble English one.

I had to return to Guernsey on Thursday the 20th, and we had the roughest sea I was ever on. However we got safely over, and though the sea rolled o'er our decks, and most around me were ill, I escaped sea sickness. Mr. Grigg gave me a hearty reception again, but I was sorry to find his excellent wife very ill. Miss Chandler, too, her niece, was far from well.

On Friday, Mr. Grigg and I had a pleasant walk in the country, and for the first time in my life I saw artillery practice. About fifteen cannon were firing shot and shell on a vacant plot near the sea for some time, and I had an opportunity of seeing something like what has to be done in a field of battle. All the men in these islands have to be in the militia, and to go through drill exercise occasionally. How strongly the islands are fortified too, as if the French were daily expected to attack them! Thousands upon thousands of pounds it appears to me are wasted in such things by our government. Oh that men were wise and would learn the beautiful lessons of our holy religion!

Saturday the 22nd, I sailed in the "Queen of the Isles" for Alderney. I had the company of the Lord Bishop of Mauritius who was at Guernsey and Jersey holding meetings when I was there. J. A. Gouvaine, Esq., introduced me to his lordship as the President of the Primitive Methodist Conference, and I had a little friendly conversation with him on Madagascar, &c. He seems to be a plain, earnest, working clergyman. Would that all the bishops were like him! He was formerly rector of Alderney, of which island his mother was a native, and hence he was interested in and acquainted with the island. On reaching the harbour, Mr. Brewer met me and accompanied me to his domicile. His good wife and sister received me kindly.

On the Lord's Day I preached three times, and though the bishop was preaching at the Church, and he was well respected, and the population of the town—St. Ann's—is but some 3,000 or 4,000, I had a full chapel in the evening. Indeed the Alderney congregations, chapel, friends, &c., pleased me much. I was glad to find so earnest a people in this little isle. The Revs. P. Tourgis, G. Kevern, — Wright, and W. Brewer, assisted in the week evening services. The Temperance lecture on Wednesday evening was well attended, and I have reason to believe all the services were owned of the Lord. I was happy to meet with so much kindness among the Alderney friends, especially from Mr. Gouvaine's family. The mother of Mr. G. is a devoted mother in Israel; his excellent wife, amiable daughter and himself were very kind, and Miss Sanford who was visiting there, helped them to make my visit as agreeable as possible, by showing me all possible kindness and attention. I could not help but feel and say that heaven will be all the more delightful because of the numerous friends (whose acquaintance we have formed on earth) we shall meet there, where parting is no more. To Mr. Brewer and family I am much indebted for their attentions while I was in the Island. One thing about Alderney, however, is not very pleasant—namely, a visitor is a prisoner when there, at the mercy of Captain Scott, who only can open the way for escape. I felt as if in some Patmos, shut out from the great world, except for the limited circle of dear friends whose locale is there. And no one knows when he may be able to get away. Only about twice a week does the boat visit the Island, and its visits and departure are very irregular and uncertain. Some eight or nine times were fixed for our leaving on the 27th, and at last what is called by the inhabitants "tip" time was named. This I think I may leave my junior readers to guess out the meaning of. On the 27th, however, I left Alderney, and arrived after four hours' sailing at Guernsey again. Seeing the distance was not twenty miles, the reader will judge we had a tedious passage. The sea was very rough most of the way, but our heavenly Father took care of us. He who was on the Galilean lake was with us. On the following morning I took leave of my kind friends Mr. and Mrs. Grigg and niece, and sailed for Southampton. I enjoyed the voyage homeward, as I had daylight and a smooth sea. We saw the Casket Rocks, off Alderney, the Needles, off the Isle of Wight, Hurst Castle, the Isle of Wight, and Netley Hospital, &c., and on the whole the voyage was very pleasant. I arrived safely at home at midnight, and had a very hearty reception from my better half and family, having been from them full three weeks.

The trip I found conducive to health, and profitable in the way of affording me fuller information about the islands and our cause there, than I had previously acquired. And it is sweet to reflect that we do not labour in vain in the work of the Lord; precious seasons we often enjoy among the people, and souls are blest and saved under our ministry that will be a crown of rejoicing in the day of the Lord. And oh, how much there is to be done for this poor world yet. We need to work hard while the day lasts—the night will soon overtake us. My prayer is that all my powers may ever be consecrated to my great Master's service, and that he may deign to own my humble efforts for his glory, and for the salvation of many deathless souls.

"To serve the present age,
My calling to fulfil;
O may it all my powers engage,
To do my Master's will,"      Amen.

CONNEXIONAL INTELLIGENCE.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

TUNSTALL CIRCUIT.—Jottings of six years' superintendence, being a paper read to the officers of the Tunstall Circuit, in Committee, July 3rd, 1863.

Dear Brethren,—

Eighteen years ago I first entered your station with fear and trembling; timidly—but with faith in God—taking up the work of superintending your important circuit. At the end of three years I left you for another sphere of labour. After an interval of nine years I was stationed to you again. In this sojourn I have been with you six years, and now, according to Connexional arrangement, and, I trust, agreeably to the providence of God, I am called to bid you again farewell. I hope I can say with the apostle when he delivered his celebrated valedictory address to the Church at Ephesus, "Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men: for I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God." . . . "I have coveted no man's silver, or gold, or apparel." While looking back on the last six years, I find occasion for repentance and deep humiliation; yet, these feelings are not unmingled with jubilation and gratitude. It has pleased the great Head of the Church to bless us with a very considerable measure of prosperity, materially and spiritually.

MATERIAL DEVELOPMENTS.

Tunstall.—In our Jubilee year we took down the second connexional chapel which our fathers had built in this town, and erected the present one, which cost £2,700, exclusive of the materials of the old one, which were worth £1,000. This beautiful sanctuary, the Jubilee Chapel, is capable of seating 1,400 hearers. Including a grant made by our able and opulent school friends, not less than £1,600 have been collected in behalf of this house of prayer. Also, about six weeks ago we held a bazaar, the proceeds of which were devoted to the funds for painting and beautifying the Chapel. From this source we have more than £200 in cash now, and by the time the whole of the goods are disposed of, not less than £300 will be raised for the purpose indicated.

Talk-o'-th'-Hill.—This place was missioned by the venerable pioneers of the Connexion. Here the second chapel built by the Connexion, was erected. This building, many years ago, was appropriated to school purposes alone, and a good chapel built for the accommodation of the congregation. About five years since the old premises were taken down, and more land adjoining purchased, with a view to the building of a larger school. Our plans and specifications were got out, and estimates received, and in due time two commodious school-rooms were erected at a cost of about £600. They are filled with children, who are taught by a number of intelligent and diligent teachers.

Hanley.—Many years since a good chapel was built here, which got into difficulties, and ultimately was alienated from the Connexion. The friends, proceeding with more caution, built another, much smaller than the first. About three years ago it was found necessary to enlarge, to meet the increasing necessities of the church and congregation. The chapel has been lengthened about four yards, and a good gallery and orchestra inserted. The entire cost was £750, and, I am happy to add, the financial abilities of the trustees are stronger now than ever.

Englesea Brook.—This is an old preaching station, and additional interest gathers about it from the fact that here lies the dust of Messrs. H. and J. Bourne awaiting the resurrection at the last day. Here we have expended about £70 in improvements.

Chesterton.—Through the defalcations of a treasurer some twenty years ago, the chapel in this place became overburdened with debt, and for a long time was a thorn in the side of your circuit. The principal trustee thought that he should be under the necessity of offering the premises for sale; but, I am happy to say, this was prevented by proposing to transfer the property to new trustees for £450, and the remainder of the liabilities amounting to £150, to be paid off by beggings and donations. This was done. Every creditor was honourably met, the chapel preserved to the Connexion, and the honour of the society saved. New life, on the lifting of this incubus, was infused into the church, and its interests were put on a firmer basis. Since the accomplishment of this fact, the chapel has been enlarged and beautified at a cost of £150.

Bradley Green.—Here we have a chapel worth £700—but our friends are crying "Give us room that we may dwell." To meet the demand a slip of land 18 yards by twenty-seven, and valued at £250, has been procured. During the present summer a new chapel 15 yards by 17 will be built, and the present one converted into school premises. I augur for this Church a bright future.

Lask Edge.—This name occurs early in our history. Here we have enlarged our chapel, and made it more comfortable and convenient for Divine worship.

Talk Pits.—For many years our cause was low in this place, the society and congregation worshipping in a small cottage. In our Jubilee year we built a neat chapel and cottage here; the entire cost being £350.

Pack Moor, alias New Chapel.—We have preached in this neighbourhood for many years, but with little success till lately. Some time ago an opportunity to procure land offered itself. It was bought, and a beautiful chapel built thereon. Since our removal from the old preaching house our society has risen from six members to above thirty, a good congregation and Sabbath school have been created, with encouraging prospects.

Longton.—This town once stood at the head of a circuit, but through a series of disasters, occasioned by the misrule of certain men in authority, it was found necessary to divide its societies between the Tunstall and Ramsor Circuits. The chapel in the town was sold, and the society during many years sought shelter in rented rooms. Five years ago a second connexional chapel was built under favourable circumstances, and in two years after two good school rooms were added to the trust estate. They are all doing well.

Alsager.—About four years since we missioned this place and succeeded in forming a small society. In the spring of 1862, a suitable site of land was procured for a chapel. A good trust having been formed it was determined to erect one to correspond in quality with the respectable cottages and villas in the neighbourhood. Since the opening of this beautiful sanctuary we have formed a Sabbath school, the congregation has risen in respectability and numbers, and the society has tripled itself.

Wood Lane.—Up to March, 1862, we worshipped in this place in a chapel built by the Wesleyan Reformers. In the February immediately preceding we made proposals to buy this chapel, but failed to effect our purpose. We then resolved to build one. This, I am happy to say, has been accomplished. We have now a flourishing Sabbath school, a vigorous society, and large congregation, and prospects of great usefulness.

Harrishead.—This place stands about half-a-mile from Mow, and is famous in Primitive Methodist history, it being here where Mr. Hugh Bourne made his first convert. About three years ago we opened a mission here, and succeeded in forming a good society and a large congregation, a chapel became a necessity, and after a little difficulty one was built and is now doing well.

During the past six years we have raised about £4,000 to promote Sabbath school tuition, and the ordinary circuit revenue has increased about £200 per year.

SPIRITUAL PROGRESS.

We have largely participated in the glorious blessings of grace. Hundreds of souls have been converted to God, and the churches have been built up and established. When the writer entered your circuit six years ago he found 1,000 members, he leaves 1,829, being a clear increase of 800, after meeting all the casualties occasioned by deaths, removals, backslidings, &c.

Agencies.—Under God, we are indebted for our prosperity—

1. To the perfectly good understanding and confidence which have existed between the travelling preachers. Were it not invidious it would be a pleasure for me to insert the names of some of my colleagues in this paper. They have laboured hard and efficiently in promoting the good work, and at the same time obeyed me with all the readiness of a child. I should be happy to meet them in a similar conjunction again.

2. The union and brotherly affection which have prevailed between the ministers, the local preachers, and the leaders. That we should see alike on all subjects was not to be expected, but our differences of opinion have not materially ruffled the current of our kind feelings; and now, in parting, likely never to meet in the same relation of life again, we can say, "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, that went down to the skirts of his garments; as the dew of Hermon and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion; for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life for evermore."

3. Open air worship.—Twice in the past six years I and my colleagues have held protracted meetings in Tunstall Market-place, each time preaching in the open air twelve nights consecutively, as well as preaching most Saturday evenings in the same place during the summer months. Hundreds of the outcast and lost have by this agency heard the word of life, and many have been gathered into the fold. Not only in Tunstall, but in the circuit generally, has this Primitive method been resorted to, to reach the great unwashed multitude. I trust, dear brethren, that the Connexion, instead of relaxing in this spiritual duty will be more diligent in its observance.

4. Protracted Meetings.—Many of these, each led by one brother from the beginning to the end, have been held with great advantage. Scores of souls through these continued efforts have been brought into the church of Christ, and are now earnest Christians. Some of my colleagues have been eminently adapted for this work, and your circuit owes them a debt of gratitude for their onerous and successful labours.

5. The zealous efforts put forth by the preachers, local and travelling, the leaders, and members, in the ordinary means.

But, over and above all, we owe our success to the divine Spirit, which has so richly accompanied our efforts by his gracious blessing. PHILIP PUGH.

Signed on behalf of the Circuit Committee,

HENRY EARDLEY, President.

HENRY BINNALL, Secretary.

A REVIEW OF THREE YEARS' LABOURS IN THE RIPLEY CIRCUIT.—When Mr. Eckersley and I entered the Ripley Circuit, July, 1860, we found 324 members. In July, 1863, we reported 516. Our congregations have increased, our chapels and Sabbath schools are all improved, and we have peace and prosperity. At Portland Row, after a long and severe struggle, we have succeeded in obtaining a good preaching room, built by the Butterley Company, and let to us for a small weekly rent; we have also established a Sabbath school, and the place is doing well. Some of the other societies have more than doubled their number of members. We have had several expressions of kindness from our old friend J. Smedley, Esq., of Lea Mills, in endeavouring to improve our chapel property by cleaning, painting, &c.: he has also lent his spacious tent for school anniversaries, tea meetings, &c.,—and all free of charge. Alfreton chapel and house have been much improved, the house made a comfortable residence for the resident minister, and the society more than doubled.

Codnor has done well, the society has risen from twenty-three to seventy-two members. Here they are about to enlarge the chapel.

Greenhill Lane has been re-missioned, a small chapel rented, and we have fifteen members, and a Sabbath school.

New Brinsley has been re-missioned, and a room rented; we have twenty-two members and a Sabbath school.

Pinxton has been remissioned, and we have ten members with a prospect of more. We have raised a considerable sum of money for jubilee and missionary purposes, chapels, reducing debts, &c., met all demands at our June Quarterly Meeting, 1863, and we are leaving the station in a hopeful state for still greater prosperity. J. STEPHENSON.

GRASSINGTON STATION.—I came here according to appointment, July 18th 1862. And certainly the town is a very secluded place, amidst the fells of Yorkshire Wolds, in Wharf Dale, ten miles north of Skipton, and half-way to Pateley Bridge. But isolated as it is, the two great founders of Methodism found their way here. The Rev. John Wesley, of the last century, and the Rev. Hugh Bourne, of the present; the former giving his usual short sermon at noon, while his horses fed, and the latter coming afoot, and spending several days ministering to children and grown people, and visiting from house to house. Both left a savour of good behind them. But they are gone to their reward. Oh, for meeting them in heaven! The first Primitive Methodist minister at Grassington was the Rev. Moses Lupton, and he preached here forty years since, on a Sabbath afternoon, having walked ten miles from his morning appointment, and then ten miles to Pateley Bridge to his evening appointment, then in the Ripon Circuit. But it was Silsden Circuit that chiefly took up Wharf Dale, and succeeded in forming societies, and three chapels were herein built.

Grassington is the most important one, towards which our Silsden friends have done much. Our last chapel anniversary sermons were preached by Jonathan Gaukrodger, Esq., of Burnley, with very good effect. The money being called in, our brethren Messrs. Joshua Fletcher and George Baron have very nobly contributed towards it fifty pounds, and this sum (with fifty pounds they gave on a former occasion) makes one hundred they have cheerfully given towards this place of worship. May the Lord reward them and their families. The chapel fund too has granted thirty pounds. Mr. James Parker gave one pound, and other friends lesser sums. So that this year an outstanding debt of ninety-seven pounds has been paid off. But best of all, precious souls have been converted to God, and the society and congregations have increased.

Hebden Chapel was under a heavy difficulty on my first entrance; there was a lawyer's letter demanding the payment of one hundred and nine pounds, which put us all to trouble, and especially so as the friends said the debt was only one hundred pounds. This misunderstanding and heavy trial caused me many a weary journey. Unhappily when the nine pounds were paid off, it was not backed on the note of hand, and the property having fallen into other hands it was thought the whole sum was still owing. But the receipts were preserved, and I proved to the heirs-at-law that only one hundred pounds were owing. I then called the mission authorities together, and our Hebden friends, with their savings of some years over the payment of chapel interest and expenses, were able to meet all the cost of the removal of the money, and to lower the debt ten pounds. And Mr. Richard Ibbitson kindly lent us ninety pounds on note of hand, and a new trust was formed, which at once became responsible. The Lord remember these friends for good. Amen. Here, too, souls have been saved, and the work is moving on. We have had two anniversary sermons preached by the Revs. A. McKechnie, of Colne, and J. F. Parrish, of Hoyland Stations, which have been of great help.

The ancient small town of Kettlewell has some good prospect before it, as we have land offered to build a chapel on. We have this year formed a Sabbath school, and the society has here held two camp-meetings, and several lovefeasts with very good effect. Brother Clarke and others from Horse House rendered us good help. Our missionary anniversary was most efficiently supported by our very valuable deputation, the Rev. Thomas Smith, of Pateley Bridge Circuit. Brothers Farr and Harker assisted us two nights. Though in the depth of winter the services were good and very productive, exceeding in money matters any former years. But what is better, good was done, and the prospect brightens. Our increases in everything are above twenty per cent. There is also a prospect of enlarging our borders.

Yesterday having an opportunity I went up the Fells several miles, and visited a number of families, and preached in a fresh place; I believe not in vain. But I begin to feel after thirty-four years' itinerancy I cannot do much more than ordinary labour—as eight or ten sermons a week, fifty or sixty regular family visits, catechising the children when I have an opportunity, besides holding prayer-meetings and class-meetings whenever I can. But my work is my delight. And to see the Connection's progress gives me joy of heart, and increases my consolation. I spent several days in the Conference, and felt melted down at the sight of old friends, thankfully glad at above 5,000 increase for the year; I assisted with comfort to hold two public meetings in the Leeds Third Circuit. But how solemn, 2,000 of our members died last year, and amongst them several eminent ministers have gone to their reward. I was glad to see the business so very efficiently conducted. O for meeting in heaven at last is the sincere prayer of THOMAS RUSSELL.

LISKEARD MISSION.—Knowing that every improvement in the cause of our gracious Lord and Master is always interesting to the readers of our valuable magazines, we beg leave to lay before them the following account of what has been done this year in this mission relative to the lowering of our chapel debts.

We have here three connexional chapels; and during the past year the debt of each has been considerably reduced.

1. Henwood Chapel was built in 1856, at a cost of £185. The trustees and friends have exerted themselves with commendable zeal and diligence, and with the aid of a donation of £2 from Mr. Hicks, of Lostwithiel, have paid off £20, which sum reduces the debt to £100. This chapel is well attended, and good is being done. Also the Sabbath-school is in a very prosperous state.

2. St. Ann's Chapel, built in 1860, at a cost of £130 9s. 1d., has become too strait, and the cry is, "Give us room." The trustees are about to ask the General Missionary Committee's and the Building Committee's sanction to enlarge (which is much needed here). The Sabbath-school is doing well, and the debt is reduced £5.

3. Landrake Chapel was built in 1860, at a cost of £178 7s. 6d., and a constant overflowing congregation attends this house of prayer; and the best of all, several souls have, during the past year, been converted to God within its hallowed walls. The anniversary sermons on behalf of this chapel were preached on Sunday, June 21st, 1863, by the writer; on Monday, 22nd, a well attended tea meeting was held (provisions given), and the collections and donations amounted to the noble sum of £13, which has enabled the trustees to reduce the debt £20. We have also a Sabbath school, which is progressing very favourably.

I may just say that we have been greatly aided in our Sabbath schools by the very liberal grant of fifty Bibles and thirty Testaments from the British and Foreign Bible Society. Many thanks to the gentlemen forming the committee of that heaven-born institution; and may God bless the work of their hands. Amen.

J. STARR.

SAFFRON WALDEN CIRCUIT.—Some account of the work of God in the village of Langley, Essex.—Previously to the Primitive Methodists missioning Langley almost the whole of the inhabitants thereof were living in total ignorance of saving religion, and the greater portion of them were basely wicked, and as wild as heathens. About twelve years since, Edward Wheeler and William Howlett and others went from Nuthampstead, and held prayer-meetings there, which were followed by preaching in the open air by brother Samuel Cole, local preacher, of Clavering, whose powerful and plain preaching and praying were made a great blessing to many souls. The place was then put on the station's plan, a house was obtained, and regular religious services were established. Many conversions have taken place, and now we have a society of forty-one members, six of whom are local preachers, and the moral condition of the inhabitants of the village is greatly improved.

In September, 1860, Woodham Death, Esq., of Langley Hall, was applied to by the writer of this account for a piece of land on which to build a chapel; at the same time he wrote him a concise history of our Connexion, with its statistics, and an account of its chapel-building department. The Connexion's amazing progress and prosperity (of which he had but very little knowledge previously) so affected and astonished that gentleman, that he responded by letter, requesting the writer to meet him at Langley on a certain day, to have a personal interview with him, saying he would give us a piece of land. We met on the day appointed, at Langley, and the kind gentleman, generously measured and gave us ten rods of good freehold land from one of his meadows, and he also gave us a donation of ten shillings, and one of his daughters £1.

On the 7th of April, 1862, the foundation stone for the new chapel was laid by Mrs. Irwin, and a sermon was preached by her excellent husband, the Rev. J. H. Irwin, Independent minister, of Great Chishill. On Sunday, May 24, (1862), the chapel was opened by Messrs. J. Moore, of Saffron Walden, J. Adams, of Melbourn, and G. Barker, of Newport; on Sunday, June 1st, by Messrs. Henderson and J. Bird, of Sawston; and on Sunday, June 8th, by Messrs. E. Masterman and C. Norman; and on Sunday, November 2nd, the said chapel was reopened by Mr. S. J. Wallis.

The chapel is most pleasantly and eligibly situated, and is a most substantial and beautiful little edifice, built after the Norman style, with red, white, and blue bricks and stone, and is an ornament to the village. It is 24 feet long by 20 feet wide, and 17 feet from the threshold to the ceiling, and is in every part properly ventilated. It has a platform across the chapel 1 foot 4 inches above the chapel floor, instead of the old fashioned pulpit. The floor of the chapel is of good batten, and inclines from the platform to the front door 5 inches to every 10 feet. It has six double-hung sash windows, and a beautiful coloured glass one over the front door. The entire cost of the chapel, including lawyers' bills and all other expenses, was £135 16s., towards which £49 16s. have been raised, leaving a debt of £86 on the premises. It pays its way well. The chapel is connexional property, and its deeds are duly enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, and it is also insured and registered. The congregations are good—the chapel will accommodate about a hundred and twenty with seats, eighty in pews, which are all let. To God be all the glory! J. MOORE.

SAFFRON WALDEN CIRCUIT.—Some account of the work of God and the progress and prosperity of Primitive Methodism in the village of Chishill, Essex.—Chishill is situated about eight miles north-west of the town of Saffron Walden, and contains about 600 inhabitants. It had no place of religious worship in it, except the church, until the Primitive Methodists missioned it, about twenty-two or twenty-three years ago. Brothers John Adams and Joseph Bird (the two oldest local preachers on this circuit) were among the first who went to preach the gospel in Chishill, and they were soon followed by the Revs. James Jackson, B. Redhead, W. Chapman, R. Eaglen, E. Rust, &c., who found the morally destitute state and wickedness of the people to be most appalling. They began first to preach the gospel to the people in the open air, at length a cottage was opened, a number of souls were saved and a society formed. The cottage soon became too small to accommodate the people that crowded to hear the Word of life. About twenty-one years since an old building was taken on rent and fitted up to serve as a chapel and school room. The soul-saving work continued, and hundreds of souls in that village, since that time, have accepted salvation. A Sabbath school was established and has continued to this day. And although about 150 of our members have left our Chishill society and emigrated to Australia, there still remains a noble society of sixty members, four of whom are useful local preachers. The said old building, with its dirt floor, &c., was always damp and uncomfortable, and moreover very much too small to contain the congregation which regularly attended the place anxious to hear the truth preached. An impression was deeply felt that in order to continued and enlarged success, a chapel should be erected of sufficient dimensions to accommodate the congregation with room, and to enable the society to teach the children the Word of God. The quarterly board of December, 1861, resolved that a site of land should be obtained, if possible, without further delay, and at the same time it specially appointed Mr. Moore to see after the matter, who, upon learning that several parcels of land were to be sold by public auction at Chrishall, attended the sale on January 13th, 1862, and purchased a most suitable site of about 14 rods in a central part of the village for £14 10s. On April 21st, 1862, the Rev. Joseph Perkins, Independent minister, of Duxford, preached an excellent sermon in one of Mrs. Ellis's barns. We then sang in procession to the ground, when the Rev. J. H. Irwin, Independent minister of Chishill, delivered a stirring and very appropriate address, after which the foundation-stone for our new chapel was laid by Mr. R. Hill, jun., of Ickleton; and then about 150 took tea in the barn. After tea, addresses were delivered by the above gentlemen, J. Moore and E. Masterman. The amount raised at the different services, including £4 11s. profits of the tea, was £12 11s. The new chapel was opened on Sunday, June 29th, 1862, by a sermon in the morning by the Rev. J. Moore, and in the afternoon and evening by the Rev. R. Eaglen, of Ely. The congregation was so large in the afternoon that Mr. Eaglen was obliged to preach in the open air. On Monday evening a tea meeting was held. On July 6th the services were continued by the Rev. E. W. Matthews, of Baldock, and the Rev. J. H. Irwin; also a sermon was preached on the Monday evening by Mr. Matthews. On July 13th the Rev. T. Bennett, of Lancaster, Mr. C. Henderson, of Sawston, and Mrs. Bennett, officiated. The amount raised at the opening services was £12 12s. October 19th, the chapel was re-opened by the Rev. S. J. Wallis, who preached three sermons, and a tea meeting was held in the chapel on the Monday evening and £3 8s. 11d. was realized. This chapel is indeed an elegant, most substantial, and commodious structure, and is greatly admired by all who see it. Its size is 33 feet long by 23 feet wide, and is 17 feet high from the floor to the ceiling. It is pewed and formed to accommodate 190 persons comfortably with seats. It has a rostrum 1 foot 6 inches above the chapel floor, 3 feet wide. The backs of the pews recline three inches. The floor of the chapel is of good inch battens, and inclines from the platform to the front door. All the sittings were let at the opening of the chapel, and paid for at the time, and so great was the call for more sittings that we have been obliged to have four more pews erected, and still there is a call for more sittings. The entire cost of the chapel, including land, deeds, and every other expense, was £210 18s. 7d., towards which £91 2s. 3d. was raised in that short time, by collections, donations, &c., leaving only £120 debt on the premises, so that it is in easy circumstances, as the seat rents alone amount to £13 per year. All the fault that is found with the chapel is that it is not large enough, it is regularly crowded. The premises are properly settled on the Connexion, duly registered, insured, and the deed is enrolled in the High Court of Chancery. Sinners have already been converted to God in the chapel, and there is a Sabbath-school taught in it. O may thousands be saved within its sacred walls. JOHN MOORE.

THE LAYING OF A FOUNDATION-STONE AT THETFORD.—Less than four years ago our old chapel was enlarged, but still, it is not sufficient now for accommodating the congregations and Sabbath-school. Hence, after deliberation and prayer, we sought and secured a most eligible site to build upon, a public meeting was called, and a number of ten shilling shares were at once taken up, and the way seemed sufficiently open to warrant us in commencing operations. Accordingly, on Monday, May 4th, the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone took place in the presence of several hundreds of spectators. Mr. Joshua Finch laid the first stone—Miss Finch a second—and Mr. G. Doubleday (all of Hockham) a third—each of whom laid down £5—beside a number of other friends who laid on the stone sums varying from a sovereign to a sixpence. The Rev. W. Yeadon delivered a very appropriate address on the occasion; after which a public tea was provided in the British School-room for about 200 persons. This was followed by a public meeting held in the Wesleyan Chapel (kindly lent for the occasion) addressed by the Delegates who were assembled at the District Meeting. The amount realized on the occasion, including donations and collections, was about £45. The building was contracted for by a practical gentleman in the town; and is being built with red bricks mixed with white ashlers and Bath stone, which give it a beautiful appearance; it will be the most conspicuous building in the town. And we hope, dear Editor, that many a happy spirit when safely inclosed within the jasper walls, will have to confess that within the walls of this building its heaven was on earth begun.—J. ALLISON.

YORTON HEATH CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY, HADNALL STATION.—The fourth anniversary of this chapel took place on the 10th of May, 1863, on which occasion three excellent sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Peacefull, of Coventry, and Mr. Taylor, of Wem. On the following day about 100 persons sat down to an excellent tea; after which a public meeting was held. Mr. W. Smith presided, and addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. R. Taylor, J. Heath, W. Peacefull, and Messrs. T. Gregory, and T. Manning—the latter gave an account of the chapel from its commencement. The proceeds of the present anniversary, not only enabled the trustees to pay off the whole of the debt, but would leave a trifle in hand towards painting the chapel. These statements were warmly applauded.

We may remark, that this object has not been accomplished without a struggle; but our friends felt determined to make themselves equal to it; they divided the debt into four parts, and as each anniversary arrived, during the past four years, its proportionate part of the debt was cancelled. No wonder that they felt sanguine with reference to the present anniversary. They intended to have their sanctuary free, and they have accomplished their object. May other friends, who are concerned with chapel building, be encouraged to go and do likewise.

Also of late the Lord has graciously poured out his Spirit upon the neighbourhood, a number of persons have sought and found pardon; so that during the last six months the Society has nearly doubled its number of members. To God be all the praise. J. HEATH.

LEIGHTON, FROME CIRCUIT.—FOUNDATION LAYING.—Leighton is a small hamlet about six miles from Frome. Several years ago the Baptist friends had a small cause in the place which struggled amidst much opposition, until the little chapel, which was erected on lifehold property, fell in hand, and then they had to give up the services. Our friends and the Wesleysans occasionally preached in the open air, but no hold was taken of the place, and for many years spiritual darkness and barrenness reigned in it. In the early part of 1862, the Lord poured out his Spirit on Wanstrow, and many souls were saved. Some from Leighton were induced to attend the services at Wanstrow, and were awakened. Soon they requested that service should be held in the hamlet, and Brother S. Whiting, one of our zealous local preachers, attended and preached the word of life to them, and a number were converted and formed themselves into a society. The quarterly meeting put the place on the plan, and appointed them preachers every Sabbath, and once a fortnight on the week evenings.

The house in which the services were conducted being too small, and very cold in the winter, efforts were made to obtain a piece of land on which to erect a Connexional chapel. As nearly all the land in and around the place belongs to the vicar of Mells, a Puseyite and an enemy of dissent, little hopes were entertained that we should succeed. However, one of Mr. Isaac Giles' sons having been converted, and his father having united with us in Church fellowship, our superintendent preacher went to Bath to see Mr. Giles' landlord—a pious churchman—to solicit a piece of land for the purpose. Mr. Little, the landlord, very cordially agreed to lease us a piece for ninety-nine years. As soon as it was known that there was a probability of there being a chapel in the place, the vicar of the parish visited the families, and endeavoured by threats and promises to turn them against the Society, and then published a pamphlet against us, and earnestly exhorted "his flock" not to hear men unordained by a "Bishop of the Church." The vicar of Mells wrote four letters to Mr. Little of Bath, to persuade him to take the land away from us, but he did not succeed. On May 11th, arrangements had been made to lay the foundation-stone of the chapel. The friends assembled, but such was the state of the weather that it was impossible to proceed with the ceremony. We met again on the 15th, and the ceremony of laying the stone was performed by Mr. Shore, (Wesleyan) assisted by Brother Whiting. Mr. Shore stood on the stone, and delivered a short address, protesting against all attempts to rob Englishmen of their birth-right, liberty to worship God when and where they please, without molestation or hindrance. A document was then read by the superintendent of the circuit, stating the particulars of the establishment of the cause in the place, the number of members in the society, the names of the trustees, circuit preachers, the contractor's name, and the amount of the contract, together with the date on which the stone was laid—which document was placed in a cavity of the stone. A sermon was then preached by Mr. Powell, and a liberal collection made. A tea-meeting was afterwards held in a shed adjoining, at which about seventy sat down. A public meeting was held after the tea, at which a good sum was promised towards the undertaking. E. POWELL.

GREENHEAD, HALTWINSTLE CIRCUIT.—CHAPEL OPENING.—Greenhead is a beautiful little hamlet, situate within a short distance of the old Roman wall, and not more than a mile and a half from Magna (the modern Carroran), the Roman station of the Cohors Prima Dalmatorum, and which station enclosed an area of about four acres and a half. In the garden of the neighbouring farm house are some interesting memorials of the Roman occupation of this country; amongst which are broken capitals and fragments of columns, moulded coping stones, and also a finely inscribed altar.

Our principal object, however, is not to write about Roman remains or Roman altars, but about a new Christian temple which, by the blessing of God, we have been enabled to erect at Greenhead. For many years our people have had preaching there, in a school-room belonging to Messrs. Wilson's and Crowhall's colliery, but the colliery having been worked out, and the school-room having fallen into the hands of J. B. Coulson, Esq., we were deprived of its further use. This, however, turned out to our advantage, as it led to a desire for a chapel, and to efforts to obtain one. In the beginning of the present year we obtained a piece of land in a very eligible situation, from the United Order of Mechanics' Friendly Society, for the sum of £9; and the foundation stone was laid by the Rev. Jas. A. Bastow, with a silver trowel, and a mallet and square, which were kindly lent for the occasion by E. Ridley, Esq., who, but for unavoidable circumstances, would have been present, and have laid it. He, however, generously aided us by sending a donation of £2 2s.

The chapel, being completely finished, was opened for divine service on the afternoon of May 9th, by the Rev. Jas. A. Bastow, who preached a very interesting and useful sermon; after which was held a tea and public meeting. Sermons were also preached on May 10th and May 17th. The whole of the services were of a highly interesting character, and the collections good.

The chapel is a neat building in the Gothic style. It has a platform, which is 2 feet from the floor, 8 feet in length, and 3 feet wide. The railing in front has a neatly made panel in the centre under the book board, and the rest is wood bannisters, lined with red marine; the whole being capped with a hard wood French polished rail. The platform and pews are stained and varnished, and the door is painted oak; the whole is inclosed in the front with iron palisades. The chapel is 28 feet by 20½ inside, and will very comfortably seat 150 persons, of which seats fifty-six are in pews. The total cost, including land and everything, is about £138 10s., and we have collected from all sources, about £76; we are borrowing £60 on note, and hope soon to beg the remainder. Considering the fact that we had to pay £2 10s. per year for the rent of a small and damp cottage to preach in, our circumstances are considerably improved.

R. W. WIDDOWSON.

RED HILL MISSION.—CHAPEL SERVICES.—The anniversary sermons of the Horley Chapel were preached on Sunday, May 24th; the congregations were good, and a gracious influence accompanied the preaching of the Word of life. On the following day a tea meeting was held, when about 100 persons partook of an excellent tea, which was gratuitously supplied by a few of our female friends. A public meeting was afterwards held, and addresses delivered by the Revs. J. C. Cook, W. Clayton, and others; the proceeds of this anniversary amounted to £8 9s. Joseph Goddard, Esq., presided over the meeting, and when referring to the debt of £160, which still remains to be paid, he promised that if the trustees succeed in raising £50 before the next anniversary, he will add £10 thereto, which will leave a debt of £100, towards the liquidation of which he will give £5 annually, on condition a similar sum be raised each year by the trustees until the debt be entirely removed.

J. TAYLOR.

SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY, PENZANCE.—This was held on May 24th and 26th, 1863. Three sermons were preached on the Sabbath, in the morning by the Rev. C. T. Harris, in the afternoon by the Rev. J. Wiltshire; and at six o'clock in the evening by the Rev. J. Hawkins. On Tuesday, the children had tea; after tea, a public meeting was held, and addresses were delivered by several gentlemen. The meeting was ably presided over by Mr. R. M. Thomas, and an excellent report was read by Mr. W. Bosence, the secretary. The collection amounted to £18 18s. 5½d., being in advance of last year.

C. T. HARRIS.

DONCASTER SABBATH SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—On Lord's day, May 24th, 1863, three sermons were preached by the Rev. T. Kendall, to large congregations. After each sermon, several excellent recitations were given by the scholars, which took well; the people appeared highly delighted with them.

On Monday the preachers, teachers, scholars, and friends walked through the streets, stopping at intervals to sing suitable hymns. At four o'clock about 400 scholars partook of tea, and at five o'clock more than 200 adults sat down. At seven a public meeting was held. The collections, tea, and donations realised about £47, being a little in advance of last year. The school is in a prosperous state. There are on the books 438 scholars, and 62 teachers. To God be all the glory.

COLEFORD, FROME CIRCUIT.—FOUNDATION LAYING.—Our friends have conducted service in this place for more than thirty years. During the early part of that period they were very much inconvenienced by the want of a suitable place to worship in. Eventually they rented an old Presbyterian chapel that had been erected during the reign of Charles II., when the Five Mile, or Conventicle Act, was in force. But this they had great difficulties in supporting, and they had once to relinquish it. About eleven years ago they succeeded in purchasing the chapel, with two cottages and a large garden. In this dilapidated place they have conducted their services ever since. When I came to this circuit, in July, 1861, I found the friends willing to make an effort to raise a new chapel, and a meeting was called, and promises received towards the undertaking. But, owing to circumstances, over which we had no control, the final arrangements for commencing the erection were not made till the early part of this summer. We first of all formed a new trust, then took down the cottages and chapel, and then left the erection of a chapel and schoolroom to Mr. Ashman. On the 25th of May the ceremony of laying the foundation stone was performed by Mr. J. Lewis, of Downhead, one of our old and tried friends. The friends assembled on the ground at three o'clock, p.m. After the stone had been properly fixed, Mr. Powell read a document, in which were stated the particulars relating to the erection of the old chapel, the names of the trustees, circuit preachers, contractor, and the amount of the contract, which document was enclosed in a glass bottle and deposited in a cavity in the foundation stone. The Rev. A. R. Beswetherick, of Bath, then stood on the stone and preached an excellent sermon. A tea meeting was held afterwards in the Temperance Hall, and a public meeting followed the tea meeting, and nearly seventy pounds were promised and paid.

ARDFORTON, LEINTWARDINE BRANCH.—FOUNDATION SERVICE.—Whit-Monday was a very joyous day with the inhabitants of this village, on account of the laying of the foundation stone of a Primitive Methodist Chapel. The society here has long felt the need of a suitable place in which to worship God, but never more so than of late, as during the last year the number of members has increased to as many more as what they were twelve months ago; but the greatest difficulty which appeared in the way was getting land, as nearly all the land in the neighbourhood belonged to Lady Langdale and although she was willing to give us a plot of ground, yet she had not the power of securing it to us after her death.

But it pleased God to convert a person who was in affluent circumstances, and he became much concerned about a chapel. In a short time afterwards there was some property offered for sale, and he purchased it in order that there might be a Connexion Chapel built in the neighbourhood. Having secured it, he gave us a very excellent site, and the foundation stone was laid on the day above named. The service was commenced by the writer giving out a hymn, then prayer having been offered up by several persons, Miss Farmer, of the Down, and Miss Taylor, of Whitton, laid the stone in a very efficient manner, in the name of the Holy Trinity. Another hymn was sung, after which Mrs. Saveker, of Eardsley, delivered a very impressive sermon. Many eyes were flooded with tears, many hearts swelled big with emotion, while praise ascended in sweet harmony to the Giver of all good.

At the close a collection was made, and a donation of £5 from T. Nott, Esq., and £5 from Miss Farmer, made it a handsome sum. Prayer having been offered up, the friends adjourned to a spacious tent, where about 200 persons partook of an excellent tea, which was provided by the ladies. The tables having been moved, J. Nott, Esq., was voted to the chair, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. M. Beaven, R. Prince, Mrs. Saveker, and the writer. The meeting was of an interesting character.

With the profits of the tea meeting, we expect the proceeds of the day will be upwards of £30; besides this we have £25 promised, and Lady Langdale has kindly given us the stone on which to build the chapel. The Great Head of the Church is with us, and has prospered our endeavours beyond our most sanguine expectations.

BATTYFORD, HUDDERSFIELD CIRCUIT.—FOUNDATION STONE LAYING.—The foundation stone of a new chapel and school was laid on Whit Tuesday, at Battyford, in the Huddersfield Circuit. The weather was everything that could be desired, and seemed to smile most graciously upon the project. Our highly esteemed friend, H. J. McCulloch, Esq., of York, laid the stone and in his observations on the ground, and when presiding over the meeting in the evening, gave utterance to sentiments which were full of vigour, and which were heartily echoed by the people. The Revs. J. Simpson (Halifax); T. Newell (Leeds); J. Cameron (Independent); H. S. Albrecht (Baptist); R. Brook, T. Dearlove, the Huddersfield choir, the "Ladies and Gentlemen," indeed, all who came together on the occasion, seemed to vie with each other in contributing to the sum of happiness and success, and as a necessary consequence, each of them took away his respective share of good. The writer has authority to say that the whole of the friends who helped us, are hereby heartily thanked, but, especially our friend H. J. McCulloch, Esq., whose gift of £25 10s. brought up the proceeds of the day to the noble sum of £58. T. DEARLOVE.

MEXBOROUGH, DOXCASTER STATION.—May 31st, 1863, two sermons were preached at Mexborough by the writer, in behalf of the Sabbath-school, to large congregations. Collections were made, which amounted to £3 1s. 6d. T. KENDALL.

SELBY BRANCH SCHOOL ANNIVERSARIES:—Selby.—May 24th, by the Rev. D. Ingham; sum realized this year, £22 14s. 7½d., being about £14 more than was obtained last year. The number of scholars more than doubled.

Riccall.—May 31st, by the Rev. W. White; sum realized this year £8 8s.; last year £5 10s.

Cliffa.—May 31st, by the Rev. H. Harris, of Bradford; sum realized this year £8 18s.; last year about £5.

JAMES R. PARKINSON.

NEWMARKET CIRCUIT.—Dear Editor,—I am requested by the Quarterly Meeting held June 15th, 1863, to inform you and your readers that the revival is still going on in this station. Since the March Quarterly Meeting, we have taken out an additional travelling preacher. We send all the missionary money to the General Missionary Treasurer, pay all demands, have a balance of £10 in hand, and report an increase of sixty members for the quarter.

J. SYMONDS.

BATTON CHAPEL, COVENTRY CIRCUIT.—Having obtained the approval of the quarter day board, and the sanction of the Building Committee, we purchased a suitable plot of land, obtained a deed, and settled it on the Connexion. Everything being prepared, the foundation-stone was laid on the 4th of May, by J. Darlington, Esq., who with the Rev. H. Heys and W. Peacefull delivered suitable addresses; afterwards a tea-meeting was held, when the sum of £13 2s. was realised. The opening services commenced on the 18th of June, when the Rev. W. Antliff, of London, officiated, and we realized a sum of nearly £5.

On the 28th of June, the Rev. J. Prosser, of Wrockwardine Wood, preached two sermons. The collections on this day and on the Monday following produced a sum of £13. The amount collected in various ways is £61. The cost of enlargement is from £120 to £130, so that we have already got half the outlay. We desire to express our thanks to Mr. Darlington for his services and subscription of £2; to the Exhall colliery for the donation of £10, and to our kind friends for their exertions and liberality. We hope that the glory of the new house will exceed that of the old one.

W. PEACEFULL.

WATTON, BRANDON CIRCUIT.—CHAPEL OPENING.—It is now over thirty years since our missionaries entered this town, and commenced their labours, as they were wont to do, in the open air. At that time the morals of the people generally were painfully low. Fierce and brutal persecution against the people of God was the order of the day. Other non-conforming sections of the Church had failed to establish an interest, and earth and hell, men and devils, high and low, united to oppose and expel the new comers from their coasts. The Rev. R. Key, especially while preaching on the Market-hill, was subjected to base and cruel treatment, being shamefully handled by the baser sort at the instigation of those whose education and position in life should have led them to pursue a far different course. But the man of God, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, was rendered more than equal for the enterprise in which he was engaged. His labours in those days were abundant, and astonishingly honoured of God. His mighty faith, powerful prayers, and apostolic sermons shook the country, and thousands were pricked in their hearts, and turned from darkness to light by him and his contemporaries. In Watton, the good seed of the incorruptible word of God took root and sprang up. A cause was established, a small chapel built, and both have remained as monuments of the success of former times. For years the old sanctuary has often been inconveniently crowded, and unequal to the demands of those wishful to worship with us. This has especially been the case latterly, —hence the desirability of a more suitable place of worship; but as freehold land was difficult to obtain in eligible situations, the matter was of necessity deferred till last July, when unexpectedly a freehold estate was offered for sale, and which we ventured to secure incognito. Many considered this a heavy undertaking, and ventured to predict a failure on our part. But we had faith in God and the sympathy of the Christian public. The result is, there stands in the centre of the town a neat and commodious chapel, built of white bricks. It is 30 feet wide by 40 feet six inches long, and 18 feet from the floor to the ceiling, and well lighted by 10 well-proportioned windows, four in front and three on each side, with a fan light over the door. The interior is fitted up with benches, stained and varnished, with a neat grained rostrum. Altogether it is an ornament to the town, and we trust it will be the birthplace of thousands of souls.

The opening services commenced on Sunday, June 21st, 1863. At half-past ten in the morning the chapel was crammed to excess, near 500 persons having found admission. The Rev. R. Key preached an excellent discourse. In the afternoon the Rev. W. Kirby preached in the chapel, and the Rev. C. Hirst, aided by the writer, in the Town Hall, and in the evening the Rev. R. Key preached in the latter, and the Rev. C. Hirst in the former; both places were densely crowded, and many were unable to obtain admission. The faithful ministration of gospel truth through the day produced marked and visible effects, and resulted in very liberal collections. To aid the building fund a bazaar had been held on the 16th inst.; this was re-opened on the 22nd; on the afternoon of the same day the Rev. R. Key preached again to a full chapel. At five, about 230 sat down to a very sumptuous tea in the hall, gratuitously provided by the friends. A public meeting followed, presided over by W. H. Meadows, and thrilling speeches were delivered by B. Hardy, Esq., the Revs. J. Dinsley (Free Churches), C. Hirst, H. Cope, and R. Key. On Sunday, June 28th, three eloquent and impressive sermons were preached by the Rev. Thomas Lowe, of East Dereham, to crowded congregations. He preached again on the following afternoon; a numerous attended tea meeting followed in the hall, and then a second public meeting, presided over by the Rev. W. Kirby, who, after a short address, called on the writer to give a report of the building fund, which was received with loud and hearty applause. The large assembly was then ably and affecting addressed by the Revs. H. Cope (Independent), T. Lowe, B. Hardy, Esq., and J. H. Tillett, Esq., of Norwich. The entire cost of the chapel, which is connexional, is about £500, towards which we have already raised by bazaar, collections, &c., £183, and other sums are expected. Also, near £20 are promised for the first anniversary, when we hope to reduce the debt £50. Such is the result of the voluntary principle as exhibited by an earnest, laborious and willing people. We intend making the old chapel into a cottage.

THE MUSKOKA MISSION, CANADA.—Dear Secretary,—I write to inform you that in obedience to the instructions sent through you, from the last Missionary Committee meeting, our dear brother, the Rev. R. Pattison, has left the Kingston District, and without loss of time, and by the shortest route has started for the Muskoka Mission.

He arrived at this place on Wednesday last, by boat, from the East, and after making a few preparations departed on Thursday afternoon for his destination. His purpose was to go by Reach and Brock to Beverton, thence on the Lake shore road to Muskoka. He went on horseback, intending to thoroughly traverse that, and parts of the adjoining townships of Draper and Macaulay, to see the settlements, visit the people, preach as often as he can, and thus find out the best openings.

After the lapse of a month or two he thinks of coming out to the front for a few days, in order to get up his boxes, and to obtain all the help and advice that is possible. He would accept it as a great favour if all who have friends, and all who know of any of our people in those parts, would send their information at once to the Mission Office in Toronto. As soon as he knows what post office will be most convenient to his work, he will write you, as well as the Journal, so that all who wish may write to him direct.

Our brother has gone on a great, but arduous work,—he feels it deeply, very deeply,—but he has gone in the name of the Lord to do his Master's work. He has gone a stranger into a strange land, where none of our ministers, nay, where few ministers have gone, and he does most earnestly desire an interest in the prayers of the Lord's people. How good it will be, if in all our churches and meetings special prayer be offered for him during the next four or five weeks. We should, indeed, all pray for him, bear him up before the Lord, and as sure as the Lord liveth his way shall open, and through him good, great good, shall come unto those outlying regions of our common country. I remain, in haste, dear Secretary, yours truly in Christ Jesus,

J. NATTRESS.

M'GILIVARY MISSION, CANADA.—Dear Editors,—Probably many of your readers may desire to have a little information in reference to the state and prospects of the M'Gilivary Mission. As many are aware, affliction, trial, and bereavement, together with the open winter, and the lack of sleighing consequent upon it, prevented us, in a great measure, from putting forth those special efforts, which, in this country, seem to be so essential in order to secure revivals of religion. But, notwithstanding this, the year was not altogether barren, as several conversions took place in Stephen, several on the sixteenth Con. of M'Gillivray, and two at Bethel, near the flooded land. Also, we saw, frequently, indications of the work of the Holy Spirit in connection with the preaching of the Word in other places. So that we have not laboured in vain, nor spent our strength for nought and in vain. Moreover, we built one chapel in Stephen, and completed another on the fourth Con. of M'Gillivray, which had stood sometime in an unfinished state, and made preparations for the erection of an excellent frame church at Barber's, one of the oldest appointments. This church is nearly finished now, and in a few weeks will be dedicated to the worship of God. When it is painted, as we expect it will be, this will be a beautiful sanctuary, and will reflect great credit on the liberality of the friends in the neighbourhood. Brothers Lintott and Peters, besides subscribing liberally, have worked, and teamed, and toiled in the most praiseworthy manner, in order to push forward the building to a successful issue. And, indeed, it could not have gone up but for their exertions.

We have recently held a protracted meeting at Bethel, near the flooded land, at which nearly twenty persons professed to seek the salvation of their souls. Some of them, however, strove to enter in at the strait gate, and were not able, because they would not give up their old companions and associations. Others, blessed be God! laid hold of Christ, and realized the joys of salvation.

As the last Conference stationed another missionary on this ground, we are endeavouring to enlarge our coasts. We have taken four new places on our plan this quarter, in order to mission them—the village of Carlisle, the village of Ireland, one place in London township, and another place in M'Gillivray; and we have received an invitation to a place in the township of Hay. We hope the great Head of the Church will open before us a door of usefulness, great and effectual, in those places. The harvest is near, and for a little while we shall not be able to hold any special services, but we hope God will graciously vouchsafe his Holy Spirit in the ordinary means of grace.

We have held already four field-meetings this summer, and contemplate holding two more. The attendance and influence have been good, and at least sixteen souls have been contributed to our funds.

Our congregations at most of the places are pretty good, and we hope to be able to report progress from time to time.

Brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you. Yours,

JAMES CLARK.

HOBART TOWN, TASMANIA. — CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY.—We celebrated our second anniversary of Collin's-street chapel, on April 19th and three following days.

On Sabbath, April 19th, the Rev. J. Foggon, of Longford, preached two excellent and impressive sermons.

On Monday and Tuesday we held a bazaar in the Alliance Assembly Rooms, for the sale of useful and fancy articles of various kinds, furnished by the ladies of the congregation, under the indefatigable superintendence of Mrs. Burdon, our excellent mission steward's lady. Great praise is due to all who assisted in getting up the bazaar, the proceeds of which were more than satisfactory.

On Wednesday, the 22nd, the services in connexion with this most interesting and encouraging anniversary were brought to a close by a public meeting in the chapel, under the able chairmanship of our old friend H. Hopkins, Esq., J. P. A statement was read by the secretary (Mr. G. Hiddlestone), after which addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. Foggon and E. C. Pritchard. Our excellent choir rendered us good service on this occasion as well as on the Sabbath.

During the past quarter we have re-shingled the chapel, put up a new and substantial fence in front, and put the chapel into thorough repair, so that it will not need anything doing at it (unless some accident occur) except it be a little paint, varnish, or colouring, for twenty years to come.

Our outgo during the past year, inclusive of interest on mortgage, insurance, gas, re-shingling, fence, &c., has been about £120, which has been paid; besides this we have paid £100 off the mortgage. This sum, £220, has not been raised in a gold country, but in the midst of commercial depression. The secret of our success lies in the members' love to God and their closets. During the last two months God has been pouring out his Spirit, and not a week has passed but souls have been saved, and twenty members have been added to the church. The work is still going on, and I feel certain that, by the blessing of heaven, this year will be one of great prosperity.

We are determined (D.V.) to pay off £100 more of the mortgage at the next anniversary, and, by this means, we shall

the whole of the inhabitants thereof were living in total ignorance of saving religion, and the greater portion of them were basely wicked, and as wild as heathens. About twelve years since, Edward Wheeler and William Howlett and others went from Nuthampstead, and held prayer-meetings there, which were followed by preaching in the open air by brother Samuel Cole, local preacher, of Clavering, whose powerful and plain preaching and praying were made a great blessing to many souls. The place was then put on the station's plan, a house was obtained, and regular religious services were established. Many conversions have taken place, and now we have a society of forty-one members, six of whom are local preachers, and the moral condition of the inhabitants of the village is greatly improved.

In September, 1860, Woodham Death, Esq., of Langley Hall, was applied to by the writer of this account for a piece of land on which to build a chapel; at the same time he wrote him a concise history of our Connexion, with its statistics, and an account of its chapel-building department. The Connexion's amazing progress and prosperity (of which he had but very little knowledge previously) so affected and astonished that gentleman, that he responded by letter, requesting the writer to meet him at Langley on a certain day, to have a personal interview with him, saying he would give us a piece of land. We met on the day appointed, at Langley, and the kind gentleman generously measured and gave us ten rods of good freehold land from one of his meadows, and he also gave us a donation of ten shillings, and one of his daughters £1.

On the 7th of April, 1862, the foundation stone for the new chapel was laid by Mrs. Irwin, and a sermon was preached by her excellent husband, the Rev. J. H. Irwin, Independent minister, of Great Chishill. On Sunday, May 24, (1862), the chapel was opened by Messrs. J. Moore, of Saffron Walden, J. Adams, of Melbourn, and G. Barker, of Newport; on Sunday, June 1st, by Messrs. Henderson and J. Bird, of Sawston; and on Sunday, June 8th, by Messrs. E. Masterman and C. Norman; and on Sunday, November 2nd, the said chapel was reopened by Mr. S. J. Wallis.

The chapel is most pleasantly and eligibly situated, and is a most substantial and beautiful little edifice, built after the Norman style, with red, white, and blue bricks and stone, and is an ornament to the village. It is 24 feet long by 20 feet wide, and 17 feet from the threshold to the ceiling, and is in every part properly ventilated. It has a platform across the chapel 1 foot 4 inches above the chapel floor, instead of the old fashioned pulpit. The floor of the chapel is of good battens, and inclines from the platform to the front door 5 inches to every 10 feet. It has six double-hung sash windows, and a beautiful coloured-glass one over the front door. The entire cost of the chapel, including lawyers' bills and all other expenses, was £135 10s., towards which £49 16s. have been raised, leaving a debt of £86 on the premises. It pays its way well. The chapel is connexional property, and its deeds are duly enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, and it is also insured and registered. The congregations are good—the chapel will accommodate about a hundred and twenty with seats, eighty in pews, which are all let. To God be all the glory! J. MOORE.

SAFFRON WALDEN CIRCUIT.—Some account of the work of God and the progress and prosperity of Primitive Methodism in the village of Chrishall, Essex.—Chrishall is situated about eight miles north-west of the town of Saffron Walden, and contains about 600 inhabitants. It had no place of religious worship in it, except the church, until the Primitive Methodists missioned it, about twenty-two or twenty-three years ago. Brothers John Adams and Joseph Bird (the two oldest local preachers on this circuit) were among the first who went to preach the gospel in Chrishall, and they were soon followed by the Revs. James Jackson, B. Redhead, W. Chapman, R. Eaglen, E. Rust, &c., who found the morally destitute state and wickedness of the people to be most appalling. They began first to preach the gospel to the people in the open air, at length a cottage was opened, a number of souls were saved and a society formed. The cottage soon became too small to accommodate the people that crowded to hear the Word of life. About twenty-one years since an old building was taken on rent and fitted up to serve as a chapel and school room. The soul-saving work continued, and hundreds of souls in that village, since that time, have accepted salvation. A Sabbath school was established and has continued to this day. And although about 150 of our members have left our Chrishall society and emigrated to Australia, there still remains a noble society of sixty members, four of whom are useful local preachers. The said old building, with its dirt floor, &c., was always damp and uncomfortable, and moreover very much too small to contain the congregation which regularly attended the place anxious to hear the truth preached. An impression was deeply felt that in order to continued and enlarged success, a chapel should be erected of sufficient dimensions to accommodate the congregation with room, and to enable the society to teach the children the Word of God. The quarterly board of December, 1861, resolved that a site of land should be obtained, if possible, without further delay, and at the same time it specially appointed Mr. Moore to see after the matter, who, upon learning that several parcels of land were to be sold by public auction at Chishall, attended the sale on January 13th, 1862, and purchased a most suitable site of about 14 rods in a central part of the village for £14 10s. On April 21st, 1862, the Rev. Joseph Perkins, Independent minister, of Duxford, preached an excellent sermon in one of Mrs. Ellis's barns. We then sang in procession to the ground, when the Rev. J. H. Irwin, Independent minister of Chishill, delivered a stirring and very appropriate address, after which the foundation-stone for our new chapel was laid by Mr. R. Hill, jun., of Ickleton; and then about 150 took tea in the barn. After tea, addresses were delivered by the above gentlemen, J. Moore and E. Masterman. The amount raised at the different services, including £4 11s. profits of the tea, was £12 11s. The new chapel was opened on Sunday, June 29th, 1862, by a sermon in the morning by the Rev. J. Moore, and in the afternoon and evening by the Rev. R. Eaglen, of Ely. The congregation was so large in the afternoon that Mr. Eaglen was obliged to preach in the open air. On Monday evening a tea meeting was held. On July 6th the services were continued by the Rev. E. W. Matthews, of Baldock, and the Rev. J. H. Irwin; also a sermon was preached on the Monday evening by Mr. Matthews. On July 13th the Rev. T. Bennett, of Lancaster, Mr. C. Henderson, of Sawston, and Mrs. Bennett, officiated. The amount raised at the opening services was £12 12s. October 19th, the chapel was re-opened by the Rev. S. J. Wallis, who preached three sermons, and a tea meeting was held in the chapel on the Monday evening and £3 8s. 11d. was realized. This chapel is indeed an elegant, most substantial, and commodious structure, and is greatly admired by all who see it. Its size is 33 feet long by 23 feet wide, and is 17 feet high from the floor to the ceiling. It is pewed and formed to accommodate 190 persons comfortably with seats. It has a rostrum 1 foot 6 inches above the chapel floor, 3 feet wide. The backs of the pews recline three inches. The floor of the chapel is of good inch battens, and inclines from the platform to the front door. All the sittings were let at the opening of the chapel, and paid for at the time, and so great was the call for more sittings that we have been obliged to have four more pews erected, and still there is a call for more sittings. The entire cost of the chapel, including land, deeds, and every other expense, was £210 18s. 7d., towards which £91 2s. 3d. was raised in that short time, by collections, donations, &c., leaving only £120 debt on the premises, so that it is in easy circumstances, as the seat rents alone amount to £13 per year. All the fault that is found with the chapel is that it is not large enough, it is regularly crowded. The premises are properly settled on the Connexion, duly registered, insured, and the deed is enrolled in the High Court of Chancery. Sinners have already been converted to God in the chapel, and there is a Sabbath school taught in it. O may thousands be saved within its sacred walls. JOHN MOORE.

THE LAYING OF A FOUNDATION-STONE AT THETFORD.—Less than four years ago our old chapel was enlarged, but still, it is not sufficient now for accommodating the congregations and Sabbath-school. Hence, after deliberation and prayer, we sought and secured a most eligible site to build upon, a public meeting was called, and a number of ten shilling shares were at once taken up, and the way seemed sufficiently open to warrant us in commencing operations. Accordingly, on Monday, May 4th, the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone took place in the presence of several hundreds of spectators. Mr. Joshua Finch laid the first stone—Miss Finch a second—and Mr. G. Doubleday (all of Hockham) a third—each of whom laid down £5—beside a number of other friends who laid on the stone sums varying from a sovereign to a sixpence. The Rev. W. Yeadon delivered a very appropriate address on the occasion; after which a public tea was provided in the British School-room for about 200 persons. This was followed by a public meeting held in the Wesleyan Chapel (kindly lent for the occasion) addressed by the Delegates who were assembled at the District Meeting. The amount realized on the occasion, including donations and collections, was about £45. The building was contracted for by a practical gentleman in the town; and is being built with red bricks mixed with white ashlers and Bath stone, which give it a beautiful appearance; it will be the most conspicuous building in the town. And we hope, dear Editor, that many a happy spirit when safely inclosed within the Jasper walls, will have to confess that within the walls of this building its heaven was on earth begun.—J. ALLISON.

YORKTON HEATH CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY. HADNALL STATION.—The fourth anniversary of this chapel took place on the 10th have a good chapel and school, excellently situated, in six years free of debt.

E. C. PAITCHARD.

GOULBURN MISSION, NEW SOUTH WALES.—CHAPEL OPENING.—The services in connection with the opening of a new Primitive Methodist Chapel, Jarrawa, were celebrated on the 24th of May, 1863, when two sermons were preached by the Rev. James Causland, to large and deeply attentive congregations. On the following day a tea was gratuitously provided by our female friends. After the tables were removed a public meeting was convened, presided over by J. Waters, and appropriate addresses were delivered by the Revs. J. Causland, and W. Kingdon, and Mr. Roope. The entire cost of the building is £242, towards which we have raised by subscriptions, opening services, &c., £124. We hereby beg to tender our thanks to J. Bush, Esq., for the land, and his generous donation of £20; and to all who have assisted in the erection of this house of prayer. I am happy to state that, notwithstanding the opposition with which this cause has been assailed, it is in a united, working, and prosperous condition. Praise the Lord!

W. KINGDON.

NORTH ADELAIDE CIRCUIT, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.—CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY.—The fifth anniversary of our chapel at North Adelaide was celebrated on Sunday and Monday, May 31st and June 1st, 1863. Three sermons were preached on the Sabbath by the Revs. J. Watsford (Wesleyan), J. Rock (Bible Christian), and J. Read. The chapel was well filled three times, and the collections were £6 7s. On the Monday nearly 200 sat down to tea, which was followed by a public meeting, presided over by S. Bakewell, Esq. Addresses were given by the Revs. J. Warner, J. Rock, G. Stonehouse (Baptist), and J. Read. It was a meeting that will be long remembered. We raised about £22. This is very good, considering we have services in aid of the chapel every six months. May the chapel soon be free from debt, and filled with souls saved by saving grace.

JAMES READ.

A PUBLIC TEA MEETING was recently held in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Benalla, Victoria. After tea, a public meeting was held, which was presided over by Mr. James Cook, who in his opening remarks stated that the object of the meeting was to clear off the debt remaining on the chapel. The report was then read, which showed that the entire cost of the chapel was £200; and that there was still a debt remaining of £17 17s. The proceeds of the tea-meeting would be about half that sum; a subscription was then raised to make up the amount, and in a few minutes, to the gratification of all present, the chapel was proclaimed free from debt. Addresses were then delivered by Mr. R. Taylor, of Campbellfield, and the Rev. W. H. Walton, who is about leaving the colony, having been stationed by the Conference for Paramatta, New South Wales. The rev. gentleman in his short address stated that on account of his being the first stationed minister in Benalla mission his labours had been very arduous, but he thanked God he had not laboured in vain. The chapel in which they were then assembled had been erected, and he was happy to say it was now free from debt. Nine other places had been missioned, eight of which had previously no religious services. The number of church members had increased to more than double, and the station from the very first had been self-supporting. While he deplored that more good had not been done, still he would "thank God and take courage," for what had been accomplished.

W. H. WALTON.

LITERARY NOTICES.

A Commentary on the Old and New Testaments, in which the Sacred Text is illustrated with copious notes, Theological, Historical, and Critical; with Improvements and Reflections at the end of each chapter. By the Rev. JOSEPH STURCLIFFE, A.M.; Author of a Grammar of the English Language, and one of the translators of Saurin's sermons. Stereotype Edition. London: John Mason, 66, Paternoster Row.

This is a cheap edition of a valuable work; it sells at 12s. 6d., and contains upwards of 700 pages of letter press in imperial 8vo. The two volume edition sells at 25s., and may by some be preferred to this, as being both more portable and more handsome. To our taste, however, this edition is quite as good, inasmuch as we have the whole work before us at once, without the inconvenience of changing the volume when we want to go from one portion to another. It hardly needs to be told our readers that, being the work of a Methodist divine, we have herein sound doctrine, and plain, pointed, and pungent application. There is not the critical learning of Clarke, the ample disertation of Henry, the modern side lights of Barnes, the rich fulness of theology of Benson, the original thought and eloquent utterance of Watson, nor even the compendious terseness of Wesley, but there are many very perspicuous exegetical notes and sound practical reflections. The entire text is not printed, but only those portions on which the notes are given, and this, of course, saves bulk and expense, while it is not felt as a great inconvenience to the student. The work, on the whole, is well suited to the requirements of our itinerant and local preachers, and has our cordial recommendation.

Short Sermons on Important Subjects.

By the Rev. JONATHAN EDMONDSON, M.A. In two volumes. Seventh Edition. With an introductory essay, by THOMAS JACKSON. London: published by John Mason, City Road, sold at 66, Paternoster Row, 1862.

THE sermons contained in these volumes count one hundred and forty, and they treat on almost every subject of doctrine, practice, and experience, to which sermon literature can be devoted. They are alike adapted for the family and the closet, and are distinguished by great plainness, piety, faithfulness and suggestiveness. It is now many years since first we saw them, and we have ever since held them in repute. Mr. E. was a man of sound learning, earnest piety, and extensive usefulness; and all his works are remarkable for similar traits. If the preaching of this generation were more of the Edmondson order, we opine both saints and sinners would be all the better for it. The present edition is prefaced by a useful essay by the venerable Thomas Jackson, and sells at the low price of six shillings.

The Providence of God, viewed in the light of Holy Scripture. By THOMAS JACKSON. London: John Mason, 66, Paternoster-row.

THIS volume was noticed by our predecessor some fourteen or fifteen months ago, and as we concur in the favourable opinion he expressed, we need not now repeat it. The work is a sound and able discussion of one of the most important themes which can engross the attention or interest the feelings of a rational being. And among all the valuable contributions to our literature which the industrious pen of Mr. Jackson has supplied, we doubt whether any one of them is more worthy of his abilities, his standing, and his aims than the present. The work is the result of extensive research, varied and protracted experience and observation, deep thought, and earnest piety. We wish for it among our readers a wide circulation.

A Charge delivered to fifty-seven newly-ordained Ministers, in Brunswick Chapel, Sheffield, on Wednesday, August 5th, 1863. Published at the request of the Wesleyan Conference. By the Rev. CHARLES PREST, ex-President of the Conference. London: Mason.

MR. PREST has well done in complying so promptly with the request of the Conference to give his "charge" publicity through the press. It would have been a pity for the oral delivery of such a "charge" to have been the end of it. It discusses, with great plainness of speech, the most solemn and weighty matters pertaining to the ministerial character and office, and suggests valuable thoughts and reflections, which are at present especially opportune. The necessity of personal holiness, of a divine call to the ministry, of sound views of the authority of Scripture, and of earnest preaching and continuous effort for the salvation of men, on the part of Methodist preachers, are strongly and powerfully urged. In all sections of the Methodist community, and especially by all ministers of the Gospel, this "charge" may be pondered to advantage.

The Pulpit Assistant, containing about 300 Outlines or skeletons of Sermons, chiefly extracted from various authors. By the Rev. THOMAS HANNAM. Sixth edition—in four volumes. Vols. I. and II., revised, &c., by the Rev. A. WESTON. London: W. Tegg.

THE editor and publisher have rendered no contemptible service to the preachers of the present day by re-publishing the work before us. Thirty years ago Hannam's work was in great repute, and we wonder it has been so much overlooked of late. Perhaps it wanted some little revision, and a superior "getting up" to what it previously presented. In the present edition these advantages have been secured. It will, no doubt, now command considerable attention; and if the succeeding volumes shall be equal in all respects to the present, we augur for the entire work a good share of public patronage. The outlines are eminently suggestive—not exhaustive; and local preachers, and itinerants as well, may find their account in devoting to them some share of their attention. Of course, such works should not supersede, they should rather stimulate thought; and if prudently used, they may often do good and seldom harm.

THIS work supplies a desideratum. Lives of Dr. Clarke abound, but nothing of this kind. The voluminous work by the Doctor's family, the volume by Mr. Hare, the portraiture by Mr. Everett, and the singular piece called a life, by Jones, besides the recent masterly production of Dr. Etheridge, all left room for the present neat volume by Mr. Dunn. It is portable, and therefore has the advantage over the family life and Mr. Everett's work; it is cheap, and hence has the advantage over all the former lives; it is simple and pitthy, and hence is adapted to a larger circle of readers than most of them. The arrangement is new, the portraits and illustrations are good, and a good share of original matter is introduced, which will give a relish to the work beyond what otherwise would have been experienced. We anticipate for the volume a good share of public patronage, and thank Mr. Dunn for providing us and our readers so good a life of so great a man.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. M. MORRIS was born at Hillwickit, parish of Erccall, Wrockwardine Wood circuit, in the year 1803, and died at Great Grimsby, August 21st, 1862. Though favoured with parents strictly moral, she remained Christless till the year 1824 or 5, when under the word preached by Mr. R. Poulter she was awakened to a sense of danger. She earnestly sought salvation, and found it through faith in Christ. She at once associated with our people. She was one of the first members at Howle, and continued with our people there till our marriage. Soon after her conversion she was put on the plan as a public speaker; her zeal was intense, her preaching useful and generally acceptable. This labour she continued till failing health constrained her to give it up.

In April, 1847, we were united in marriage. I found her a great help to me, especially in the hour of trouble and difficulty. The last time she was at class was February, 1862, when she was so ill that she had to be helped home. Her affliction was severe and protracted. It was the dropsy; and for four long months she had to sit in her chair. Her burden was truly heavy. Sometimes she was afraid patience would not have its perfect work, but the Lord helped her. Her burden was somewhat diminished by a number of kind friends, who week after week evidenced their Christian sympathy in every possible way.

During her affliction her experience was not so bright as she desired; yet at times the Lord was very precious, and at family prayer the Lord often visited us in a wonderful manner. She often sang, and wished others to sing.

"Begone, vain world, thou hast no charms for me;" And,

"Jesus, lover of my soul," &c.;

Also,

"There will be no more sorrow there." I found her a help-mate to me in the ministry; she had a number of excellent traits, conspicuous among which was her liberality of disposition. She was always ready to help, according to our means, every needy cause and person. We gave a liberal donation to the Jubilee fund, and when I informed her that it was to continue open for another year for the reception of donations, she was pleased, and remarked, "We must try and do a little more."

Her labour is at an end; her works follow. I could ill part with one so valuable, but though left, left to finish my journey alone, I bow in submissive faith, knowing the end of the journey is not remote, when we shall be re-united without sorrow in Christ's presence, which may he grant. Amen. E. MORRIS.

HARRIET HAMBLETT died in the St. Helen's Circuit, in the fifty-third year of her natural, and fourteenth of her spiritual life. She was born at Hunslet, near Leeds, and was early trained to habits of morality by a pious mother, but she did not surrender her heart to Christ, and therefore remained a stranger to saving grace until she was thirty-nine years of age, when, as she used to say, she was providentially led to a Primitive Methodist chapel, where she heard the word of life preached by the late Rev. G. Welbourne; the message came with power to her heart, and as a hammer, broke the rock in pieces. Relinquishing every false hope, she sought mercy in Christ alone, and was soon made happy by faith in the atonement. Removing from the place where she found the pearl of great price, to the town of St. Helen's, where she did not immediately meet with the people of her choice, she found herself among strangers, and surrounded by strange influences; she neglected, as too many do, under similar circumstances, to join herself to the Lord's people, and although she did not run into open sin, yet the fine gold of her religion became dim, and she unhappy. One Sabbath, as our people were holding an open-air service, she heard the singing, and was attracted to the place, and heard the word with gladness, gave her heart afresh to God, and her hand to his people, and thence forward she remained a steady member of our society to the end of her life.

The complaint which terminated her mortal career was cancer in the breast, the surgical operation proving fatal. But she reposed a blessed faith and trust in her Lord, which was signally operative; for while in the hands of the doctors, and suffering the most intense pain, she evinced such a holy dignity of spirit, that the principal medical gentleman remarked, that hers was a singular instance of the power of faith in Christ. She lingered a few days after the operation, gradually sinking, and as she neared the Jordan, she said,—

"I now am stepping on the shore,
All is well;
My struggles here will soon be o'er
All is well;
My soul is free from every fear,
My hope is full, my title's clear,
And best of all, my Lord is here;
All is well!"

Half-an-hour before her departure, she said, "I shall soon pass over Jordan." After this, speech failed her; but waving her hand in token of victory, she sank sweetly into the arms of the Saviour. I visited her on the last day of her pilgrimage, and while reading God's word, conversing and praying with her, in a large room in the Liverpool Infirmary, where many others, terribly afflicted, lay (of various persuasions), the room was filled with the Divine presence, and most present felt the force of the inspired sayings, "It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to the house of feasting;" and "the day of a good man's death is better than the day of his birth." Her husband, who is a member of our society, as an act of gratitude for Divine mercy and goodness to his late good wife, has given £30 in aid of the funds of the St. Helen's and Park Road Chapels in this station. May he, with all who knew Sister Hamblett, meet her in heaven. J. MOULD.

ANNE, the late wife of the Rev. JAMES GARNER, of Oldham, was the daughter of Ralph and Mary Bower, of New Mills, Derbyshire. She was born December 8th, 1808. At an early age she was sent to a boarding school at Marple-bridge. From there she was removed to a school kept by the Rev. Mr. Marsh and his daughter, at Charlesworth; thence to Miss Stewart's, of Manchester, where she finished her education, when about eighteen years of age. Shortly after this she obtained the blessing of salvation while engaged at family prayer. When young she attended chiefly the services of the Church of England, for which she ever cherished feelings of profound respect, and to many of the episcopal ministers who visited her father's house, she was strongly attached. She nevertheless frequently attended the Wesleyan and Independent chapels, and assisted the late Mr. Steele in establishing a Nonconformist Sabbath school. Her religion did not consist in any kind of sectarianism, but in solid enlightened piety. She was ever ready to unite with, and assist any evangelical section of the Christian church, who laboured to effect the moral and religious improvement of society. When the Primitive Methodists visited New Mills, though they were much despised, she frequently attended their ministry, afterwards their prayer and band meetings, and ultimately united in class in the year 1833 or 1834. This step subjected her to considerable trials, as it was disapproved of by many of her relations and intimate friends; but her heart and purpose were fixed; she enjoyed their means of grace and gained spiritual strength thereby. Such was her conduct that she was almost universally regarded as a young woman of very superior moral and religious, as well as intellectual attainments. Her marriage to Mr. Garner excited great surprise amongst her friends, who strongly advised her otherwise, but this step was not taken by her hastily, but discreetly, with much hesitation and prayerful consideration. None but he who now most severely laments his great loss knew the anxiety which she felt on this subject, and how desirous she was, above all things, whatever might be the consequence with regard to family matters, to please God and be divinely guided. She was married on the 25th of August, 1835, when she removed with her husband to the city of Chester, where he was then stationed. In her married state she was an ornament to domestic life, clean, neat, frugal, and modest. Her mind was richly replenished with general knowledge and useful information, and her conversation was agreeable and edifying; her disposition was cheerful and hopeful; her ideas of moral character were clear and refined; her religious experience and moral attainments were of a high order. In private and in public, in word and in deed, she was a Christian. She was a devoted wife, helping her husband and carefully studying his interest and welfare; a loving mother, an affectionate sister, and a faithful and true friend. The high regard in which she was held by those who knew her, may, in some measure, be estimated by the very numerous testimonies to her high Christian character, which have been received since her departure.

"They loved her best who knew her most."

About four years ago, while residing in Liverpool, she had a severe and painful affliction, when she met with much kindness and sympathy from her numerous friends, who were ever ready to assist her. When the time arrived for parting she felt it most keenly, and frequently, as long as she lived, she spoke of her Liverpool friends in the most affectionate terms, and many times with tearful eyes. About last Christmas she began to be very ill, and continued so at times during the winter. She tried various kinds of medical treatment, but all failed to effect any permanent relief. It is a great consolation to reflect that her mind during her heavy and painful afflictions was calm and peaceful, her faith in God never seemed to stagger or waver; her confidence in Christ, as her Saviour, was firm, and her hope of heaven bright and clear. A short time previous to her death she said to her sister, "My earthly pilgrimage is drawing to close; I have felt it a great trial to leave my daughter, but now the great struggle is over, I am assured and confident that God will bless and take care of her." A few days before she died she remarked, "What a great blessing that my mind has been so wonderfully supported under my pains." Just before she departed, her husband asked her if she felt comfortable in her mind? She replied, "O yes; I am resting where I have been resting for a long time, on the merits of Christ my Saviour—

"Tis all my hope, and all my plea,
For me the Saviour died."

She then fell into a heavy slumber, but the sleep was not natural. It was merely a cessation from acute pain. The violent struggle was over, and all was calm. At 3 o'clock in the morning the doctor came again, and looking at her whispered to the sorrowing ones around her bed, "I fear there is no hope of her rallying again." She mildly said, "'Tis all right, 'tis all right." After we had read a portion of God's word, and a prayer had been offered up, that if it was the last time we should, as an unbroken family, worship at the family altar, we might meet where partings are unknown, being asked whether she had heard what was read, with the most cheerful emotions she said, "O yes! O yes!" She then clasped affectionately the hands of her husband and daughter, while her eyes grew strangely radiant, and she looked beyond the pearly gates into the celestial city, and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus, July 30th, 1863, and was laid, in accordance with her own desire, in one of the old family vaults, in Mellor churchyard, August 3rd. Thus lived and died one of the excellent of the earth.

"May we meet in the land of the blest."

JAMES GARNER.

Died in the Lord, at Greenhill Farm, Camden Circuit, New South Wales, SUSANNAH WILSON, wife of Mr. W. Wilson, in the fifty-second year of her age. She was born in England in 1811, and came to this colony seventeen years ago. Her husband and four children were all brought to God under the ministry of the Primitive Methodists. Her experience was clear and satisfactory. Her deportment as a Christian was regular and consistent, and of her it might be truly said she adorned her profession. Subsequently to her conversion, her dwelling (which was in the Bush) was thrown open for public worship, and at the close of the services her hands were ever ready to minister to the temporal need of the preacher and other friends. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her. On Wednesday, July 9th, 1862, about three o'clock, a.m., she was seized with paralysis. The power of articulation ceased, and, apparently, all consciousness. Thus she continued until Tuesday, the 15th, at seven o'clock, a.m., when she fell asleep in Jesus. Her mortal remains were followed by a large number of Christian friends to the house appointed for all living, there to await the resurrection of the just.

This sudden removal from the Church militant to the Church triumphant is keenly felt by a large circle of endeared friends, but most acutely by her bereaved and sorrowing husband and family. May they all meet in the mansions of glory.

MONTHLY SUMMARY.

THE Canadian Christian Journal contains the painful intelligence that Miss Elizabeth York, daughter of Mr. Hiram York, of Richmond township, Napanee station, was cruelly murdered on Sabbath evening, June 28th, by a young man of the name of Fralick, who had made proposals of marriage to her that she would not accept. Both she and her friends were connected with our people, and this awful tragedy has cast an air of melancholy over the entire neighbourhood. Our brethren in Canada desired us to notice the circumstance for the information of friends at home. We are happy to find that a new mission has been recently undertaken by our Canadian Missionary Committee, of which particulars may be learnt in our Colonial Intelligence. During the summer many special services have been held in the Canadian stations, and much good has been done.—The clergy of the Southern States of America have lately issued a manifesto on the present rebellion and its connection with slavery, in which they boldly avow their belief that slavery is a providential institution, and they quote Scripture in its favour. They do not seem to cite, "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." It is a pity they forgot this text. Many of the periodicals of England have published as an advertisement their shocking paper, and a good deal of complaint has been made against them for so doing. The conviction gains ground that slavery is doomed, and that the fearful conflict now raging will accelerate its downfall, however that conflict itself may end.—Uneasiness is felt in Europe and America too about the recent proceedings of the French in Mexico; but it is to be hoped peace will not be sacrificed on this altar.—A good deal of agitation prevails at our antipodes about the doings of certain parties who have been kidnapping the natives of several islands in the South Seas, and clandestinely conveying them to Peru. A large public meeting was held at Sydney on the 18th of June to protest against this iniquity, and to call upon our Government to interfere. Probably we shall soon hear more on the subject.—War seems to be likely to devastate New Zealand afresh. The natives have again taken up arms against our forces, and the work of slaughter we fear is raging.—In Madagascar things are looking as well as could be expected. The Queen is said to be doing her best to maintain order, and to preserve the lives and liberties of her Christian subjects and the missionaries. Certain reports of levity and inincerity on the part of the late king are in circulation, but we cannot say how far they are credible.—A correspondence has been published in the "Christian Work" Magazine, which took place recently between Sir F. Bruce, H. M.'s Plenipotentiary in China, and Earl Russell, as to the non-success of Protestant missions in that country. In that correspondence it is announced by the plenipotentiary and endorsed by Earl Russell, that those missions have been a failure. But Mr. Matheson, by whom the subject is brought under the notice of the readers of "Christian Work," shows the fallaciousness of this opinion.

The subject is interesting as showing the ignorance of men in high office as to the nature and success of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.—The Rev. W. C. Milne, of China, son of Dr. Milne, who aided Dr. Morrison in opening a Chinese mission, has been called to his rest. Dr. Raffles, of Liverpool, too, has lately closed his eyes in death, and amid general lamentations has been gathered to his fathers. Sir Culling Eardley, a warm-hearted Christian philanthropist, has likewise passed away. The Evangelical Alliance, the London Missionary Society, and many other bodies will feel his loss.—All the Methodist Conferences have now been held, and we are in a position to take notes of their last year's progress. The Wesleyans report an increase of 4,448; the New Connexion of 328; the United Methodist Free Churches of 2,794; which leave our increase (alas!) the largest of any, viz., 5,396. These increases can hardly be deemed satisfactory by the well-wishers of the cause of the Redeemer. May all the sections of the Methodist family enjoy larger success this year than the last!—The Wesleyans are about celebrating the Jubilee of their Missionary Society, which was founded in October, 1813, on the occasion of Dr. Coke's going to open a mission in the East Indies. The Conference contemplates raising funds for a new missionary college, and for enlarging the present institution at Didsbury and Richmond, so as to provide for educating a larger number of ministerial candidates than is at present practicable. The New Connexion College at Sheffield is making progress; and a warm correspondence has lately taken place on the subject of amalgamating the Methodist New Connexion, the United Methodist Free Churches, and possibly some other Methodist bodies. Our friends, generally, seem to be of opinion that the Primitive Methodists are the best by themselves. We rather incline to that view ourselves.—We have recently been somewhat, but not very much, surprised to hear that the celebrated Joseph Barker has wheeled round again to a profession of Christianity. We expected this; and we hope he will this time be "stedfast, immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." He publicly expresses his shame and sorrow on account of his past waywardness and unbelief, and we would hope he is truly penitent, and decidedly in earnest. If so, there is for even him forgiveness and peace. And he will, no doubt, labour to uphold the faith he has been seeking to destroy. May both he and all such like come to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus. Even so, Amen.

THE VOICE OF NATURE.

O NATURE, we would hearken oft to thee,
 Thy teachings are responsive, pure, and free :
 Each note of thy mysterious harmony
 Whispers of God, heaven, and eternity.
 Thou Ocean, that dost speak in tones sublime
 Of wisdom Infinite and power Divine,
 Dwelleth there not in thy deep coral caves
 A mystic influence, to calm the waves
 Of sorrow, that o'erflow the human heart,
 Bidding the sunlight of pure joy depart ?
 The answer cometh not in accents mild ;
 Dreary and desolate those billows wild
 Roll ceaselessly, with melancholy moan,
 That echoes only power to spirits lone.
 Away o'er distant hills a roseate light
 Tinges the fleecy clouds with hues too bright
 For faint description ; those celestial beams
 Of golden day's decline, are transient gleams
 Of fadeless beauty and serene delight,
 In realms undimmed by sable shades of night.
 Ye flow'rets blossoming o'er hill and dale,
 Decking with loveliness earth's shadowy vale,
 Do ye not whisper of a purer clime ?
 A brighter home beyond the clouds of time ?
 Are ye not gifts from Him who reigns above ?
 Tokens of changeless, deep, undying love ?
 Ye are so lovely that when ye decay,
 We mourn the absence of each genial ray,
 That leadeth weary hearts from earth afar,
 To view the radiant light of Hope's bright star.
 The rivulet that windeth deep and still,
 By verdant banks around yon grassy hill ;
 Shadows reflected from each cloud and tree,
 And feathered song birds' tuneful melody ;—
 All are resplendent with bright views of Him,
 Whose glory is revealed when joy grows dim.
 Ye radiant orbs that with serene pale light,
 Illumine the ethereal brow of night,
 Do ye pursue in your appointed spheres
 A course unchanged amid the lapse of years ?
 Perchance the beauty of those worlds so fair
 Hath ne'er been darkened by a shade of care.
 If sin hath not eclipsed with withering blight
 The loveliness of distant worlds of light,
 Spirits who wander o'er those starlit plains
 May be unused to sorrow, toil, and pains.
 O when the last bright beam of closing day
 Doth bid the spirit soar from earth away,
 The pale reflection of celestial orbs
 Awakens holy thoughts ; the mind absorbs
 Each lofty admonition from the sky,
 That kindleth true desires too pure to die.
 When storm-clouds gather, and the lightnings play
 O'er distant mountains with bright vivid ray,
 Man then beholds the grand sublimity
 Of the Creator's radiant Majesty.
 O Nature, in thy varied tones we hear
 The voice of God so manifest and clear,
 That mortals trace in thy deep melody
 Foreshadowings of immortality.

BIOGRAPHY.

MEMOIR OF THE REV. SAMUEL TILLOTSON.

THE Rev. SAMUEL TILLOTSON was born at Holbeck, August 13th, 1794; and died at Leeds, May 28th, 1863. He was the youngest but one of eight children. His parents were moral, and religiously inclined; and both of them being remarkable for their kind disposition, they were much respected in their own immediate neighbourhood. Samuel was in early life sent to the village-school, where he showed great aptitude for learning. His father wishing him to attain a superior position in society, allowed him to remain at school longer than the rest of the family; but the boy had a conviction that he should live by the "sweat of his brow," and he was therefore put to work along with the rest of his brothers, all of whom were engaged in various branches of the woollen manufacture.

In speaking of his early life, he says, "There was nothing extraordinary connected with my childhood, excepting my once being struck by a horse, and twice falling into the water, which lay contiguous to my father's residence. A child may well be said to be immortal till his work is done." In childhood and youth, he followed the multitude to do evil, though not to the same excess of riot as many others; and it was not till after his marriage, which was at an early age, that he became the subject of regenerating grace. He was aroused to a sense of the necessity of salvation by a sermon from that eminent missionary, the Rev. Richard Knill, who, though a comparative youth, was about to leave his native land with a view to turn the heathen from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to the living God. The event was long after thus described by Mr. Tillotson:—"A great feeling of delight had been created in my native town by a missionary being ordained there. I was a stout lad and a bold blasphemer. One of my uncles was a godly man, and a deacon of Mr. Eccles' church. He said to me, 'Samuel, there is a young man in town, who is going abroad to preach to the black people; and he is to take leave this evening by preaching to the young. Thou must go, lad !' The chapel was very much crowded; but being a strong lad, I pushed my way, and got where I thought I should have a full view of him. We were all expectation. At last he made his way to the pulpit stairs; I watched him up into the pulpit. He was a tall, thin, pale young man. I thought, Is he going to the heathen? then I shall never see him more; I will listen! He read and prayed, and then gave out his text, 'There is a lad here,' &c. There God met with my soul, and I yielded myself unto him." * * "I have now been a regular preacher in our body for thirty years, and God has smiled on my labours. I owe it all to that sermon."

After his conversion, he identified himself with the Wesleyans, with whom he remained till the following events transpired. Attending the Leeds Market on Saturday evening, December 1st., 1819, he heard the bell-man announce, what to him was both new and strange, "This is to give notice that sermons will be preached to-morrow in Sampson's warehouse, by Mr. William Clowes, Primitive Methodist Preacher, commonly known by the name of Ranter." He went and heard a powerful and telling sermon, founded on, "He led captivity captive." He remarked to his friends, "His word has turned me inside out, and upside down." One of them replied, "I shall not wonder if thou become a Ranter." He rejoined, "If God leads me to join that people, I shall." His friend answered, "Then thou wilt do right." Shortly afterwards the Primitives established preaching in his father's house at Holbeck, which he attended. At the close of one of the services, the late John Verity called upon Samuel to pray. He did so; and at the conclusion thereof, Mr. Verity, placing his hand upon the young man's shoulder, said, "Thou art the lad for me." He replied, "These people shall be my people, and their God my God."

In a short time, he was called on to attempt preaching. His first text was—"And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins." "We had," says he, "a blessed season, and visible good was done." He became a most acceptable local preacher, and the leader of two or three classes. As such, he laboured with an intense and untiring zeal, and was eminently useful in his sacred vocation. "One scene of my labour," says he, "was Bradford Cross. I was busily engaged in the midst of a heavy rain, aided by two females, in gathering up the loose pavement, and piling them for a stand. I had a very large congregation, and good liberty. That was the third sermon preached by the Primitive Methodists in Bradford. After this the Lord opened our way, and the cause made very rapid progress."

In May or June, 1821, he was called out by the Hull Circuit to labour in the Knaresborough end of its Ripon branch. Here amidst much persecution, privation, and toil, he had the happiness to see the work of the Lord prosper. "One fine Sabbath afternoon," he says, "I stood up at the Market Cross, and a mighty influence rested upon the congregation; when we began to disperse, missiles began to fly, but they did not hurt us. I turned about, and saw a man trembling—he was a friendless man, tarrying for the night in search of employment; being unable to take him to a house suitable for prayer, I took him down the North-road, over a stile to the right, and over two fields, and there behind the hedge, God in answer to prayer set his soul at perfect liberty. He joined our society, became an acceptable local preacher, and, after years of toil, finished his earthly course amongst our people." "At Spofforth, a large village, where lie the ashes of that great phenomenon, 'Blind Jack of Knaresborough,' one fine summer's evening I preached in the open air; we were blessed with a numerous concourse. While preaching, there was indeed a mighty shaking; this led me, in prayer at the close of the sermon, to cry stoutly, "Lord, should there be a Goliath sinner here, smite him, and bring him down." At this, a robust man made the application to himself, and on account of his stature, concluded that he must be the man; and on account of his inward pangs, he literally roared out, and rested not until he obtained a sense of pardoning mercy, which he did soon after. In due season he became a local preacher; and long after I heard of his well-being and well-doing." This man had been a noted Deist.

Amongst other places, he missioned Staveley, where he "had to stem the torrent of persecution." On a Sabbath evening he entered the place, when he saw the greater part of the population on the village green at their Sabbath sports; his heart was moved with compassion at the sight, and he breathed out his soul to God in prayer on their behalf. He began to sing, "with trumpet voice,"

"Come, ye sinners, poor and needy,
Weak and wounded, sick and sore
Jesus ready stands to save you,
Full of pity, love, and power." &c.

This movement collected "the aged, both male and female, and the young also left their Sabbath evening sports. There was a move,—the grave part of the congregation stood affected, and the young stood thoughtful and serious; but there was also a move of another kind, in hell, and also in the clergyman's house and heart, and he hastily anathematized me, and vowed vengeance; insomuch, that a kind friend came miles in search of me, to dissuade me from fulfilling my next engagement. The rumour of intended molestation having spread, brought numbers from the neighbouring villages. At the precise time I was on the ground with a host of stout-hearted friends; the constable also came. After having sung a hymn, I called upon Mr. William Sadler to pray, who included all in his prayer, not overlooking the clergyman and constable. I then announced that our intention was to preach the gospel without intimidation from either the populace, clergyman, or constable. The spirit of persecution was cowed; and I soon formed a society. Afterwards a house was obtained for preaching, till an old man gave us a piece of his garden, on which we built a chapel that became the birth-place of souls."

Sir William Ingleby, of Ripley, interposed his important influence to curb the persecuting spirit. "The rumour of our fierce storms of persecution spread till it reached the ears of Sir W. Ingleby, Bart., who came to Knaresborough to hear and see for himself. When I first discovered him in the congregation, he was very intent, as if he meant to lose nothing that the sight of his eyes could communicate, or his hearing supply. Some became light and trifling to the annoyance of the rest; I gave them a gentle reproof respecting their lightness, when Sir William took it up, and said he could find nothing to laugh at; he was sure the gentleman spoke well; and he wished that all preachers preached as he did—the nation would soon be in a better state."

On this, his first station, Mr. Tillotson remained but part of a year, "but he saw a deal of good done in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." He then removed to Malton, a newly made circuit, including Pickering branch. Here he stayed two years, was much blest in his labours, enjoyed "general peace and prosperity," found 672 members, and left 800.

The following incidents seem worthy of record:—"I went to a large village (Ampleforth) to hold a camp-meeting; to my surprise, there was a Sabbath wake. I felt moved to begin in the crowd with a walking service; a general wake and fair attender listened, and the word pierced his heart, and was like a nail in a sure place. He then and there resolved that he would never again attend a Sabbath wake; and that on his return to Malton, he would attend our chapel, and start his life anew. I saw him afterwards paying his vows to the Lord, and in that place he was made a sound convert. In a short time, he was called by the voice of God to preach the same precious truths as those by which he had himself been made a new creature; and he became extensively useful.

"While in this station there was a famine; and we resolved on holding a camp-meeting on the Common, and making a collection for the Irish peasantry. On the Saturday I went to the ground to look out the most suitable plot, and to make other arrangements. When just entering the ground, I met a young man in livery, who seemed in haste; that man, thought I, is on an errand of mischief. Why I thought so I could not divine; but on my return to the town, I heard the bell-man making the following announcement: 'There will be no camp-meeting, as announced on the bill, by order of Lady Notcliff.' I then stepped up to the bell-man, and said, 'Sir, will you allow me to stand by you, and when you have made your announcement, let me cry the camp-meeting up again?' He very pleasantly said, 'Sir, you can cry what you like.' We had, therefore, for a short time two bell-men, one crying down the camp-meeting, and the other crying it up. After he had gone his round, I gave him sixpence to cry it again; it was, therefore, twice cried to be, and once not to be. This increased its publicity, and greatly augmented the attendance. The camp-meeting was held, the congregation was large, and the collection was good. Things terminated to our advantage and to the good of the cause.

"At another place I visited, the clergyman became very bitter, and had a man fined and imprisoned for allowing us to preach in his house; but means being resorted to, he was liberated in about a fortnight, and the persecution abated. The savour of religion, however, in the face of all this opposition and persecution, spread, and the cause had a constant increase."

His next station was Pocklington, where he met with a rough reception. "When myself, wife, and family arrived in a conveyance, Mrs. — came out, and said, 'You have arrived then?' I said, 'Yes, here we are, all safe and sound.' 'Well,' she replied, 'there is neither house nor furniture.' I only stayed one year, but we did well in this station—a number of persons were brought savingly to God, and I left it much better than I found it."

In 1824, by particular request, he was appointed to superintend the Ripon Circuit. Here he remained but one year, yet "the cause continued to progress." On this station the following instance of persecution occurred:—"I was called upon to open a new chapel at Kirby-malzeard, which had always been a place of much persecution; whole seats full of people were thrown to the ground; and I was obliged to conclude the service. A small, very crooked-backed man encouraged the persecutors as commander-in-chief. I told them calmly they should hear of it another day; the little man hardened up his party, assuring them that there was no law for us. I had, however, a slight acquaintance with Sir William Ingleby, High Sheriff of the county of York, who received me most kindly, and said, 'Are not you the gentleman I heard preach at Knareborough?' I answered, 'Yes.' He met me in court and wished all the parties to be served with warrants; and to our astonishment, Sir T. Duncombe said, 'He had come to see that justice was done in these cases of wanton persecution.' The storm was quelled, and we had peace and prosperity."

His next station was Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The Rev. W. Garner speaks of Mr. Tillotson as "an old and valued superintendent," and says, "By the Conference of 1826, we were stationed to labour together in the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Circuit. Our beloved colleague was the late energetic and highly esteemed Rev. W. Carthy. Mr. Tillotson, with his wife and four children occupied a small house of two rooms only ; I and brother Carthy lodged and boarded with them. They kindly endeavoured to make us as comfortable as their very limited accommodation would allow. It will be easily conceived that we were all subjected to constant and material inconvenience. But our domestic privations and difficulties were not greater than those which were common to our brethren in other stations in the early days of Primitive Methodism. We therefore endeavoured to be content with such things as we had, and to make each other happy. We read, and studied, and wrote diligently in the same apartment. By fraternal arrangements we had free access to each other's little libraries. We conversed and disputed frankly on a variety of subjects. We propounded questions, and tried to solve difficulties connected with our sacred vocation. I and my friend Carthy thought that Mr. Tillotson was sometimes a little too sharp and stern ; but considering that he was our senior in years, our superintendent, and the head of the domestic establishment, he had a right to exercise more authority than ourselves. Besides, we regarded him as a truly good man and a real friend. We consequently felt it a duty to treat him with becoming deference, and acted accordingly. It was our lot to labour together only one year in the same corner of the Lord's vineyard ; but it was one of the happiest and most profitable years of my itinerant life. In the prime of his days, Mr. Tillotson was a powerful, vigorous man. As a preacher his delivery was rather too deliberate and rigid ; but his talents were very respectable, and duly appreciated by persons accustomed to methodical thinking. He had a clear and powerful voice, which was well calculated to arouse and fix the attention of his hearers, and especially if they were charmed with stentorian powers. His services in the Newcastle Circuit were highly and deservedly valued by many good people, who cherished for him an undying respect."

In connection with this station, he narrates the following striking incident :—" In 1855 I was over to preach sermons at Ballast Hills. I called upon Mary Hart, a woman converted under my feeble labours ; and I was led to recall a remarkable instance in the history of her life. By the afflicting hand of God, she entirely lost the use of her limbs ; she used to make her way up the hill to Sallyport Chapel by means of a crutch under each arm ; in one of her crutches was a hook, from which hung a small lantern to give her light, lest she should fall. She became a true convert, and joined our society. I was at the meeting when she said she believed that the same God who had converted her soul could heal her body. For the healing of her body prayer was made, which God mercifully vouchsafed to answer. And afterwards, without either crutch or stick, she walked eight miles to a camp-meeting, stood a great part of the day, and returned home at night. The good work went on during the two years of my labours, and I left the station in a much better state than I found it,—in chapels, rooms, societies, and Sabbath-schools.”

From Newcastle he removed to Sunderland in 1828. Here he had to contend with difficulties, arising from the secession of Nathaniel West. “But,” says he, “after a while we revived again, and Zion began to stretch forth her borders, and many in different places were brought to God. We had peace, and rejoiced in prosperity—we had in one quarter an increase of fifty.”

In 1829 he was stationed at Hexham, an extensive and thinly populated circuit; but he met with a warm and affectionate reception, was blessed with laborious and useful colleagues, and “saw great good done.” “I saw the Lord frequently make bare his arm, in the changes produced in men’s hearts and lives. I left the circuit much better than I found it; the prospects were indeed cheering.”

His next station was Bolton, in the Manchester district, to which he removed in 1831, where he met with a most forbidding reception, but where he remained six eventful years. He received a letter from the Bolton Circuit to say that he need not go there, for he would not be received. He felt, however, that he was a Primitive Methodist minister, and that to neglect to go to his station would be to exclude himself from the ministry. Moreover, he was ardently attached to the Connexion, “and had not the slightest intention to leave” its ministerial ranks; and therefore he replied, “You need give yourselves no further trouble respecting my station. I am coming, and shall, all being well, be with you by the end of the week.” Accordingly, on Saturday, a little after tea time, he says, “I arrived, and found the authorities in the preacher’s house. I was addressed by their chairman,—‘Didant yaw receive a letter that yaw needant cum, we wouldant hae yaw?’ ‘I received your letter,’ was the reply, ‘but I was not going to withdraw from society; and I considered it my duty to be here in time.’ The chairman then said, ‘This is our house; what would you say if we would not let you have either house or chapel?’ ‘I should expel all that hindered.’ Then said the chairman, ‘Yaw’ll hae to clam.’* ‘Well, then, I shall be like to clam.’” When the chairman had gone thus far, and little had been said by any but him, a good man from the country said, “God has sent us the right man at last; we wanted such a man.” He supplied Bury and Bolton the next day, had large congregations, “good times, and there was a moving amongst the people.” “When my colleague came, who was Mr. James Garner, we soon formed a close union to labour together in the name of the Lord.”

The Rev. James Garner says, “I have great pleasure in devoting a few moments to that which I feel to be my duty to an old friend and departed minister of Christ, whom I greatly esteemed while he was living, and the memory of whom I cherish with feelings of profound respect. I first met with Mr. Tillotson thirty-two years ago, when we were stationed to labour together in the Bolton Circuit. The station was very low, and many, both of the officials and private members, were seriously disaffected in reference to the general doctrines held by the Primitive Methodists. But Mr. Tillotson was firm and true to the Connexion, both in reference to doctrine and discipline. This, at first, caused him many enemies, and gave rise to violent opposition, and in the end many left society. But he was not in the least discouraged. His labours on that station were abundant and successful. For perseverance and labour under difficulties and trying circumstances, I have never met with his equal. His physical constitution was, when in the prime of life, remarkably strong, so that no ordinary amount of labour seemed to fatigue him. He could rise early in the morning, walk twenty miles before breakfast, and twenty more before dinner. He could preach five or six times a day sermons of moderate length, besides travelling several miles on foot. The amount of labour which he occasionally performed was almost incredible. At that time I was young and moderately strong, but I was far from being qualified to take an equal share of labour with him. In those days we had labours to perform some times which taxed our physical strength to the uttermost. I well remember on one winter's day we had to travel a long journey on foot. We set off long ere the break of day; frost and snow of considerable depth were on the ground, and wind and sleet beat violently upon us occasionally during our long and dreary march. At night I was completely exhausted, and could scarcely set one foot before the other; but my brave and hardy companion seemed almost as fresh as when we commenced our day's journey. On another occasion, in the summer, under the heat of a scorching sun, I walked by his side some thirty miles, until I was ready to drop; but to my utter astonishment, though I knew his powers of endurance, he seemed not the least fatigued. He had not only power to labour, but he was willing to spend his strength in God's cause; hence in labours he was abundant. Week after week he would work among timber and bricks, in chapel building, and take his regular appointments in the evenings, whether in town or country. Perhaps, in some cases, he acted unwisely in so doing.

"But in the midst of all he was a diligent student, carefully read the Word of God, systematically arranged his discourses, and prepared for a proper discharge of his various ministerial duties. In the pulpit, or when preaching the Gospel in the open air, though bold and undaunted in his Master's cause, he was neither rash nor boisterous, but modest and prudent, frequently displaying deep thought and considerable strength of intellect. His discourses were rather solid and serious than showy and pathetic ; they were, nevertheless, calculated to gain the esteem of the wise and good, while they incurred the censure of none who could bear to hear plain truth. For his sermons, though neither refined in logical argument nor elegant in style, were replete with sound instruction and Gospel truth, delivered in an earnest, impressive, and becoming manner, and consequently had generally the most beneficial tendency. Under his able and powerful ministry, sinners were awakened, mourners comforted, and believers built up in their most holy faith. Had his prudence and discrimination been equal to his zeal, integrity, soundness of doctrine, and the excellency of his practical instructions, he would have surpassed most men in general usefulness. But the best of men have some failings. And Mr. Tillotson, in some of his measures, in the judgment of his best friends, lacked prudence, especially in chapel affairs. But his purity of intention, unfeigned fidelity, and zeal for God's cause, sustained him in the performance of what he sincerely considered to be his duty ; and his clear understanding and extensive information on many subjects, enabled him to deal with persons of unsound principles in a masterly manner, and, in many instances, he had the cordial esteem of persons who conscientiously opposed him in some of his measures.

"I lived in his house two years, during which time I was kindly treated as a member of the family. I knew much of his private life, conversed with him frequently and freely on most subjects relative to the work of God and the welfare of the Connexion. And I believe him to have been a sound Christian, an able minister of Christ, and an ardent lover of Primitive Methodism. His labours were made, in many instances, a great blessing, and might have been more so, had his intentions been rightly understood and duly appreciated."

He says, "I remained here six years. We were blessed with unprecedented prosperity, and along with this I had almost incessant trouble ; but, thank God, I found his grace to be all-sufficient."

During his stay here he built several chapels, with regard to which he narrates several striking incidents, but our space forbids their being entered at length.

After leaving Bolton, in 1837, he was successively appointed to the following stations :—Keighley, Birmingham, Wrockwardine Wood, Dudley, Ludlow, Oswestry, Cwm, Congleton, Wrockwardine Wood a second time, Bromsgrove, and Tunstall, in almost all of which, it is evident from his own memoranda and from Connexional documents, he realized numerical and other kinds of success. With regard to the last of the above stations, he says, "Here I got to the first and oldest circuit of the Connexion. After five quarters, I began to fail in active life and strength, and became unable to take up the labours of such a weighty circuit. In this state of weakness I continued till the district meeting, when I was recommended for superannuation, feeling much at the thought of ceasing from my delightful labours. At last I humbly submitted, with reluctance and pain, to take rest, saying, 'The will of God be done.' His strong mental and extraordinary bodily powers of endurance were fully worn out in the service of his Lord.

After forty full years of most arduous, but also of most willing ministerial toil, he was, by the Conference of 1861, placed on the superannuation list. He then had to decide where he would, in rest and peace, spend the remainder of his days, with the aged, devout, and amiable partner of his gigantic labours and vast and varied privations. With this view he visited Bolton, where he had spent six years of his ministry, where resided his eldest son, and where was the last resting place of three of his children. But here he could not decide to settle. He was much disappointed at finding himself a stranger amongst strangers. Nearly a quarter of a century had passed away since he laboured there; and all his old friends, with very rare exceptions, were dead and gone. He, therefore, turned his face to the town of his nativity, and took up his abode with his eldest daughter. Here his powers of body and mind gradually and rapidly decayed. He was, however, a diligent attendant at the means of grace, and was evidently ripening for "the inheritance of the saints in light."

For the last three or four weeks of his life his sufferings were most intense, but were borne without a murmur or complaint. At all times he manifested the most perfect resignation to the will of God. His mind was at perfect peace. He was entirely free from all doubt or fear as to his final triumph. He felt that he had nothing to do but to put off mortality and put on immortality, and reign with Christ. The last words that he was known to utter, and it was after two days of unconsciousness, were in answer to an inquiry from his eldest and only surviving brother, "if it was well with him, and if he knew him?" He fixed his eyes upon him, whispered his name, and said, "Happy, happy, happy!" Lethargy again supervened, and two days after he passed away without an effort or a groan. He was attended to his grave by a large concourse of people, amongst whom were some that had met with him in his Sabbath-school class. His life has left its impress for good upon the world for ever. God honoured him in making him the means of bringing many souls to glory.

The following stanzas (a transcript we presume) are found in his own handwriting :—

" Our home is a land where the echoes are ringing,
Through groves by the feet of the seraphim trod;
Where the fountains of wisdom, eternally springing,
Roll on their bright streams to the city of God.

There, there, we possess our long promis'd treasure,
And naught shall our souls from their happiness sever;

We'll dwell on the banks of the river of pleasure,
And drink of its waters for ever and ever.

There the sorrows of parting no more shall affright us,
When past are the griefs of this time-wasting story;
Nor the grave shall divide, nor shall death disunite us,
Eternally join'd in the fulness of glory.

What then is the grave, though so wild and uncheering?
To us its dim vale speaks of triumphs to come;
We hail with delight its dark portals appearing,
The earth is grave's limit, and heaven's our home.

This, this is the country my soul is now seeking,
The city in heaven, my future abode;
There, there is the joy which knows no intermission,
In the heavenly city—the presence of God."

MEMOIR OF THE REV. JAMES MOSS.

THE biography of useful and eminent persons has justly been called an important and necessary part of literature. The Holy Scriptures supply a great variety of biographical sketches, briefly narrated, but full of instruction. Herein we discover what to avoid, and what to imitate—how the subjects of the sketches discharged the various duties they were called upon to perform—how they met the trials connected with the "life that now is," and how they were sustained by Divine help while fighting "the good fight of faith," and how they met the last enemy, and triumphed in a dying hour.

Many who have laboured long and successfully in the vineyard of the Lord, leave behind them a journal or diary of their lives and labours, from which, in writing their memoirs, striking incidents, remarkable deliverances, and an account of their success are brought before the reader. It might justly be expected that a memoir of Brother Moss would contain a great amount of such incidents, gathered from his writings during the forty years of his ministry; but both myself and the reader must submit to disappointment, inasmuch as he has left no journal; the only account we have is from a scrap of paper, from which we gather a brief statement of the stations whereon he laboured, and how long in each. We must therefore rest contented with the subsequent brief sketch.

James Moss was born at Watton, a small village in the county of Nottingham, in the year 1795, and was brought up to the agricultural business. In his early life he lived according to the course of this world, pursuing death in the error of his ways, until he was about twenty-one years of age, at which time the Nottingham circuit sent John Benton, as a Home Missionary, into that part of the country. Our departed brother, with many others, was led to hear him. This was on Easter Sunday, 1816. The word was attended with power, and he was deeply convinced of sin in the afternoon; and in the evening of the same day he was enabled to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ to the saving of his soul. This happy change was evidenced to his own soul by the witness of the Holy Spirit, and by that peace which follows justification by faith, and to the world by a profession of religion and a consistent life. He came out from the ungodly, and was separate.

It was not long after his conversion before he was proposed for the plan as an exhorter, in which capacity, and that of an approved local preacher, he continued for two years, and his labours were much owned and blessed of the Lord, many sinners being brought to God. In the year 1819 he was taken out by the Nottingham circuit to labour as an Itinerant preacher. His first station was the county of Norfolk. He was a man well adapted for the early work of a missionary in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, being of sound constitution, and having a powerful voice, accompanied with a firm belief in the doctrines which he published, and a glowing zeal for the salvation of souls. On this station he was very successful in the conversion of sinners.

Subsequently he laboured in Loughborough, Darlaston, Worcester, Bolton, Preston, Huddersfield, the Isle of Man, Liverpool, the Irish Mission, Norwich, Brandon, Mattishall, Darlaston, Oswestry, Ramsor, Redditch, Cwm, Rose Cottage, Hadnall, Bromyard, Bromsgrove, and West Bromwich Circuits. In each station, except three, he reports an increase of members. He was a man of sound piety. I do not think I ever met with one who questioned this fact. His mode of address was remarkably blunt, and he was very firm in his opinions on many subjects, which often made him enemies, and tended to make his path more rough than it would have been had he been less dogmatical and more condescending. As a preacher he was plain and practical, rather inclined to be declamatory and argumentative, fond of a little debate, greatly opposed to error in any shape, especially the errors of the Romish church and of Mormonism, seldom preaching a sermon without referring to them in some way. When he laboured in the Ramsor circuit, the vicar of Alton found in him a bold champion of Protestantism, and employed him to do the rough work in a controversy then going on between certain Churchmen and Romanists in that neighbourhood. When the advocates of Mormonism, in South Staffordshire, were holding debates with different opponents, if any one shouted, "Moss is coming!" the saints generally made their exit, and left him to entertain the audience with an account of the errors of Joseph Smith and his foolish adherents, and to refute the same.

He was a sound disciplinarian, and enforced the rules of the Connexion on all occasions. He was a man of the old school, with respect to many subjects in science and theology, always opposed to anything which he considered novel ; hence, if any one in conversation introduced the science of Geology, it was sufficient to arouse his soul, and he was at once ready to dispute upon the subject.

A few years ago, symptoms of asthma began to make their appearance, and eventually he was told by his physician that he had confirmed asthma ; however, he continued his labours with but little intermission up to the year 1859, when he requested to be superannuated, and the Conference granted his request ; he settled down in this (the West-Bromwich) Circuit, preaching occasionally.

In the June of last year his wife departed this life, which though anticipated for some time, was nevertheless a shock to his constitution, and he felt the separation acutely. He had a good hope of her final triumph. His last affliction was of short duration : his asthma resulted in dropsy, and after a few weeks' suffering, which he bore with patience and resignation to the Divine will, he fell asleep in Jesus, on the 29th of April, 1863, aged sixty-eight years.

His mortal remains were interred in the New Cemetery, West Bromwich, on the Saturday following, it being the time the District Meeting was holding its sittings at Bilston. The candidates and several of the hearers attended his funeral, together with a number of local preachers, leaders, and the friends from the various places in the circuit, —forming a respectable and numerous procession. According to his request I read the Burial Service, assisted by Brothers S. Sanders and H. Higginson ; and Brother Graham delivered an address at the grave.

MEMOIR OF MR. LEONARD MAINPRIZE.

BY HIS SON.

My dear father was born at Flamborough, in the county of York, January 13th, 1786. He was deprived of his parents in early life ; when he was thrown on the world to provide for himself. He was married in the nineteenth year of his age to an amiable young woman, by whom he had a family of eleven children. My father and mother lived strangers to God and the things that belong to their peace until about the thirty-second year of their age, when my father was convinced of sin, deeply wounded, and his conscience sore troubled. He began to cry for mercy, through the atonement of the Saviour, and, thank God, he did not cry in vain ; for God, who is rich in mercy, and not willing that any should perish, revealed himself to him one night while he knelt at his own bed-side. He then could sing,

“ My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear.”

My dear mother thought that he was going out of his mind, and had no love for her and her children ; to which he replied, he loved them better than ever, and was just come to his right mind. Shortly afterwards my dear mother was converted to God, and they joined the Wesleyan Methodists, erected a family altar, and went on their way rejoicing. My father continued happy and comfortable among the Wesleyans for about a year and a-half, after which he joined the Primitive Methodists, and continued with them to the day of his death. I never heard my father assign any reason for leaving the Wesleyans, nor do I think he had any special reason ; but like some of the early disciples of our blessed Saviour, he was a fisherman, and being on a fishing voyage to Hull, he heard the Primitives there, and he very much admired the liveliness of their singing, and the zeal of their minister for the salvation of immortal souls ; and he ever after felt strongly and warmly attached to them. When they paid their first visit to Flamborough, and formed a society, my father cast in his lot among them, became one of the first members, and supported the infant society to the utmost of his ability, and his house was ever open for the messengers of truth. My dear father was not perfect, he had a very warm temper, which was to him a source of great sorrow, for which he had often to weep in secret, and spend many sleepless nights. But I never heard any charge against him, except his temper. He was a steady, consistent member for forty-four years, forty-three of which he fulfilled the office of class-leader. He was seldom absent from the means of grace unless prevented by affliction. He spent much time in secret prayer and reading, and he loved to talk about his heavenly Master, and was ready to give to every one a reason of the hope that was within him. His was a religion of enjoyment, one that made him happy. He was useful in visiting the sick and dying ; he seemed to fear no fever or contagion ; he was a man of strong faith and confidence in the promises of God. In December 1856 he had a fall, by which one of his hips was put out, and the last six years of his life he was seldom free from pain ; but amid all his sufferings he was resigned to the will of Him that said, " I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." When any one asked him respecting the welfare of his body or soul, he generally said, " I am packing up and getting ready." Sometimes he thought he should have a hard struggle at the last, but from this the Lord happily saved him, for he was called suddenly, but not unprepared ; he had oil in his lamp, and went forth to meet the Bridegroom on January the 22nd. He sat taking some refreshment, fell back in his chair, and died without a lingering groan or parting farewell, leaving a large family to mourn their loss. Three sons and one daughter are members of society, as are many of his grandchildren. He was followed to his grave by a large circle of relatives and friends, who wished to pay a last tribute of respect to departed worth.

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN BATTERHAM.

JOHN BATTERHAM, who sustained the offices of local preacher and class-leader in the Primitive Methodist Connexion, was born at Wimbotsham, in the county of Norfolk, February 9th, 1795. He passed the early part of his life according to the course of this world; and it was not till he had reached the age of twenty years that he became acquainted with the nature of true repentance. He then found peace through believing, and at once united with the Wesleyan Church, which had been useful in his conversion. And oh! what an important epoch was this in the life of our deceased friend, when his hopes and fears, his desires and pursuits were changed, when he became transformed in the spirit of his mind, and resolved to live to Christ and benefit the world. About three or four years after this event he became a local preacher, and for about twenty years published the glad tidings of salvation to perishing men. Having received talents from God, he resolved like a wise and faithful servant to improve them, and hence for years he travelled up and down the country diffusing light and truth around. He was also appointed to take charge of a class which he continued faithfully to lead, and carefully to watch over as one that had to give an account to God. But in consequence of some misunderstanding he resigned his connection with the Wesleys, and for a short time attended the ministry of the Independent Church. He then joined the Primitive Methodist Connexion, and became an active member in the Wisbeach circuit. His name was put on the preachers' plan, and he was appointed to the office of class-leader, and for some time he went a distance of three miles to meet his class, giving evidence that he was deeply interested in the welfare of his members, and that he was happy in the service of his Divine Master. In all his public engagements he manifested simplicity, steadiness, and fervour, and we have no doubt, but that by God's blessing on his services, many good impressions were made upon the minds and hearts of those to whom he preached and with whom he came in contact, which will long be remembered with the liveliest emotions of esteem and gratitude. About ten years ago, he left England with his family, and emigrated to Australia. Here he again occupied his old position of class-leader and local preacher, in the Melbourne circuit, which was then superintended by the Rev. M. Clarke, under whose ministry he was often much profited and blessed. For at least two years before his death there were evident indications of decaying strength, and diminished intellectual power; feebleness and debility gradually manifested themselves, and continued to increase, until in him was literally fulfilled the proverb, "once a man and twice a child." But notwithstanding his weakness he witnessed a good confession. He knew in whom he had believed, and was always glad when any of God's children came to see him. In February, 1862, he removed to Castlemaine, that he might spend the remainder of his days with his children. His earthly tabernacle already tottering, continued to yield and give way, until the whole fabric trembled and fell. On January 20th of this year, he was much exhausted, and on Friday 23rd his spirit took its flight, to the land of the pure and the holy. He passed from a sphere of untiring work to a land of rest, and the spirit untouched by decay, and undimmed by death, dwells, we doubt not, in a nobler home, in a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

“No terror has death and the grave
To those who believe in the Lord,
Who know the Redeemer can save,
And ever rely on his word ;
While ashes to ashes, and dust
We give unto dust : in our gloom,
The light of salvation we trust,
Which hangs like a lamp o'er the tomb.”

G. T. HALL

MEMOIR OF MR. JOHN GRAHAM.

JOHN GRAHAM, class-leader at Old Hartley, North Shields Circuit, was born in the month of April, 1796, and died in January, 1863. The preachers who have travelled in this circuit will see this record with regret, and lament the departure of one of the excellent of the earth, a man in whom the social feeling, the kindly disposition, and the liberal mind, dwelt in a high degree.

The days of his youth were spent in pursuing the vanities and follies that, in general, have so many charms for the young. In early life he went to sea, and as is usually the case with young sailors, he was full of fun, frolic, and mischief. Utterly devoid of care in respect to the future, he sung and danced in public-houses to please his comrades, pushed round the intoxicating cup, and ran the whole round of youthful excitement in search of happiness. Being remarkably social and pleasant he was a great deal sought after by his companions, and was thus frequently led into places and pursuits where he spent his money and endangered his health, but from which he derived no lasting benefit.

About thirty-six years ago he was united in marriage with her who now mourns his loss. For some time after his marriage he still continued his sinful pursuits, doing good neither to himself nor any one else ; but having been induced to hear our preachers, it pleased God to open his eyes to see his sinful condition, and to convince him of his lost and ruined state.

He abandoned all sin, gave his heart to God, commenced a religious course, and speedily realized the enjoyment of salvation through faith in Christ. He then gave up going to sea, and commenced work at a neighbouring colliery, joined the society, and for thirty years he served God in fidelity and earnestness. Few men have served God more faithfully or pursued a more undeviating course. From the time when he commenced meeting in society, he was as firm as a rock in his attachment to the cause. His house was the home of the preachers many years, and although his means were comparatively limited, yet by the care and economy of a managing wife, he was always able to entertain the ministers; and this he did with a generous heart and a liberal hand.

He stood by the cause in prosperity and adversity, led one of the classes more than twenty years, and for a long time superintended the Sabbath-school. His gentleness won the confidence of the children, and he had their affection in a high degree. For some years past his health was frail, so that he was unable to follow any regular employment. He often remarked that he thought the wild excesses of his early youth had injured his constitution, and tended to shorten his life on earth. Alas! that this should be so frequently the case. He continued, however, to attend the means of grace, visit the society in company with the preachers, and work for God to the last. He was confined to his bed a very few days. The writer of this account had his company in visiting the society on the ordinary week-day for preaching, and the week following he received intelligence of his death.

From the time he took to his bed he was convinced that his departure was at hand. He talked of his approaching end with perfect calmness and self-possession, and commended his partner to the gracious care of Almighty God. He declared he was quite ready for the Master's call, and that he would speedily enter the better land. Some of his last expressions were:—

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are," &c.

and that fine passage in Job, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," &c. &c.
Calm was his exit:—

"Night dews fall not more gently to the ground, Nor weary worn-out winds expire so soft."

Without struggle or groan he breathed his soul into the hands of his glorious Redeemer.

The children of the Sabbath-school, whom he had loved so well, met to sing over his remains through the village. They were overwhelmed with sorrow; so were the members of his class, some of whom he had led for twenty years.

"O may we triumph so,
When all our warfare's past;
And dying find our latest foe
Under our feet at last."

MEMOIR OF MR. RICHARD WHITE.

MR. RICHARD WHITE was born December 27th, 1798, at Stratten in the Brinkworth Circuit. His father was a farmer of good report and the son was taken regularly on Sabbath days to the parish church, and being remarkably fond of music he soon acquired a knowledge of it, and became an accomplished musician and a member of the church choir. He was naturally of a proud spirit, and hasty and passionate; he was also given to shooting, sporting, gaming, and the frivolities of a vain world, but he was of strictly honest principles.

He married in his twentieth year Miss Pinnegar, of Marston, a gay and fashionable young lady, and for years they lived according to the course of this world, without God and without scriptural hope, having the character of the proudest pair in the place. And such was the spiritual condition of Mr. White, that notwithstanding his regular attendance at the Church, the blessed effects produced by the preaching of the Primitive Methodists so exasperated him that he declared he could as soon shoot them as shoot a bird. In this state the Spirit of God wrought powerfully on his mind, he was troubled by dreams, scared by visions, and was restless and unhappy till brought to enjoy God's pardoning love.

The conduct, appearance, and piety of Miss Mountford, now Mrs. Miles, was the external means of inducing Mrs. White to attend the ministry of the Primitive Methodists, in Mr. Habgood's wheelwright shop, and it was under Mr. Habgood's labours that she was first awakened to a sense of her guilt and danger as a sinner; and no sooner had she sought and obtained mercy, than she united with the little society, though at that time to become a Primitive Methodist imposed a heavy cross. She then felt it to be her duty to have family prayer, but her husband opposed and taunted her, saying, "Then you are going to be a Methodist, but I am determined to have no Methodists about me;" but she conscientiously persevered, and the third time she collected her family and servants around the family altar, God answered her prayers, the proud heart of her husband was humbled, he fell down on his knees, burst into tears, and was easily induced after this to attend the preaching of the despised Primitive Methodists. Mr. J. Dixon preached from "The saints shall judge the world," and though Mr. White had low views of the preacher, and wished Mr. Morse would preach, yet he had not proceeded far in his discourse before Mr. White found himself judged and condemned to eternal death. In this state of mind he attended Swindon market and fair, but miserable and distressed he hastened home to attend a prayer meeting held at Brother Gilmore's, where through faith he obtained "redemption in the blood of Christ, even the forgiveness of sins." He now felt as much love to the Primitives as he had before hated them, took up his cross, united with them, and continued a member till he changed mortality for life. I knew him for thirty years, during which time he was a man of earnest faith and fervent prayer, who hated pride, affectation, and hypocrisy, but sincerely loved simplicity, sincerity, purity, and power in the service of God, and Holy Ghost preaching. His house was a home for the preachers, local and itinerant ; his children were trained for God in singing and prayer, and his family altar was often a Bethel. I shall never forget hearing the family sing the hymn commencing, "O wondrous power of faithful prayer," and the strong shrill voice of his daughter Ann, long since united with the heavenly choir, seems to ring in my ears now. I have witnessed the strong faith exercised, and the fervent prayers offered up for his family, and cannot doubt but they will be answered in the salvation of all his children.

He was an assistant class-leader, a trustee, a member of the District committee, several times delegate to district meetings and Conferences, and a local preacher of long standing, for which last office he never thought himself qualified, and the effort to prepare and the thought of preaching often made him perspire profusely, and seemed for a time as if it would kill him. His influence in the infant state of the society did much good, tending to consolidate it, and give it a respectable character in the estimation of the world ; and though like all fallen creatures he had his failings and faults, of whom none, perhaps, were more sensible than himself, yet having learnt the short way to the cross, he found that as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth and pardoneth all them that fear him.

For the last ten years of his life he had been afflicted with a disease of the heart, which his medical adviser said tended to make him sleepy, irritable, unconscious, unfit for any kind of business, and at times not morally accountable. In this state he could not attend the means of grace as often as he used to do, yet when health permitted he was there, and manifested the greatest anxiety to realise the full salvation of the gospel, and be prepared for the kingdom of heaven.

I often visited him, and found him growing weaker in body but spiritual and happy in his mind. The last time I read and prayed with him he spoke of the comfort the holy Scriptures afforded him, of the nearness of his end, and of his entire dependence on Christ for salvation. On February 13th last, he was taken with paralysis in the head, which rendered him motionless and insensible, but at times he was conscious and sensible. He recognised his wife and children, gave his son a particular charge to take care of his mother, and before his departure told his wife that he had peace with God through the atonement, and gave her perfect satisfaction that he was going home to heaven, and that "to die would be gain," and on the 4th of March he fell asleep in Jesus, in the sixty-fifth year of his age, leaving a widow and six children to lament his loss. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his." I improved his death in the Primitive Methodist chapel, Stratton, to a large and attentive congregation, and good was done.

A LECTURE, BY THE REV. WILLIAM GARNER, ON THE BABYLONISH CAPTIVITY.

Delivered before the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Society, Cross Chapel, Hull.

HISTORY is one of the most entertaining and useful departments of literature. What the telescope is to the bodily eye, that history is to the eye of the mind. If we ascend some lofty elevation, and select a position favourable to a survey of the adjacent district, with the aid of a powerful instrument we can draw thousands of objects, well defined and distinctly coloured, within the field of visual inspection, which lie far beyond the range of unassisted vision. In like manner with the noble instrument of authentic history placed to the perceptive faculty of the mind, we are, in no meagre sense, eye-witnesses to the grandest and most important events which have transpired in past generations.

By more classes than one, we have reason to fear that the intellectual and moral value of history is vastly underrated. On one hand how many, young and old, rich and poor, respectably educated and comparatively illiterate, consume large portions of their precious time in light and unprofitable reading, and would regard a few leisure hours occasionally devoted to historic studies, as so much time wasted. For such employment, though both honourable and remunerative, they have no money to spend on the works necessary for successful efforts. For such an exercise of their mental powers they have no opportunity. And why? Simply because they lack the inclination. For them, levity and superficial amusements possess charms more transcendent than those of utility and reputation. This is, without controversy, one of the most obvious and prevailing evils of our country in the age in which we live. As one striking evidence of the correctness of these sentiments, we refer you to the intellectual and moral grade of the popular works and periodicals which are everywhere displayed in the windows of our stationers and booksellers. The quality of the goods brought to market, indicates the quality of the demand. The demand for literary trash is voracious, and the supply is, unhappily, proportionate. On the other hand, many good men, afraid, as they ought to be, of not making the best use of their precious time, discard history in general, as a dry and unprofitable branch of learning. And pushing this sentiment to an extreme, they attach very little value to the historical sections of the Bible. This is an error, and an error against which we are anxious to guard our youthful friends.

Each generical branch of history is fraught with important instruction, which will well repay the diligent and discreet student in this department of mental toil. But to the Christian, sacred history has a stronger claim on the attention than any other branch of this kind of literature.

The primary subject of this paper is closely interwoven with Biblical history, and for this reason it is entitled to our reverential consideration. As the Babylonish captivity of the ancient Hebrews is frequently referred to in the pulpit and through the medium of the press, it is desirable that we should familiarise ourselves with the leading features of that grand historic event. With this object in view, we respectfully invite your careful attention to the following particulars. 1. The moral cause of the Babylonish captivity. 2. The scene of the captivity. 3. The treatment of the captives by the Babylonians. 4. The duration of the captivity. 5. The decree for their emancipation, and their return to the land of Canaan,—and 6. Their subsequent reformation.

1. The moral cause of the Babylonish Captivity. This was sin on the part of the victims of the captivity. Nebuchadnezzar had no doubt reasons of state for transporting the Jews from their own land to his hereditary dominions. He might decide on such a measure as a necessary expedient to dissolve any hostile organization, and to render it impracticable for them to form dangerous combinations and plots against his government. But the original, moving cause of their coercive expatriation and subsequent bondage, was their refusal to obey the laws and conform to the institutions of their own theocracy. Moses reminded them repeatedly of the incomparable advantages which they enjoyed while they continued steadfast in their allegiance to God, and threatened them with the severest punishments if they revolted from him. In the fourth chapter of Deuteronomy he says, "Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. For what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day." Verses 5—8. In Leviticus, twenty-sixth chapter, he threatens them with dispersion and wasting among the Gentiles, if they refuse to keep the covenant of God, and to observe his laws. "And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but will walk contrary unto me; then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins,—and I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you; and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste." The laws which Moses proclaimed under the impulse of Divine inspiration were inflexibly strict respecting the unity of God, and the sanctification of the Sabbath. These laws required that every seventh year, as well as every seventh day, should be regarded with religious veneration. Lev. xiv. 4, 5. Notwithstanding these clear instructions, earnest exhortations, and faithful warnings, the people adulterated the worship of God with idolatry, and overtly desecrated the Sabbaths of the Lord. For these gross and confirmed habits of apostasy, God judicially withdrew his protection, and sold them into the hands of the Gentiles. In prospect of these terrible national chastisements, Moses says, "I will destroy your high places, and cut down your images, and cast your carcasses upon the carcasses of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you. Then shall the land enjoy her Sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies' land; even then shall the land rest and enjoy her Sabbaths." Sin, therefore, was the leading cause of the captivity. The rebellion against God was national, and the punishment was commensurate with the transgression.

2. The scene of the captivity, as the title of this paper implies, was Babylon, or Babylonia. Babylon was one of the oldest cities of the postdiluvian world. It began to be built only 100 years after the deluge, and was contemporary with the tower of Babel. Gen. xi. 4. It does not, however, appear, either from sacred or profane history, that Babel, as it was originally called, was a city of great consequence in the earliest ages of its existence. The prophet Isaiah, speaking of Chaldaea, says, "Behold the land of the Chaldeans; this people was not till the Assyrian founded it for them that dwelt in the wilderness," (xxiii. 13.) The kingdom of Babylon therefore was founded by the Assyrians. Great additions were made to this renowned city by the illustrious Queen Semiramis, and at a later period by Nebuchadnezzar. So extensive were the improvements and decorations which were added to the city by this monarch, that he regarded himself, in a modified sense, as its royal builder. Hence, in the pride of his heart he said, as he paraded in his palace, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?" Daniel iv. 30.

According to Herodotus, Babylon formed a square 120 furlongs each way, or nearly sixty miles in circumference. There were twenty-five gates on each side, situated at equal distances from each other. A street extended from each gate through the whole extent of the city. There were consequently fifty streets intersecting each other at right angles, each street 150 feet wide, and fifteen miles in length. These arrangements formed 176 squares, each measuring 990 yards, or more than half a mile on each side, being equal to a circuit of two miles and a quarter. The spacious areas thus enclosed by the frontal edifices were cultivated partly as pleasure grounds and partly for profitable purposes. This famous city was surrounded by a quadrangular wall 360 feet in height, and eighty-seven in breadth, having twenty-five massive brassen gates on each side. The approach to the wall was defended by a deep ditch filled with water. From these particulars it is easy to conceive that this magnificent capital was an appropriate centre of bondage to the conquered Israelites. Although the deportation of Israel is designated the Babylonish captivity, we must not infer that the scene of their bondage was confined to that grand metropolis. The removal of the Hebrews from their fatherland belongs to two great and distinct eras. That which we call the first captivity was not effected by a single removal of the population, but it stretched over a period of 150 years. The first blow was struck by Tiglathpileser, king of Assyria, on the more remote tribes of Israel, when he carried off the pastoral population who dwelt on the east of the Jordan with Zebulon and Naphtali. Compare 2 Kings xv. 29 : Isa. ix. i. It is thought that the leading object of this severe measure was to assist in peopling the huge city of Nineveh, which was then the capital of the Assyrian empire.

His successor, Shalmanezar, made the Israelitish king Hoshea tributary. When the tribute was withheld, he attacked and reduced Samaria, and transported into Assyria and Media its king, and all the most valuable population remaining to the ten tribes, or kingdom of Israel, as distinguished from the kingdom of Judah.—2 Kings xvii. 6. The people thus removed were, in great measure, settled in very distant cities, and there place was supplied by colonies from Babylon and Susia. 2 Kings xvii 24. This was a fatal stroke, and annihilated Israel as a kingdom.

More than a century elapsed before a similar fate befel the kingdom of Judah. In our authorised version there are some numerical errors respecting the different exiles of Judah, which it is perhaps now impossible to correct ; but this does not invalidate the general narrative. In 2 Kings xxiv. 8—16, we find 18,000 carried off at once in the third month of king Jehoiachin's reign, and removed to Babylon. This event may be placed about B.C. 598. After this, the vassal king Zedekiah having rebelled, his capital was besieged by the Chaldean forces, and in the eleventh year of his reign reduced by Nebuchadnezzar in person ; and in the course of the same year, his general, Nebuzaradan, carried away all the population, except the peasantry. The temple, the royal palace, and the mansions of the nobles were burned. The government was overthrown, and replaced by a Babylonish satrap ; Zedekiah the king and Seraiah the high priest, with the precious vessels of the temple, were transferred to Babylon. This final blow completely broke up the national existence of the Jews, B.C. 588. From this era we believe the seventy years' captivity should be dated.

The next particular at which we may take a passing glance, is the site which the famous city of Babylon occupied. This problem was considered for ages incapable of a satisfactory solution. It was thought no vestiges remained sufficient to inform the learned traveller where the once proud and magnificent capital stood, swaying her powerful sceptre over 120 provinces. But modern research, under the impulse of enthusiasm, guided by skill, has been rewarded by the discovery of the probable ruins of Babylon the Great. This memorable spot is now supposed to be in  $32^{\circ} 33'$  N. lat. and  $44^{\circ} 32'$  E. Long. of Greenwich; and about 550 English miles direct distance from Jerusalem. The city stood on the banks of the river Euphrates, by which it was divided into two nearly equal parts, about 150 English miles, direct distance, above its confluence with the Tigris. Here lay the principal scene of the Babylonish captivity.

3. The sufferings and indignities to which the Jews were subjected during the captivity, shall next have our brief attention. When Jerusalem fell before the Babylonian forces, Nebuchadnezzar erected the stage, assembled his obsequious actors, and opened the dreadful tragedy. Zedekiah, the king of Judah, witnessing the downfall of his capital, and knowing the haughty and vindictive character of the victorious sovereign with whom he had to deal, was greatly alarmed, and fled for his life. The Chaldeans pursued and captured him in the plains of Jericho, probably about sixteen or eighteen miles from Jerusalem. Thence he was carried to Riblah, and arraigned before Nebuchadnezzar, who slew his sons before his eyes, and all the nobles of the land. Moreover he put out the eyes of Zedekiah, bound him with chains, and carried him in triumph to Babylon. This was the commencement of a long career of suffering to the house of Judah, and no ambiguous intimation of the hardship and degradation which they had to expect at the hands of their powerful and savage conquerors. In the twenty-ninth chapter of Jeremiah we have the outlines of a case of terrible severity on the part of the king of Babylon towards two offending Hebrews,—Ahab, the son of Kolaiah, and Zedekiah, the son of Maaseiah—false prophets whom he roasted in the fire, (verses 21, 22.) The offence of these wicked impostors was probably of a political character, which of course would be visited with the heaviest penalty. Roasting alive, or burning to death, was a Chaldean punishment. To the shame of human nature, other nations borrowed this barbarous usage from them.

Instances of far more aggravated cruelty befel Daniel the prophet, and the three Hebrew confessors. The former was thrown alive into the den of lions, and the latter consigned to the fiery furnace, for no other crime than steadfast adherence to the law of their God. These instances of savage superstition were equal to those of Roman Catholics towards Protestants in the midnight of the dark ages. On account of the despotic cruelty of the Assyrian and Babylonish kings, the Hebrew prophets, in strong, figurative language, describe them as ravenous beasts and birds of prey; and their conquered subjects as their helpless victims. Of the Babylonian monarch Jeremiah says, "The lion is come up from the thicket, and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way." (iv. 7.) In reference to his rapid marches he is said to fly as an eagle, and to stretch his wings over Moab. (xlviii. 40.) It is of these royal tyrants that the same prophet says, "Israel is a scattered sheep; the lions have driven him away; first, the king of Assyria hath devoured him, and last, this Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, hath broken his bones." l. 17.

Another form of persecution which the Jews experienced at the hands of the Babylonians was mockery and insult, and this too on subjects which would wound their tenderest sensibilities. Their God, their religion, and their modes of Divine worship were treated with ridicule and contempt. In Psalm cxxxvii. they are represented as saying, "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof. For there they that carried us away captive required of us a song; and they that wasted us required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion." To these insulting taunts they reply in a lofty but plaintive tone of religious patriotism, "How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land? If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy." Under the influence of the Holy Spirit the Psalmist declares that a fearful storm of vengeance is gathering, and will ere long break on the devoted heads of their oppressors. "O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed; happy shall he be, that rewardeth thee as thou hast served us. Happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones." "That is," says Dr. A. Clarke, "so oppressive hast thou been to all under thy dominion, as to become universally hated and detested; so that those who may have the last hand in thy destruction, and the total extermination of thy inhabitants, shall be reputed happy—shall be celebrated and extolled as those who have rid the world of a curse so grievous." It is proper to remark here, that these prophetic declarations contain no license to any person to commit acts of barbarity; no: not even on those who are evidently the objects of Divine displeasure: they are simply declarative of what would take place in the order of the retributive providence and justice of God, and the general opinion which would in consequence be expressed on the subject. They afford not the slightest countenance to cruelty, either in conduct or disposition. We are not God's executioners. The administration of judicial punishments he wisely reserves to himself. "Vengeance is mine: I will repay, saith the Lord."

Another thing which could not fail to be peculiarly afflictive to the religious sense of the Jews in Babylon was the profane use which was there made of the sacred vessels of the temple. When Belshazzar, the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, entertained a thousand of his lords and the principal ladies of his court with a bacchanalian festival, and became flushed with wine, he ordered his servants to bring into the banqueting room the holy vessels of which his grandfather had spoiled the temple of Jerusalem. Out of these sacred cups the impious company freely quaffed the intoxicating draught, and magnified the objects of their stupid adoration. This was a direct insult to the God of the captive Hebrews and to his enslaved worshippers. How distressing the exhibition or the report of these impious proceedings would be to the minds of the pious Jews. On this aggravated scene of wickedness in the high places of Babylon, God could not look with indifference. He resolved to vindicate his honour, to confirm the faith of his down-trodden people, and to make an instructive example to all ages of the presumptuous transgressors. It was in the midst of this riotous festival that Belshazzar saw the fingers of a human hand writing, in unintelligible characters, his approaching doom on the wall of his palace. Daniel, the Jewish prophet, interpreted the mysterious inscription as portending the downfall of the Babylonian dynasty. And in that night Belshazzar was slain by two noble assassins, Gadatas and Gobrias, his own subjects, and Darius the Median took possession of the kingdom. See Dan. v. 30, 31. To the captive Jews, who had long been the butt of ridicule and the song of the drunkard, this grand political revolution was a propitious event and a token for good. The year of their redemption was then near at hand. Darius reigned jointly with his nephew for two years. He then died, and Cyrus became sole possessor of the throne.

4. Another important circumstance associated with the Babylonish captivity is, the period of its continuance. This was threescore and ten years. The period was definitely foretold by the prophet Jeremiah, and the event verified the prediction. "And this whole land," says the prophet, "shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations (Israel and Judah) shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations." (xxv. 11, 12.) This prophecy was delivered in the first year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, in which year he invaded Judea and took Jerusalem. And seventy years from this date comes down to the first year of Cyrus, when he made his proclamation for the restoration of the Jews to their own land, and the re-building of the temple at Jerusalem. In chapter xxix. 10, God says, "That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place." Who can become acquainted with these important historic facts, without admiring the prescience of God, who knows all things from the beginning, and who is able to overrule all events according to the counsel of his own will? He is both wonderful in counsel and excellent in working.

5. Cyrus, in the first year of his reign, published a decree in favour of the Jews. He granted them permission to return to their own land, and to re-build their metropolitan city and temple. Cyrus was the prince whom God mentioned by name to the prophet Isaiah one hundred and seventy-six years previous to this joyful event, and whom he designated his anointed, whose right hand he promised to strengthen. (lv. 1.)

The auspicious decree of Cyrus restored the Jews to their own land, and was a source of unutterable joy to the emancipated captives. The flame of patriotism is natural to the human breast. A man's own country possesses attractions which he can find in no other land. In a foreign region the soil may be fertile, the flora grand, the sky serene, the atmosphere salubrious, the climate congenial, the people courteous, and the government liberal; but the sojourner in a foreign country is among strangers. There are many agreeable associations entwining themselves around the affections, which exist in no country except one's own. How many emigrants, mariners, travellers, and merchants, who voluntarily leave their own shores, after a brief absence sigh to return. If they sail out of port with a heavy heart, how blithe their countenances, how elastic their steps, how ardent their greetings, when they again set foot on their native soil!

But their sorrow on departing and their joy on returning are vastly intensified when they are dragged from their beloved country by brutal force, or are driven before a relentless soldiery at the point of the sword. But such was the miserable fate of the Jews, when they were carried away into the Babylonish captivity. And no people cherished a more ardent attachment to their fatherland than did the tribes of Israel. How dreadful then must have been their sufferings at the time of their expatriation, and what "great things" the Lord did for them when he put a period to their long and painful captivity!

If they were not restored to their national independency, they were permitted by the Persian monarchs (the successors of the Babylonish kings), to live under rulers of their own nation, and to enjoy the free exercise of their religion. But in Babylonia they would be under the perpetual surveillance, if not under the immediate jurisdiction of heathen rulers. To their religiously enlightened and patriotic spirits this circumstance would be peculiarly galling. And what a luxury it would be to be released from the house of bondage and placed, by supreme authority, under the direct government of their own princes, with liberal provisions for the unobscured observance of their own religious ritual. This was a great mitigation of their sufferings.

Of the royal decree in their favour tens of thousands gratefully availed themselves. Details of their return from captivity are recorded in the books of Ezra and Nehemiah ; and in the contemporary prophecies of Haggai and Zechariah. The return was effected in several grand divisions. The first consisted of 42,360 Jews, with 7,337 slaves under Sheshbazzar, during the reign of Cyrus. In the second year of Artaxerxes Ezra came from Babylon to Jerusalem, accompanied by a numerous body of his countrymen, amounting, perhaps, to 5,000 souls. Thirteen years later, Nehemiah, the cup-bearer of Artaxerxes, obtained royal permission to visit Jerusalem, to restore his fathers' sepulchres, and to fortify the city. These important transactions decided the national restoration of the Jewish people. From this date a more established order of things obtained in Judea, artisans and trades-people settled in their beloved metropolis. The peasantry gradually gathered around the grand centre of national attraction, occupied the surrounding villages, and pursued their peaceful and profitable occupations. These were glorious privileges to a people who had been scattered, and peeled, and trodden down by the Gentiles.

In the land of their captivity they had been subjected to the severest trials, mental and physical, on account of their religion. Under the cruel despotism of Nebuchadnezzar, about eight years after he had given the finishing stroke to the captivity, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego were consigned to the flaming fire for their religious constancy. Forty-three years later, Daniel, for the same offence, was cast into the lions' den under the arbitrary rule of Darius. Their idolatrous oppressors studiously aggravated their sufferings by tauntingly inviting them to sing the songs of Zion. But those insults were so far from breaking the spirits of the devout Jews, that they only drew from them the strongest expressions of patriotism, and a determination to cherish an ardent attachment to Jerusalem, the city of their former solemnities.

6. We shall next consider the moral reformation of the Jews subsequent to their restoration. We have already remarked that on their return from captivity they were authorised by king Cyrus to re-build the temple and restore the worship of Jehovah. What an inestimable privilege was this ! It is impossible to appreciate the real value of religious liberty if of this blessing we have never been deprived. And the importance of the blessing is vastly enhanced, when the favoured people have been translated from a country which is wholly given to idolatry to a land where the only true and living God is acknowledged and adored.

The presence of idols and idolatrous practices are dangerous to all, but especially to the young. In addition to their natural depravity, their inexperience, and their strong propensity to imitation, render them peculiarly liable to be drawn into the path of error by the influence of bad example. The debasing influence of oxen-worship in Egypt was afterwards manifested in the golden calf which was deified by the Hebrews in the wilderness. It was a modification of the abominations which they had doubtless often witnessed in the house of bondage. A second grand development of the same grovelling superstition appeared in the ten tribes who revolted under the usurpation of Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

Hence, during the captivity the pious Jews would be in constant fear lest the persecution, evil counsel, and wicked example of the Babylonians and other heathen people among whom they were scattered, would lead their beloved offspring from the fountain of living water to cisterns, broken cisterns, which can hold no water. From these temptations they were happily delivered when they were restored to their own land, and the unfettered exercise of their religion.

This glorious advancement in their social condition they piously attributed to Divine intervention. "The Lord," said they, "hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad." Even by the stupid idolaters themselves this mighty and unexpected turn in favour of the Jews was attributed to the interposition of Jehovah. "Then said they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them."

But the liberality of Cyrus was not confined to the grand decree for emancipating the Jewish nation. In addition to this noble deed he generously brought forth the sacred vessels of the temple which Nebuchadnezzar had sacrilegiously carried away from Jerusalem and deposited in the idols' temple at Babylon, and placed them in the hands of Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah, that he might restore them to the temple of God. He did more than this: he strictly prohibited opposition to the Jews, and encouraged the people in the province to promote the patriotic designs of the Jewish princes. The same liberal policy was observed by Artaxerxes.

In these marvellous and propitious events the infidel and the ungodly politician see nothing but the hand of man and reasons of state. But a believer in Providence discovers the finger of God. And surely in attributing these mighty revolutions to the intervention of the supreme Governor of the universe, there is no violence done to mental science. Who formed the human mind? God. Who understands its essence and most secret operations? God. Who can influence and dispose it to a certain course of action? God. What was the character and what was the tendency of the "great things" which are here ascribed to his special interposition? Their character is holy, just, and good. Their tendency is precisely the same. They are powerfully calculated to confound heathenism, to check persecution, to strengthen confidence in the King of kings, and to magnify his glorious name. It is therefore perfectly consistent with sound mental philosophy, to refer these extraordinary and beneficent works to the supreme Being. With the greatest reason; therefore, the emancipated Jews exclaimed, "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

But how was their gratitude to God manifested? By a sudden outburst of joy; joy in their glorious Deliverer, joy in the God of their salvation. The transports of delight which are realized by a people just emancipated from a cruel and protracted bondage, are more readily conceived than expressed. But neither description nor imagination is equal to experience. The transition from bondage to freedom is a change so vast and advantageous, that the liberated parties can neither restrain nor give deliberate utterance to the deep and inexpressible emotions of the soul. The cup is full to overflowing. When king Philip and the Macedonians were conquered by the Romans, and a herald proclaimed that a group of neighbouring states should be free, exempt from all taxes, and live according to their own laws, there arose from the enraptured multitude such a shout of joy, accompanied by a clapping of hands, as plainly showed, that of all good things in this world, none was so dear to them as liberty.

In what language did the Jews express their gratitude to God for the same blessing? They were almost frantic with joy, and out of the abundant joy of their hearts they exclaimed, "When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion we were like them that dream. Then was our mouth filled with laughter and our tongue with singing." The precious boon which had so suddenly befallen them seemed more like an illusory vision than a delightful reality. In the day of their distress they suspended their harps, as useless instruments, on the willows; but now they are taken down, and tuned, and made to utter the most joyful strains in honour of the Great Deliverer of the nation.

That division of the released captives who returned to Jerusalem under the auspices of Zerubbabel, even at the dedication of the wall, sang aloud, offered great sacrifices, and rejoiced; for God made them rejoice with great joy." Nor was that extraordinary manifestation confined to the male adult population: "the wives also and the children rejoiced; so that the joy of Jerusalem was heard afar off." Neh. xii. 42, 43. On the occasion of laying the foundations of the second temple their joy was still more exuberant. The priests assembled in their sacerdotal robes, and blew with trumpets, the musicians struck the loud sounding cymbals, the choristers blended their harmonious notes, in praising and giving thanks to the Lord, and all the people shouted with a great shout, and the noise was heard afar off. Ezra iii. 10—13.

Their gratitude was further shown by their pious zeal. After they had arrived safely in their beloved land, they did not settle down at ease in Zion, and suffer their religious emotions to evaporate like the morning cloud and early dew. The people had a mind to work. Prince and peasant came up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. When Sanballat and Geshem endeavoured to divert Nehemiah from his pious labours, saying, "Come, let us meet together in some one of the villages in the plain of Ono;" "No," said Nehemiah, "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down to you. Why should the work cease whilst I leave it and come down to you?" Neh. vi. 2.

The like zeal they displayed in re-building the temple. In this pious undertaking they were strenuously opposed by crafty and determined persecutors. But Zerubbabel, encouraged by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, prosecuted the work; and Darius the king commanded their adversaries to assist them till the holy enterprise should be brought to a prosperous issue.

They showed their gratitude still further by steadfastly setting their faces against idolatry, and restoring the worship of God according to the law of Moses. In the catalogue of their sins after the captivity, the besotting crime of idolatry has no place. The complete avoidance of this senseless abomination gave them an honourable distinction from the surrounding nations. A few words shall close this lecture.

The materials of this paper may naturally suggest the interesting inquiry, What has become of the ten tribes which were carried into captivity by the Syrian kings, a century before the seventy years' captivity commenced? The common opinion is that they were lost among the Gentile nations where they were dispersed, and never returned to their own land. But this opinion is not sustained by satisfactory evidence. Referring to the restoration, the prophet Jeremiah distinctly mentions Israelites as well as Jews. "In those days and in that time, saith the Lord, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping: they shall go and seek the Lord their God." —(l. 4.) St. Paul also, in his address to Agrippa, affirmed that "the lost tribes," so called, were then existing, and that they, with the other two tribes, served God day and night in expectation of the promise made to the fathers. Acts xxvi. 6. The Apostle James dedicated his Epistle to the twelve tribes scattered abroad. (i. l.) St. Luke also, in the Acts of the Apostles, and Josephus, the Jewish historian, represent the Jews as sojourning in vast numbers in all countries under heaven. From the book of Esther we learn, that in the reign of Ahasuerus, one of the successors of Cyrus, and thirty years after the accession of the latter prince to the Babylonish throne, the Jews were dispersed in large numbers in all the provinces of the vast Persian empire. From these historic notices we infer:—

1. That during the seventy years' captivity and subsequent generations, the children of Israel and the children of Judah became so intermingled that their genealogical distinctions were in a great measure irretrievably lost.

2. That tens of thousands did not avail themselves of the privilege which Cyrus granted them of returning to their own land. And this was doubtless one of the beneficent designs of Providence. For in all lands where the Jews sojourned they were witnesses for the Unity of God, and for the righteous and holy laws of the Decalogue.

3. The captivity was a means of annihilating the political and religious differences which had unhappily existed between Israel and Judah ever since the usurpation of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat.

4. The captivity was a disciplinary dispensation. God intended it to correct, not to destroy, his chosen people. Thus his judgments were mingled with mercy. In this respect he is immutable. His mercy endureth for ever.

5. There is a bondage more to be dreaded than political slavery. This is the gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity. From this moral vassalage may you all be delivered and for ever preserved.

6. There is a liberty which, in abiding worth, infinitely surpasses political freedom. This is the glorious liberty of the children of God. With this supreme good may you all be enriched both now and evermore. And may the elements of evangelical liberty prevail "till every son of Adam shall be free."

7. Are you—am I—already in the enjoyment of this inestimable blessing? Let us then stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. God grant it. Amen.

WORKS OF CREATION.

THE HYDRA.

BOTH in respect of what it is, what it can do, and what it can bear, the hydra is among the oddest and most interesting of creatures. His very name is an oddity; but in this matter he is not alone. Science has often dealt exceedingly foolishly in the matter of names, when, passing by the homely and befitting title, it has conferred a pedantic and fanciful epithet, which, having the air of much knowledge, really serves to cover much ignorance.

According to old mythology, the hydra was a dire monster, a huge serpent with many heads, which the strong god, Hercules, slew. This dragon had the power of self-healing to so great a degree, that the lopping off of one of his heads put him to very slight inconvenience, as another grew in its place forthwith. Now the creature which to-day bears the name of "hydra" is so tiny a monster, that a whole family may live, and move, and multiply, under the green umbrella of a duckweed. Furthermore, it has no head at all; but it has the faculty of very quickly making up any lost portion of itself; and the severed part, as we shall presently see, is turned to very good account.

The hydra may generally be found in ponds, and shallow, gently running streams, attached to dead leaves or sticks, or the slender rootlets of the duckweed. Do not expect anything very demonstrative or startling. Fish up a dead leaf from the bottom, and examine it carefully. You notice some little jelly-like specks sticking to it, varying from one-twentieth to one-tenth of an inch in diameter. Drop the leaf into a bottle of water, and let it stand. Very soon those tiny pimples of jelly grow and stretch into delicate stems, bearing a crown of thread-like rays, spread out in a star-form, or gently waving about, or hanging motionless. These filmy rays, or tentacles, vary as to number and length in the different species, ranging from six to twelve ; some sorts having them shorter, and some much longer than the extended body.

As you watch the slender form thus displayed, you cannot imagine anything more feeble and frail, and you are disposed to ask, Does the delicate creature feed ? I answer, Yes : voraciously. But surely its nourishment must be of the finest and most exquisite. You shall see.

In the same bottle with your captives you notice many little creatures, about the size of a small pin's head, swimming in every direction. They are libellously called "water-fleas," and are really insects encased in a beautiful shell (Entomostraca). Now examine this hydra with a moderate magnifying power, and you will find two of these insects in his interior ; and that he has bolted them, not only whole, but alive, is shown by the fact that you can yet see their gills busily working. How came they there ? Surely this is as great a mystery as the problem which, it is said, once puzzled an English king, to wit, how the apples got into the apple dumplings. The fine, thread-like arms of the hydra are not such feeble appendages as you would suppose. See, that reckless young water-flea comes spinning along at a most reckless space, and carelessly hits one of our friend's tentacles. In an instant, as if by magic spell, he is fixed motionless. All this is clear enough ; but how it is brought about remains a mystery, although a great deal of learned guessing has been brought to bear upon it. One thing is manifest ; that the catching process is very swift, and, I imagine, very uncomfortable. I have several times watched a lively, blundering, big-headed tadpole touch one of these little creatures, and start off as if he had been stung, as perhaps he had. It is said that even fish will not eat the hydra ; and one observer states that he has more than once torn away a worm from their tails : but, hard as worms are to kill, it has always died soon after, though without any visible injury.

However offensive and fatal these polypes are to their neighbours, they seem to have no power to injure each other. Thus two of them will get hold of the same red worm one at each end. Forthwith the slow but sure process of swallowing goes on, until the two operators meet half-way. Can you fancy a more awkward state of affairs ? For remember, each has sucked in his half of the prey without crushing or chewing it. Sometimes the difficulty ends by the worm breaking ; but should it bear the pull without giving way, you may expect a treat. For awhile the rivals remain still, mouth to mouth, like wrestlers, each waiting for an advantage. Presently one sees his chance, and deliberately closes upon his foe. Yes, there is no mistake ; the wretched cannibal is drawing in his fellow-hydra, dinner included. Without hurry and without failure, the swallowing goes on until the victim has been thoroughly taken in, and may be seen close packed in the transparent body of his swallower. But do not waste your pity upon the prisoner, for he will come to no harm. Not choosing to run the risk of being digested with the worm, he disgorges his half, and presently finds himself set free ; and soon, with outstretched tentacles, is setting up the catching business again on his own account.

The hydra, in common with several other soft-bodied aquatic animals, can walk on the surface of the water ; that is to say, as it attaches itself to any substance, so it can hang head downwards, while its other end, called out of compliment a foot, is so brought to the surface as to spread itself dry to the air, and thus form a float buoyant enough to support the whole body. On the same principle, if you are very gentle about it, you can lay a dry needle on the water so that it will float. Wet either one or the other ever so little, and down it goes.

The multiplying of these polypes is also worthy of note. They do not restrict themselves to one mode. First, they avail themselves of an altogether common process, something after the fashion of fishes, except that the same individual both deposits and fructifies the ova. This quiet and homely way of propagation, however, seems to be limited to the winter, when infant polypes might be frozen up, or pricked with ice-needles. When the spring brings warm sunshine, it effects as great a change in the pond-world as upon dry land. And while everything under the water is becoming quickened and beautiful, and even the dull mud is all alive with the lovely breathing plumes of gnat-larvæ, then our hydra yields to the gentle spell, and comes out in its own original way. It takes to bedding. A small hydra sprouts from the parents' side, and grows like a branch until big enough to set up for himself; whereupon he is detached; and, falling or floating somewhere, there fixes himself, spreads his tentacles, and annoys or swallows, as the case may be, any living thing that comes within his reach. But the most wonderful capability of this wonderful little being has yet to be described. Put one of the beautiful green species (Hydra viridis) under a microscope, and mark how exquisite is the structure of its outspread tentacles, all set with tiny gems. Let me assure you that if you were to nip off all those rays, it would be no more to the hydra than the cutting of your hair is to you; nay, long before your locks grew again, the little fellow would have his apparatus once more complete. Carry the cutting a little further, and divide the hydra into two, three, four pieces. What a ruin you have wrought! But wait awhile, and watch. Instead of having destroyed one polype, you have made one into four; for each shapeless mossel gradually changes and grows, until it displays itself with all the form and attributes of a perfect hydra.

After all, the question waits for an answer, Of what good is this strange creature? Our knowledge must be vastly extended before we can find the reply, in this as in many other cases. We see the general sum of resulting good, and believe that each creature does its part; but we have no skill to apportion to each its own share, or trace every line of individual influence through the infinite complexity of the Divine order.

Here, also, is the Lord's word fulfilled: "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." In wandering along, now climbing, now wading, beside the stream that winds, chafing, murmuring, fretting, laughing, amongst gnarled tree-roots, and lichened rocks, and mighty boulders, down the heart of some deep glen, I have come upon a place where, stooping to thrust my way through the thick-grown copse, I have been brought face to face with a sight of beauty, such as if a man see and drink in all its influence he is blest indeed. Where the bright water trickled over the face of a stone, and the wayward hazel-roots knotted themselves in their bravery of moss, and the manifold loveliness of timid little flowers, which the world's stare would never see, grew in chorus beneath the shade, and praised the Lord; then have I asked, Why all this? No path lies this way. Scarce another human eye than mine has marked this spot. Perhaps not another. At that thought my soul grows very reverent and very thankful. What am I that my Lord should thus deal so bountifully with me? And praising flowers, and moss, and wreathen roots, and dripping stone bid me do my own work well, that my life may make time with all their song. They tell me that not a leaf grows or falls, not a feathery frond of moss creeps over the stone, but it has its own set work to perform in the economy of the universe, and that the hazel which shades their home has its part to fulfil in God's purposes, as truly as had that tree whereon my Lord did die.

And the little hydra has its witness to bear, and its day to serve. It needed Almightyness to set one gem-like point on its little form, as much as to "roll the stars along;" and not one of those points has been set in vain.

My friends, I wonder whether inquiring angels have ever looked in curious surprise at you or me, and asked, "Of what use is this creature?"

FOR PREACHERS AND CLASS-LEADERS.

THE PASTORAL OFFICE.

A PAPER READ AT A MEETING OF PRIMITIVE METHODIST MINISTERS IN LEEDS DISTRICT. BY REV. RICHARD TANFIELD.

BELoved BRETHREN,—It was with an overwhelming consciousness of my own inefficiency that I submitted to the appointment to prepare a paper on the most efficient way of discharging the duties involved in the Pastoral Office.

Nothing but a sincere desire to oblige my brethren in the ministry, and if possible to benefit both myself and them, has induced me to attempt anything on a subject so great and so important. A senior, ripe in knowledge and experience, and matured in judgment, and not a junior, like myself, would have been the person to handle well and wisely so grave a subject. I crave your candour and consideration while listening to a few brief hints on the subject.

If the "most efficient way of discharging the duties of the Pastoral Office" be the way most surely adapted to save both the pastor and those to whom he ministers, and I think this will readily be granted, then we have in the following text of Scripture a motto that fully embodies the subject. 1 Tim. iv. 16, "Take heed to thyself and to the doctrine; continue in them, for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee." Though addressed by Paul to Timothy, a young minister of Christ, we assume its applicability to Christian ministers, of whatever age or standing.

Two things only are here set forth as necessary for a Christian minister to "save both himself and them that hear him." They are a persevering attention to himself and to the doctrine. "In doing this thou shalt," &c. But how exceeding broad is this comprehensive sentence!

The first thing, and which must ever take first rank is—

I. TAKE HEED TO THYSELF.

Personal character is the very first pre-requisite for an efficient minister of Christ. He whose business it is to convert and perfect others, should be a converted, improved, and improving person himself. None but he who takes heed to himself will have a natural, proper care for the welfare of others, or will understand how their welfare is to be effectually promoted.

The true pastor is a man of right feeling, right thinking, and right speaking. One or more of these qualifications may be wanting in a preacher; but the efficient discharge of the duties of the pastor and preacher requires them all. "Take heed to thyself," embraces them all.

1. Personal piety is the basis of right feeling. It is saying little when we say that a Christian minister should be truly regenerate. His piety should be both broad and deep. It should be the most prominent feature in his character. Love to God and man should be the controlling principle of his intellect and his tongue. How else can he be what he is required to be, "An example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in purity?" It is only by his piety being prominent and eminent that he can fully obey the precept, "Let no man despise thee;" for whatever his ability, learning, or eloquence, he will be despised as a minister of Christ if his piety be either doubtful or superficial.

The truths of the Bible are of such a character that none but a truly spiritually-minded man can comprehend or expound them. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness to him, neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual discerneth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

The plain and humbling doctrines of the cross are so opposed to human pride and self-love, that none but a man of sanctified affections can take pleasure in preaching them; and none but such a man will have the moral courage and melting compassion necessary for their bold yet tender enforcement on others.

It is the more necessary to call attention to this point, because it is here where neglect is so easy, so common to us as ministers, and so disastrous in its consequences. If members of the Church may become lukewarm, worldly-minded, trifling, or heart-backsliders, is it not equally possible for us to resemble them? And when we sink, who shall raise us, unless we seek to raise each other? And if we backslide in heart who shall care for and watch over the flock of Christ? To substitute official devotion for secret prayer, the study of the sermon for spiritual meditation, and the inculcation of duty on others for the practice of it ourselves, are errors into which we are constantly in danger of falling.

How often where there is right thinking and speaking in the pulpit, is there conscious and obvious weakness, because personal piety is not steadily cultivated. The best sermon has failed of effect, because it was evident he who delivered it was not aiming so much to save his hearers, as to save his own credit, and to raise his own fame as a man of ability and learning! The best sentiments that could be uttered have fallen dead-born from the preacher's lips, because they came from a heart of frost rather than from a heart of fire! The hungry sheep have oft been disappointed of a meal, and the sinners in Zion have sat unmoved, because a dry critique, a dish of sentimentalism, or a mongrel evangelism, has been served up instead of the rich and savoury truths that minister salvation and edification.

Nothing is felt to be so sadly inconsistent and incongruous as the utterance of the holiest truths by a man whose spirit and character are widely at variance with them. Whereas a living embodiment of the gospel will do more, much more, in a minister of Christ to recommend and enforce its truths, than the most elaborate and conclusive reasonings without it.

A heart glowing with divine love is itself a glorious inspiration. From it, as from an overflowing fountain, will often gush forth the most sublime conceptions, robed in most appropriate and forcible language, and uttered with a fervour penetrating, softening, and overwhelming. Thus does "a wise man's heart teach his mouth, and add learning to his lips."

2. Next to personal piety is intellectual culture. On this particular it is difficult to speak plainly without giving discouragement to some persons. Our remarks shall be very brief.

If right thinking is essential to an efficient ministry, the discipline, the strengthening, and furnishing of the intellect should be one of the great objects of the Christian minister from the outset to the end of his course.

How shall it be done? is the question. We know of nothing to supersede labour,—earnest, persevering labour. The mind, like the plough, brightens by use; but unlike that useful implement it strengthens and sharpens by the very obstacles that it strikes and overcomes in its operations. Like the unbroken colt, the intellect can only be made tractable and useful to its owner by a course of discipline more painful, generally, than pleasing. But he who would have the crop must submit to the drudgery of clearing and ploughing, sowing and weeding. Toil is the price of every worthy attainment.

For the discipline of the mind, perhaps there is nothing better than the study of language, and next to that the mastering of some abstruse standard work on metaphysics. Such studies, while they yield but small profit at the beginning, compel the mind to bend and exert itself, and thereby inure it to the labour of patient thought; while such studies are peculiarly fitted to strengthen the powers of the mind by the vigorous effort they call forth.

For classifying the thoughts and giving facility in the seizure and marshalling of them, nothing, perhaps, is better than the habit of writing one's thoughts. Besides, no man knows the quantity or quality of his intellectual stores until they are put into shape on paper. Moreover, the habit of writing, like that of digging the earth, multiplies thoughts and increases the mental fertility. The habit of writing is absolutely essential to a man who would possess the power to rapidly and properly clothe his ideas. Without it there will be looseness, obscurity, and ever-recurring tautology, both of sentiment and phraseology.

Reading, constant reading, is essential in order to have the mind guided, strengthened, and furnished. It is a contemptible and ignorant vanity that thinks itself above the necessity of reading. We can only preserve what is already acquired by adding to our stores.

3. The tongue is the other object of attention. Right feeling and thinking will not necessarily ensure right speaking. The tongue, like a musical instrument, requires practice skilfully to sound all its keys and combine its chords into glorious harmony. The substance of a man's talk will always depend on the attention bestowed on the head and heart; but the mode of it will be the result of the amount of culture bestowed on the tongue. A few of the things more frequently "kept in the breach than in the observance," are all that we shall allude to here.

(1). Pronunciation is a matter of great importance to the preacher. Perfection herein is perhaps not attainable by any man, but a freedom from gross inaccuracies may, and ought to be, reached by us all. It is a serious annoyance to an ear at all cultivated, to listen to pronunciation in the pulpit so barbarous as to make even a school-boy laugh outright. An erroneous pronunciation is a serious diversion from the truths exhibited, and must ever be felt a great draw-back on the influence of the gospel on many minds.

(2). Elocution must not be thought beneath a minister's attention. If the pains taken by some men to imitate slavishly the bad elocution of others were bestowed on the cultivation of their own natural capabilities, the result would be vastly more pleasing and edifying. How much of the force and beauty of right words is lost for want of the right natural tone, emphasis, and pause in the utterance of them! If a poor discourse has oft passed off for a good one by the elocution of its author being natural and pleasing, why should not a good sermon have the like advantage given it? Be it granted that all are not equally favoured of God with natural capability and aptitude, yet by a persevering attention, all of us may avoid the harsh discordant tone that jars on the sensibilities, the tedious, sleep-inducing monotony, and the drawing sing-song, that form such a drawback on the efficiency of a public speaker.

(3). Conversation may be named in connection with the tongue. To the Christian pastor conversation is all-important. In fact the power of his words in the pulpit, as a Primitive Methodist Minister, will greatly depend upon the spirit and conversation that characterize him in the household. A wise and pious moderation should govern him in what he says, and how he says it. Equally removed from the flippant and the taciturn, the frothy and the austere, he should be a friend and brother who knows that much of the conduct of others will be regulated by his social character; and who remembers that it is his business to lure men into the paths of holiness, both by the truths he preaches in the pulpit, and the spirit and conversation he indulges out of it. It is sad to think of a preacher destroying out of the pulpit all the good he has been doing while in it! How needful the injunction in all his social intercourse, "Let no man despise thee!"

The second thing necessary to form an efficient Christian pastor is—

II. TAKE HEED TO THE DOCTRINE.

A man's character will greatly modify his views of Scripture truth; while a man's real convictions of doctrine will go far to mould his character. Views of doctrine and principles of conduct thus exercise a reciprocal influence.

The business of the Christian preacher is not to teach a certain system of doctrine only; it is to use the truth so effectually as to save his hearers from sin, and to build them up in all that is Christ-like. Notice—

1. The Matter of his Doctrine.

(1). It should be Scriptural. Though truth is the instrument of salvation, it is not all truth that is adapted to that end, but Scriptural truth. To preach philosophy, science, metaphysics, or politics, is not to preach the gospel. All these things have truth in them, but not the "truths that minister salvation;" not the truth "according to godliness;" not gospel truth. History, philosophy, and science, may all be laid under contribution to illustrate and expound the Scriptures (for truth is one and harmonious), but the sacred Scriptures are the depository whence the Christian minister must draw his subjects and principles. And no man need fear a lack of variety, beauty, and sublimity of theme who diligently works that mine of hallowed truth.

(2). It should be evangelical. By evangelical we mean giving to Christ his proper position in the system of gospel truth. Christ should be the central orb around which all our reasonings and exhortations should cluster, like the planets around the ruling luminary. Christ should be the silken thread that runs through the whole web of truth, and is always seen above or below. No sermon can be called evangelical from which Christ is excluded. As "the door," "the way," "the foundation," "the truth," "the life," as "our strength," "our refuge," "our hope," "our peace," "our Saviour," "our Advocate," as "wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption," as "all and in all," he should be set forth prominently and constantly. If duty be the theme, the "love of Christ" should be the motive to its performance. If comfort be the end of the sermon, no consolation will be satisfying without "the consolations of the Lord." If caution or encouragement is needed, the cross should be the beacon-fire to arouse fear or to stir up hope. If the terrors of the Lord are set forth, Christ the Saviour should be the bow seen in the cloud of impending wrath. In "warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, that he may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus," the preacher must preach "Christ crucified," as motive, strength, and salvation.

(3). It should be experimental. Because men of no literary attainments have made experience the staple of their discourses, many preachers exclude it from their sermons altogether. Whether they regard experimental preaching as weak, old-fashioned, or shallow, we know not; but is it right, is it wise to do so? Does not Paul very frequently present the truth in the form of personal experience? Is it not one of the most precious features of evangelical truth, that very much of it comes to us through human hearts—comes to us as the result of personal experience? Is not Christian experience an important light to guide us both in comprehending and expounding gospel truth? Granted that Scripture must ever be the test of experience, it is equally true that without experience much of the Bible would be a sealed book. A man's own consciousness is one of the most valuable books in the world. It is the laboratory where gospel truth is tested. Why should a preacher not use his reading in that volume as well as in the book of nature and of history? Experimental preaching is scriptural preaching. It is always popular, always powerful, always edifying. An eminent living preacher says, "There is no such preaching as the experience which a man gives who has just realized the sinfulness of his soul. I often hear myself out-preached by some new convert who can hardly put words together. Some say experimental preaching is shallow. Shallow! It is deep as the soul of God." Wesley's preaching was experimental. So was Whitfield's. There must be a serious lack in the best of sermons where experience is wholly excluded. Surely the truth of the gospel is no longer an open question! It is surely a great fact demonstrated by its effects, and palpable to every Christian's consciousness. Ought we not therefore to preach it as something we have known and felt, tried and proved for ourselves? Without such preaching we may charm and interest, but we shall fail to carry the whole heart along with us, and to make men feel the doctrine to be of God. Notice—

2. The mode of exhibiting the Doctrine.

(1). It should be simple. If men are to be convinced or edified by the truth, they must understand what is spoken. But unless great simplicity of style be employed, the majority of a congregation will but vaguely comprehend the truths advanced. Language may be easy of comprehension without being either common-place or vulgar. A sermon may contain the richest sentiment, and yet be clothed in the simplest garb. And for the pulpit, what can equal in effect the conversational style? Hard words and phrases may dazzle and confound the multitude into the idea that the preacher is "very clever," and "very deep," but the really intelligent and pious will be only sickened and saddened. To be understood—this should be the first object of the preacher. A wiser than any here once said, "I had rather speak five words with my understanding, than I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." It is as much the duty of the Christian minister as it was once the duty of the prophet, to make the message so plain that "he may run that readeth."

(2). It should be interesting. It is not easy to make an unpalatable subject interesting, but it should be our aim so to surround the truth with illustration, that the least spiritual individual may be thereby induced to listen with interest. Dry details, naked statements, stale rehearsals, are not the things to convert and edify souls in this day. If you do not interest a man by the mode of presenting the truth, you do not, generally, get the truth into his mind at all. "Because the preacher was wise he still taught the people knowledge, yea, he gave good heed, and sought out, and set in order many proverbs." Some preachers are too proud, and others too sentimental, to stoop to an anecdote in a sermon. But Jesus Christ used them very freely: "Without a parable spake he not unto them."

(3). It should be discriminative. To reach men where they are we must adapt the truth to them as they are. An efficient minister will therefore classify his hearers and deal out to them doctrine suited to their character. To deal in everlasting generalities is not the way to "warn every man and teach every man in all wisdom." It is as wise as it would be for a physician to subject to one treatment persons afflicted with every ill to which flesh is heir. Granted that one gospel will cure every spiritual malady, it must be taken by the patient, and what labour is necessary to induce him to take it! What labour and skill are needed to make men see their condition, and to aid them in overcoming the obstacles that lie in the way of their receiving the truth in the love of it! Sinners are entrenched behind vices, objections, prejudices, doubts, difficulties, and errors of many kinds, and you can reach them only by the demolition of their entrenchments. Christians are constantly running into harbours, by-paths, excuses, cares, and complaints that hinder their growth in grace and their progress in usefulness. These things must be found out by the pastor, and the lurkers therein be chased from them, or little will be done to save and edify. General discourses on redemption, repentance, and faith will seldom reach such characters. They will either stop short of them or go quite over them. A sermon to fit anybody is almost like a coat to fit anybody. A man's conscience will be reached only by the discourse being discriminative. The hearer must be made to feel that he is the person addressed and the person meant. Thus the secrets of his heart being laid open he will, by the power of the Holy Ghost, "be convinced of all," and, confessing the truth is divine and heaven-sent, he will submit to it.

Such preaching as this may be repudiated as personal, and therefore highly objectionable, by some. But is it not the kind of preaching employed by all the prophets, by the Lord Jesus himself, and by his apostles? Is it not the kind now employed, and in all ages employed, by the most able and successful ministers of Christ? If it be the only kind that can effectually reach sinners and stir up the Church to a holy maturity of character, is it to be disused because some faint-hearted people with sore consciences cry out, "Oh! he deals in personalities?" It is only by such preaching that the truth in its varied phases and adaptations can be brought out of the treasury, and a portion of meat in season be administered to every man. Let ministers of the gospel strive daily to live the gospel, and they will feel how necessary such applications of truth are to their own prosperity, and therefore how important they must be to the prosperity of others; and however they may be treated they will have too much regard as stewards for the opinion of their Master, and too much love for the souls of their fellow-sinners, to hide from them the word of the Lord.

(4). Lastly. It should be preached always with an aim to practical results. The end of all preaching is to save those who hear us. Then should not all doctrine be employed for that purpose and adapted to accomplish it? It is not saying too much when we affirm that much of what is called preaching is neither adapted to convince, convert, nor to stir up to holy character or effort, nor is it intended for anything of the kind. What question should a preacher ask himself when he essays to compose a sermon? "Can I make a good sermon from this text?" Perhaps that is often, too often, the question proposed. Should it not rather be, "What good can I do by a sermon on this passage?" He who aims at results will adapt his doctrine accordingly. To preach orthodox sermons, to beautifully and correctly elaborate and illustrate the fundamental verities of the gospel,—is not this too frequently the utmost aim of many ministers? And is this an aim sufficiently high, benevolent, and just for an "ambassador for God," "a legate of the skies," whose message is daily either "the savour of life unto life," or of "death unto death?" The following is so much to our mind and purpose that we make no apology for quoting it: "Some ministers are for ever hammering out doctrines, making ploughs which they do not work after they are made. Now I make ploughs; but when I have finished them I don't lay them away to be taken out and rebeaten the next year. No, my business is to put handles in my plough, and then to fasten to it a team strong as eternity, and then to force it deep, deep into the soil, and rip, rip, rip, ousting the vermin, scattering the moles and nibbling mice, and making broad furrows, in which I may sow seed." We grant that this sort of practical preaching will subject a minister to some trouble, and may bring him few laurels from man, but we cannot refrain from thinking that it is necessary both "to save himself and them that hear him."

May I and you, my dear brethren, become in every respect "workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth." Amen.

FOR THE FAMILY.

"THE BRAVE OLD MOTHER."

WHILE residing in Prussia the facts in the following narrative came to my knowledge. They are interesting, and illustrate the power of Christian love in animating one of the humblest, not only to deeds of kindness, but to heroic self-sacrifice for the good of others.

In the small town of Husum, situated in Sleswick, in South Denmark, resided an old woman, who for many years was commonly spoken of, not by her proper name, but by the title of "Die liebe alte Mutter," "The dear old mother," being regarded as a kind of dear old mother to the whole of the inhabitants.

As such there was hardly a little boy or girl who found their sum or task for the morrow too puzzling for them, but would carry it off to her for her assistance. She was a scholar in her way, and she could and would help them. Whoever might be busy, the "liebe alte Mutter" would not be too busy, they knew; and she was always to be found "at home" too, for she was tied to her bed of suffering, having long been crippled from rheumatism. If a father sprained his foot, or wounded his hand, so that he was disabled from working for his family, the "liebe Mutter" knew the best cures for all such wounds and bruises: only bring her the herbs she required, she would soon effect a cure. If a mother wanted counsel in the bringing up of her family, in the management of her household, or in bearing up against some great calamity, it was to the "liebe alte Mutter" she would go; and spiritual counsel would this dear old woman give, for she could, from the depth of her own experience, say to them, "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul (Ps. lvi. 16): how he strengtheneth me upon the bed of languishing," and maketh my "bed in my sickness." Ps. xli. 3.

Far into the future did she look, and reaped from her view of heaven and heavenly things that bright glowing spirit which enabled her, though occupying such a poor and weak position in the world, to shed a lustre of happiness around her, and to be a channel of blessing to all within her little sphere.

But it came to pass that the "liebe alte Mutter" earned for herself a change of title to that of "brave alte Mutter," and became so known by it that the former one ceased to be used. Thus it came about :—

It was winter and the ice was thick. The inhabitants of Husum determined to make a great holiday. They raised tents on the ice, and old and young were collected together out of doors. Some skated, some drove in sledges. In the tents there were music and dancing ; and the old people sat at tables and drank and smoked. Thus passed the whole day, and the moon rose, but they had no idea of returning homewards ; on the contrary, the festivities seemed but renewed.

One old woman alone remained in the small town, even our "liebe alte Mutter." She was bedridden and crippled ; but as her house lay high upon a rising ground, she could look out from her window upon the ice, and see all that was going on.

Towards evening she perceived rising on the horizon over the sea in the west a small white cloud. Immediately she felt alarmed. In her younger days she had been to sea with her husband, and understood many of the signs of wind and weather. From the appearance of the sky, she reckoned that in one short hour there would be a deluge of rain, and a breaking up of the ice ; "and all will be lost," she cried. Then she began to call out as loud as she could, but no one was with her in the house, no neighbour near : all were gone out on the ice, and she was not heard. Ever greater and blacker grew the cloud. Shortly, she knew, the storm must break, and the flood of waters descend.

At length, nerved to exertion by the intense excitement she felt at seeing so many human beings in such imminent peril, she collected all the little strength of which she was possessed, and, seemingly to herself, almost by a supernatural effort, crawled out of her bed upon her hands and feet to the oven. With joy she seized a burning stick from the fire, and returning to her bed shoved it into the straw mattress of which it was composed, and then hastily crawled out of her cottage to a place of safety. The house was in a few minutes in flames, and as the brilliant light was seen by the people on the ice, they all rushed to the shore, fearing that the whole town might soon be on fire. Almost immediately the wind rose, and blew the loose snow before them. The heavens grew dark, the ice began almost instantly to crack and to break, the wind increased into a storm ; and as the last person placed his foot upon the strand, the ice heaved, and the tide of waters broke upon the shore.

Thus did this truly "brave old woman" save the whole town, and give up all she possessed for their safety.

HOME.

"Home, home!" she cried, exulting,
 "Death is a glorious birth ;"
 Then gently slipp'd her shackles,
 And sprang away from earth.
 The angels caught her softly,
 And bore her up the steep ;
 The gold gates closed behind her,
 And we remain to weep.

Ah ! would she so advise us,
 Could she lean from out the blue ?
 And that sweet voice steal o'er us,
 Refreshing as the dew ?

"Weep ye that I have entered
 My Father's house above,
 And resting from all sorrow,
 Am perfected in love ?"

"Beside my grave, oh weep not,
 Nor say I'm lying there ;
 Turn up your faces heavenwards
 Into the sun-lit air.
 Think how I'm far above you
 In everlasting spring,
 In the Imperial City,
 And presence of the King.

'Lost in his light of glory,
 For which he made me meet,
 I rest in adoration
 Down at his sacred feet ;

Youlgreave.

From the wasting of long sickness,
 From the weariness of life,
 From throes of helpless pity,
 And the useless din of strife ;

"From the burning shame of finding A traitor deep within ;
 From battles long with error,
 And struggles fierce with sin ;
 From the haunting of sweet voices,
 That through my spirit sang ;
 From walking in waste places,
 And life's long hunger-pang ;

"From wounding misconstructions,
 From unappeased claims,
 From unsuccessful labours,
 From disappointed aims—
 From all these he has freed me
 By his victorious hand ;
 Will ye not too then hasten
 To this immortal land ?

"The trumpet note of welcome
 Is always on the blast,
 It has no time to die away,
 The souls come in so fast.
 Then faint not, ye beloved,
 But let hope conquer sorrow ;
 These golden gates shall open
 To let you in to-morrow."

THE SABBATH SCHOOL.

HOW MAY THE INTEREST OF CHRISTIAN CHURCHES IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS BE INCREASED ?

It, indeed, unhappily there did exist on the part of the church a disgraceful coldness, and lack of interest in the Sabbath-school, it would not be a very hopeful way toward removing it for the teachers to brood upon and discuss it, and to insist upon cordiality, and seek to enforce good-will ; but if, as we believe, there is no such real estrangement, the only proper question is, How may we best draw out sympathy into practical channels ? Let the Sabbath- school authorities ever assume that they must have the confidence of the churches, and proceed to work upon it. Let them boldly indicate their wants and desires, and churches thus called to co-operate with them will feel an increasing interest in their efficiency. If they lack teachers, or visitors, or scholars, or officers, or funds—if their school premises are defective or unhealthy, let them call on the minister and the church to assist them. Let them invite the minister and others from the church to their meetings for business and prayer. It might be desirable to make one of the regular prayer-meetings in the month special, for a season of prayer for a blessing on the schools. Let the teachers shew a zealous interest in the affairs of the church—trying to occupy their seats regularly, and to bring their elder scholars with them; seeking fellowship with the church when they possess true piety, and heartily joining in all its other enterprises; and this will greatly promote a reciprocal feeling in the church toward the school. Let them refuse every temptation to cultivate any factious or party feeling, and give every possible guarantee for their own good faith and affectionate confederacy with the church, as they desire the like to be exercised toward them. Mistrust produces mistrust, but confidence and love engender the same.

It is to the special interest, both of the minister and Sabbath-school teachers to be on the most friendly terms, for thus the minister will be encompassed by active fellow-labourers, and they in turn will enjoy the advantage of a guide and faithful counsellor. The ministers of the past age were many of them not born under the Sabbath-school dispensation, and hence, though valuing the institution highly, were not always skilful in manifesting their attachment, and were sometimes imbued with a tinge of jealousy. In the present day most of our ministers have found their earliest college in the Sabbath-school, and have imbibed a tenderness toward these scenes of pristine usefulness which makes them ever feel as if they were still Sabbath-school teachers. I hope no age will ever come when our ministers shall be too proud of scholarship and literature to mingle easily in the simpler instruction of the Sabbath-school; when they shall regard any exercise but that of preaching elaborate or fantastic sermons as beneath them; and when they shall undervalue pastoral labour, and deem the charge of the lambs of the flock as a vain trouble to be left to those who cannot fill a pulpit; or still worse, when they shall court popularity by rationalizing the Gospel, and bringing the sensation of the drama into their sermons, and manœuvre for stipend in a spirit plainly shewing that they preach self rather than Christ Jesus the Lord. If ever such a change should arise, one could almost wish the union of the church and the school broken for the sake of the latter, and that among the scholars and teachers a counteracting breakwater of simplicity and evangelical fidelity might be found. This would be a breaking out of the apostolic unbelief, when they forbade the Jewish mothers to trouble Jesus with their children, and drew on themselves his stern and memorable rebuke, together with its sweet corresponding invitation, in which the Shepherd, who "carries the lambs in his bosom," enjoins on the church its proper feeling toward the young, saying, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." Under the influence of such a faith the heart of the pastor will be sure to beat sound and warm to the Sabbath-school, and so feeling, he will be sure to influence his people to similar affectionate sentiments. It will, therefore, be worth while for the teachers to use every just and honourable means by which to secure and engage the love and co-operation of their minister by such exhibition of esteem to him as his character and labours may deserve. There need be no servile adulation or dependence in all this, but a courteous and respectful communication constantly maintained will soon make every worthy minister feel that in coming into the school he is in an atmosphere of cordiality, and his cordial services will be the happy consequence.

There is one attraction above all others, by which, infallibly, the deepest interest of a holy church and true-hearted minister must be awakened,—I mean fruitfulness. Ah! how different the look of the gardener or farmer on the barren unproductive garden or farm from that animated regard with which he feasts on the view of beauteous flowers, luscious fruits, and waving harvests ! If you would draw the eyes of all who love Christ and his kingdom on the school in delighted admiration, oh ! labour and pray that your classes may be as gardens watered by the Lord, and as vineyards laden with heavy clusters of ripe grapes. Oh ! seek more earnestly the conversion of all the teachers and scholars. When the Sabbath-school shall be a place of such spiritual power and blessing, that few can be long in it, and scarcely any leave it, without becoming permanently transformed into serious and joyful Christians, then at last shall it arrest the enthusiasm of the church and the astonishment of the world. But while many teachers remain themselves unconverted—while the masses of our people have passed through the classes, and turned out rather gospel-hardened than vice-cured—and while instances of addition to the church are too rare to form a very marked feature in the church business, and the great bulk of scholars in the school bid fair, alas ! to follow those who have already left us in their reckless disregard to all they have been taught—the Sabbath-school must labour under serious disadvantage. Its friends must assume a tone of disappointment, and its enemies may deride and disparage. It is time for all engaged in the Sabbath-school to lay to heart these matters, and to seek with more firm expectation decided spiritual success. We need to be convinced not only that children are capable of becoming early pious, but even that there should be far more hope of their conversion in youth, than there will be when they become adults.

How is it that we have wilfully persisted in choosing the most unfavourable part of man's life for our religious efforts ? In adult life, man becomes engrossed in the affairs of the present world. The after-tie binds him down. Wealth, honour, pleasure, friendship, learning, or the opposites of these, encompass all avenues to his heart. The eyes, ears, hands, and minds of men soon get overfilled. Religion wanders over the earth desolate and sad, her heart full of love, and her lips dropping persuasion ; but rejected and despised, she rends her garments, and tears her hair, and cries, "Oh ! that my head were waters," &c. "Woe is me, they go down to death and hell, and will not believe my report. All with one consent make excuse." Ah ! when reflecting on the aversion of mankind to the gospel, who has not inwardly exclaimed, "Oh ! that there were a time in human life, during which each being was free from these trifling concerns which possess his whole thought, when the rich knew not the value of wealth, nor the mighty the influence of power, nor the learned the pride of knowledge, when the tyrant was not hardened and imbruted by the lessons of cruelty, nor the libertine by the practice of licentiousness ; but all minds and hearts were clear of worldly prepossessions, which like weeds soon choke and ruin the soil. Then at that happy moment would I run and whisper in their disengaged ear the true warnings and sweet promises of the gospel, and seek to pre-occupy them with the things spiritual and eternal. Ah ! surely then the seeds of the kingdom would take root and grow, when the noise of commerce, the shouts of war, the hurry of pleasure, and the bustle of the world were for a season hushed."

Nor is this entirely a fancy, for God has so arranged our life that a long portion of it is given before his creature becomes wrapped up in the concerns of an inferior world. That period is childhood. To the child riches are but empty show, honours but playthings, the seductive pleasures of sensuality are not yet charming, the stock of knowledge is small, the mind is observing and forming opinions, depending much for its impressions on those of older age. Each generation thus is moulded by the past. If this power be wielded to attract the young to the superior delights of religion, and if God bless the instruction, then the rising generation may be reared to fear and serve God ; but if this opportunity be neglected, earthly objects will gradually lay so firm a hold on naturally corrupt hearts, that it will be very hard to tear them asunder afterward. At present the parents of a large proportion of children place them under our influence, but when they grow up their habits will be fixed, most of them will not of their own accord come in contact again with the church, it will be no easy matter to search them out, and in all probability they will be lost to religion and to heaven. Some will suppose they have been religiously trained, and will grow up self-righteous formalists, and others will be probably hardened into prejudiced unbelievers. Oh! sad alternative. How long shall the nursery of the church be neglected, and its tender buds and young saplings be exposed to the rude blast, the nipping frost, the destructive blight, or the trampling beast of the field! How long shall the young lambs of the flock be left to stray in ignorance across the horrid path of the devouring lion! Oh! to begin at the fountain head, to leave a legacy of righteousness to our posterity; to overturn the evil of the coming world, while as yet unsuspecting of our influence, and unaware of its power. Here are the future agitators and troublers of society, the daring infidels, the hardy libertines, the vicious criminals that are to be, now all in our power, with hearts soft and ductile, and convertible under the power of the gospel and the blessing of God. Our national curses may thus be turned to blessings, and those who, if abandoned now, may grow up morally worse than the savage of the desert, may here become noble, generous, benevolent philanthropists and Christians.

This is a work for which Sabbath-school teachers have the first and almost the exclusive opportunity. The materials of society come into their hands in a plastic state, before the church or the minister comes in contact with them. Only let them faithfully discharge their duty in love to the souls of their scholars, and in zealous care to please the Chief Shepherd of the sheep, and the grace of the Holy Spirit will be richly outpoured—one believing child after another, class after class, will be transplanted into the church, the elder members will not only rejoice but be quickened, the minister be cheered to redoubled exertion, the young converts will be full of intelligent zeal, the scholars' parents will wonder at the change they cannot but observe at home, and come to the sanctuary to share the blessed salvation; infidels, sensualists, and heretics, will no longer triumph over a church which sees her children depart from her side almost so soon as they are of age to choose for themselves, and the whole world will be moved by the spiritual power of a religious education which, beginning with the tenderest youth, can thus happily and peacefully revolutionize human society.

Ah! if you would effectually interest and benefit the Christian church, pass by inferior aims which seek only better forms, in order to make higher life your exalted mark; let every teacher become himself a true disciple of Christ, and an eminently earnest, consistent, prayerful, and useful one; in each class let the prime object be to seek more ardently the conversion of every one of your scholars, try to let none leave your classes but as members of the church and branches of the True Vine. Then with what an eye of maternal fondness will the church regard the growing accessions to Christ's kingdom of well-trained and redeemed youths, exclaiming as they flock like doves to their windows, "I was a mournful widow, desolate and barren! but lo! who hath begotten me these?" Churches never can neglect Sabbath-schools in which numbers of young men and maidens are continually being turned to the Lord, and proving by their virtuous, happy, and fruitful lives, that the Lord is with you of a truth.—Sunday School Teachers' Magazine.

CONNEXIONAL INTELLIGENCE.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

SCHOOL SERMONS. — GREEN'S GREEN, WESTBROMWICH STATION.—On May 10th, three sermons were preached in behalf of the Sabbath-school at the above place, in the morning by Mr. G. M. Morgan, of Bilston, in the afternoon by Rev. J. B. Knapp, of Darlaston, and in the evening by the writer. At each service we were favoured with a gracious influence, and the collection reached the noble sum of £32. The recitations and singing gave very great satisfaction, and all seemed determined to do more if spared another year. I am glad to say that many of the children are converted to God—that sinners have been saved, and peace and unity dwell in the Church.

M. NICHOLAS.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.—THETFORD STATION.—We have just concluded a series of missionary services on this station, which were of a pleasing order. On account of the extraordinary efforts that were made during the last year in school and chapel building, many fears were entertained that the missionary revenue would suffer, but in every place, with one exception, it was in advance of last year's. We were assisted at these meetings by the Revs. M. Warnes, and G. Bell; the amount raised was £23 15s. 11d., the whole of which, with the exception of local expenses, we have sent to the missionary treasurer.

J. ALLISON.

FOUNDATION STONE SERVICE, TOLL END, WESTBROMWICH STATION.—We have long been in want of larger school-rooms at this place; and some time ago we decided to take down the old room and two cottages, and to make two good school-rooms, leaving space behind to enlarge the chapel. All necessary arrangements having been made, on June 8th the foundation stone was laid by Henry Mills, Esq. The Rev. R. Jukes, in behalf of the school, presented him with a trowel, which was of silver, and very beautifully finished. A mallet and square were also presented by the Rev. M. Nicholas. The collection amounted to £29, £25 of which were presented by Mr. Mills. After the ceremony, about 500 partook of an excellent tea. A public meeting followed; Mr. Mills in the chair, and addresses were given by Revs. J. Pickwell, R. Turner, R. Rymer, Wesleyan, J. Little, T. Roberts, T. Morrall, and M. Nicholas. The addresses were short and to the point, and a glorious influence pervaded the meeting.

M. NICHOLAS.

SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY, GRAVESEND.—Our anniversary was held June 14th and 15th; three sermons were preached by the Rev. G. H. Fowler, of London, and the writer. The number of children in the school is 112, and the teachers, fourteen. The public meeting and the Sabbath services were all good. The school and society are prospering. H. GREEN.

BOUGHTON CHAPEL OPENING—NEWARK STATION.—On June 14th the above place of worship was opened. The chapel was well filled in the morning, and such was the increase of hearers in the afternoon and evening, that the services had to be conducted in the open air, the chapel not being large enough to accommodate one half of the congregation. On Tuesday, the 16th, about 130 persons sat down to a most excellent tea, gratuitously provided by the friends, in a large club-room, kindly lent for the occasion. At seven o'clock, a public meeting commenced in the chapel, which was densely crowded. The Rev. P. Daykin opened the service with singing and prayer, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. Anderson, Newham, Corden, Revill, and Leigh; the Baptist minister also took part in the meeting. On June 21st, the Rev. S. T. Meadows closed the opening services by preaching two excellent sermons. The chapel will seat about 120 persons, and will cost, when completed, about £120, £40 of which have already been contributed. This will make the third new chapel built and opened in the Newark circuit within a year and nine months.

P. DAYKIN.

BRISTON SUNDAY-SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.

—The tenth anniversary of this school was celebrated June 14th, in the chapel belonging to the United Methodists, which was kindly lent for the occasion. Three sermons were preached, attended by recitations, singing, &c., and the collections amounted to nearly £15. The school is prosperous both temporally and spiritually.

R. BETTS.

CRADLEY SCHOOL SERMONS, BRIERLEY HILL STATION.—On June 21st we celebrated the ninth anniversary of our Sabbath-school at this place. The Rev. J. W. Howell preached morning and evening, and Mr. James Cautherington, of Dudley, in the afternoon. We had a glorious day, and at the close of the services we realised the sum of £11 1s. 4d.

B. THOMPSON.

CHAPEL OPENING, HIGH OFFLEY, STAFFORD STATION.—This place was missioned in the spring of 1862, and the word preached was attended by the Spirit's power, many souls were converted, and a society was formed, now numbering eighteen members, and a Sabbath-school was established, now numbering fifty-eight scholars. Prayer was made to Him who has the hearts of all men under his control, and he disposed Humphrey James, Esq., of Stockton, to give us the most eligible plot of land in the village upon which to build a connexional chapel and school-room. On June 21st, the chapel was opened by two sermons by Brother Bateman, of Chorley. On the following day about 160 persons sat down to tea, gratuitously provided, after which a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Gilbert, Wesleyan, and addressed by Messrs. Bateman, Wytcherly, and Bowen. Interesting pieces were sung by our choir from Stafford. The entire building inside is 37 ft. 11 in. by 22 ft. 6 in. The entire cost is nearly £200, towards which we have raised about £73.

The trustees affectionately tender thanks to all parties who have aided them in any way, especially to Humphrey James, Esq., for his generosity in giving the land; to Messrs Boxford for a donation of £5; Mr. Child, £6 12s.; Mr. Joulès, £2 2s.; Miss Wright, £1 6s.; Messrs. Lockett, Wiseman, Johnson, Warner, and S. James, £1 each; Mr Bentley, £1 10s.; to Mr. Ball for his valuable services and donation; to Mr. Emery, contractor, for the efficient manner he has executed the entire work; to the ladies who furnished the tables; to the Stafford Choir for their valuable assistance; to the Chairman for his able services and donation of £1; to Mrs. John Cassell, London, for the beautiful Bible for the pulpit; and to Mr. and Mrs. Joulès for their indefatigable exertions.

R. BOWEN.

FOUNDATION LAYING FOR A NEW CHAPEL, EAST DEREHAM.—It is now more than thirty years since the Rev. R. Key first visited this locality, and formed a society and congregation. Then our temple dome was the blue broad sky, and our kneeling places the sod and the street pavement. From the date of our earliest ministrations and worship, we have laboured unweariedly with varied and pleasing success to advance the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. For many years we have worshipped in a hired chapel. In order to meet the urgent claims of our Church and Sabbath-school interests, it has been found necessary to build a neat and substantial connexional chapel and a commodious school-room. An eligible site of freehold land has been purchased at a cost of £140. Mr. R. Hambling, the vendor of the land for the chapel, has generously returned £70 of the amount of the purchase as a donation, and Mr I. Tann has kindly contributed £50.

On June 23rd, 1863, the Foundation Services were held under the most auspicious circumstances. The Rev. J. Ashworth opened the services by an impressive prayer. The Rev. R. Key preached a sermon on the "Peerless Glory of the Cross." Afterwards Alderman W. Hodge, of Newington Hall, Yorkshire, laid the stone. The Rev. T. Lowe, on behalf of the trustees, presented him with a splendid silver cup of chaste design, which he cordially accepted and gracefully acknowledged. A tin box was deposited in the stone, containing copies of the "Norfolk News," "Norfolk Herald," and a variety of connexional and circuit documents, including a list of the trustees, the names of the architect and contractor, and the names of the circuit ministers. Alderman Hodge, then standing on the stone, delivered a pertinent and effective address, in which he detailed some interesting and instructive facts from his own personal history, relative to his connection with the Primitive Methodist Church for about forty years. He afterwards placed twenty sovereigns on the stone as a donation to the Trust Funds. Mrs. Hodge also contributed a liberal donation in gold. Mr. Wigg, of East Dereham, placed on the stone £5, and various other sums were received, which, with the collection after the sermon, amounted to about £40. Afterwards upwards of 300 persons sat down to an excellent tea in the Corn Hall. At 7 o'clock the hall was crowded at the public meeting. Alderman Hodge presided and delivered an able and interesting speech. The Revs. T. Lowe, R. G. Williams, J. L. Whitley, of Dereham, J. Ashworth, of Peterborough, and R. Key, of Norwich, addressed the audience. The collection amounted to £11. The entire proceeds amount to about £90, including a donation of £10 from Mr. R. Skipper, the contractor, and an additional donation of £10 from our generous friend, Mr. Isaac Tann. In addition to the above sums we have received £5 from J. J. Colman, Esq., of Norwich. The chapel will be 50 ft. by 38 ft. and 21 ft. from the floor-line to the ceiling. It will cost at least £1000; towards that amount we have raised £222. We hope to raise in all £500. We beg gratefully to acknowledge the liberal kindness of our friends and donors. Our kind and liberal friend, Alderman W. Hodge, has rendered Primitive Methodism in this part of Norfolk great service by his visit.

T. LOWE.

CLAYPOLE CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY, NEWARK STATION.—On Friday, June 26th, a number of friends sat down to tea in Mr. A. Smith's orchard; and at seven o'clock they repaired to the chapel, where, after prayer, and a few introductory remarks by the Rev. P. Daykin, the Rev. R. Parks delivered a lecture on "The Hindrances to the Young Man's True Greatness." The lecture was listened to with great interest by a large and attentive audience. Mr. Parks also preached two excellent sermons in aid of the chapel funds on Sunday last, to large congregations. The appeal for the chapel was liberally responded to. P. DAYKIN.

EDGEFIELD SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—BRISTON STATION.—June 28th had long been looked forward to with joyful anticipation, great anxiety, and deep interest, by the scholars, teachers, and friends of the above school. In good time in the morning the teachers and scholars went in procession to a field kindly lent for the anniversary services, where they occupied a spacious platform.

A sermon was preached by the writer to an attentive congregation, after which several pieces were recited. In the afternoon and evening, a large concourse assembled at the services. On Monday, the 20th, the children had a treat, and a public meeting was afterwards held. All the services were of a high order, and the sum of £4 16s. 5d. was realized.

G. RUDRAM.

OPENING OF A SABBATH SCHOOL AND PREACHING ROOM, MANCHESTER FIRST CIRCUIT.—Bowlee is a small village, in the township of Middleton. Our people first missioned it in 1862, and remissioned it in the month of April, 1863, when they met with great success; and, as there was no other place of worship in the village, they concluded to open a Sabbath-school. A house having been taken for the purpose, the opening sermons were preached, June 28th, by Mr. Ellerington, of Manchester. The services were powerful, and the congregations large and respectable. The scholars on this day numbered sixty, and £2 17s. 2d. were collected for the support of the school.

J. H. YATES.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY AT MARLBOROUGH.—NEWBURY STATION.—On June 28th, four sermons were preached—three by Mr. Bell, of Hungerford Newtown, and one by Mr. Isaac Humphries, from the Brinkworth circuit. The congregations were large, collections satisfactory, and the Lord was with us. On the day following, about ninety persons partook of tea, got up by our kind-hearted female friends, who also beautifully and tastefully decorated the chapel for the occasion. An enthusiastic public meeting followed, when soul-stirring addresses were delivered. The collections, proceeds of tea, &c., were far in advance of last year.

H. PORTNALL.

[We hope our friends will state in all cases the amount of the collections. It has a much better effect than merely saying they were good.—Ed.]

CAMP MEETING, SWANSEA.—We held our camp-meeting at Swansea, on the 5th of July. Messrs. J. Frost, T. J. Shields, and the writer, preached. We had a good procession, powerful preaching, and a lively love-feast. At the close of the day, fourteen souls professed pardoning mercy. All glory to God!

J. P. BELLINGHAM.

[This is a sort of intelligence the readers of this Magazine are always happy to see. Let us have more of it.—Ed.]

CHAPEL OPENING, CHEDISTON.—Thanks be to God that we have been honoured to accomplish the erection of a new chapel and school-room at Chediston, in the Wangford station. The foundation-stone was laid on Good-Friday, by Miss Wales, of Wangford. The writer gave an epitome of the history and polity of the Connexion, after which 280 persons sat down to tea; and the amount realized in aid, £13 12s. 10d., gave promise of success in our undertaking. The work was let, and satisfactorily executed; and the chapel was opened for Divine worship on June 28th, and July 5th. On the intervening Thursday, public services were held. A good bazaar, over which Miss Wales presided, and to which she was a liberal contributor, was held—and a public tea, to which 250 persons sat down. We have just made up our accounts, and learn that the entire cost of this prettiest chapel in the county of Suffolk, so called, has been £162 12s. 9½d., towards which we have realized by donations, subscriptions, collections, &c., £74 12s. 9½d., and we have borrowed the remaining £88 on promissory notes, at 4½ per cent, which we intend to reduce to £75 at the first anniversary on Good-Friday, 1864. Thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Gibson, for donations amounting to £9; to our friends who carted the materials gratuitously; to Miss Wales, for the gift of a pair of beautiful lamps; to Mrs. Keer, for a splendid Bible; to Mrs. Chipperfield, and Mrs. G. Goddard, for their collecting efforts; and to all our friends who have in any way helped up—thanks, thanks! And above all, to God, the infinite Father, be ascribed thanks and glory. Amen.

W. CHAPMAN.

CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY, PLOUGHFIELD, CWM STATION.—Ploughfield is a village of about 250 inhabitants, situate on the banks of the Wye, some eight miles below the city of Hereford. We built here last summer a new chapel, at a cost of some little over £200, towards which £100 was raised by the time the chapel was opened. The first anniversary was held on July 5th and 6th. On the 5th three sermons were preached by Mr. T. Powell, Mr. George Maskell, and the writer. The collections amounted to the noble sum of £21 1s. 2d. The tea-meeting on the following day was held in an orchard belonging to Mr. T. Morriss, our esteemed class-leader at Ploughfield. About 300 persons sat down to an excellent tea. The meeting afterwards was addressed by several friends. The whole proceeds of the anniversary, including a few donations amount to £38. Much of this success is due to Mr. George Jones, of this place, whose efforts in behalf of the chapel are well known and appreciated. The following donations were received at the opening of the chapel. Mr. George Jones, £10; Mr. John Gwillim, £10; Mr. T. Morriss, £10; Mr. C. Mathews, £10; Mr. J. Han-corn, £5. Many others subscribed lesser sums, and in doing so did, I believe, what they could. Our thanks are due to many kind friends, but most of all to the Giver of all good. W. JONES.

CHAPEL OPENING, GREAT DUDDINGTON.—NORTHAMPTON STATION.—Great Duddington has had the labours of Primitive Methodist ministers for many years, but for want of a suitable place in which to worship the cause has had many reverses; but on July 12th and 13th, we opened for divine worship a neat substantial chapel, capable of seating about 150 persons. The entire cost, including land, &c., will be about £122, towards which we have already raised by collections and donations upwards of £44. The opening sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Durance and Mr. C. Cooke (Wesleyan). We take this opportunity of tendering our thanks to Mr. S. Chapman for land, and for paying for its conveyance to the Connexion, for liberty to dig the stone needed, and for a donation of £1 towards getting out the stone; to Messrs. J. Moore, T. Arch, and S. Hawkins, for their kindness; and to all who have contributed to this much-needed and praiseworthy undertaking. The chapel is an ornament to the village, and has already been the birth-place of precious souls. To God be all the glory.

FOUNDATION-STONE LAYING.—SOMERBY, MELTON MOWBRAY STATION.—More than twenty years ago our people had a cause at Somerby, but through the preachers neglecting their appointments the members declined, and the congregations fell off, so that the place was removed from the plan, and lost to us.

In June, 1862, a camp-meeting was held with a view to re-missioning the place. Afterwards the place was supplied with preaching on Sabbath afternoons by my predecessor, the Rev. W. Watts. A society was formed of five members on my first visit, twelve months ago. Street preaching was continued, a house was taken in which to hold prayer-meetings and class-meetings, the word ran like fire, the whole village was moved, and many were converted and added to the Church. The house was far too small to accommodate the people. After having obtained sanction from the quarter day board, we began to raise money for a new chapel. Land was bought at a cost of £30, and the foundation-stone was laid July 16th, by Dr. Kellett, of Leicester. The day being very fine a large company assembled. A suitable hymn was given out by the Rev. A. Beanland; the Rev. J. Twidale offered up a solemn and suitable prayer, after which the Rev. J. W. Howell preached a short sermon. Dr. Kellett then proceeded to discharge the duty assigned him, and several offerings of gratitude were laid on the stone by the friends. The company afterwards repaired to the large club-room (kindly lent for the tea-meeting) which was soon filled to overflowing. The trays were furnished gratuitously. Soon after seven o'clock a public meeting was held, and addresses were delivered by the fore-named ministers. The total proceeds of the day amounted to about £9.

SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—NORTHAMPTON.

—On July 19th, three sermons were preached on behalf of the Sabbath-school in this town by the Rev. W. Durance. On Monday we had an excellent public tea, and in the evening a public meeting. This has been an interesting anniversary, and the proceeds are considerably in advance of previous years. The total amount, after paying for the children's treat, is £6 1s. 2d.

WORK OF GOD AT OAKHAM.—For years the officials of Melton Mowbray Circuit desired to enter "the dark county," as it is called, the county of Rutland, but were unable till September 1862, when the Quarterly Meeting put Oakham, Stamford, Ketton, Erpingham, and Braunston, on the plan as mission places. Connexional sanction was then obtained for employing an additional preacher. Through divine aid we have been able to sustain our position to this day; though not without hard work and much persecution. The places are now doing well, Oakham especially. Here, in spite of all opposition, the Lord, in answer to our fervent prayers, has sent us a mighty revival. Two classes are formed, and we are about forming a third. The place wherein we worship is far too small to accommodate the people. Looking at the former and present character of many of the new converts, we cannot help saying, "What hath God wrought?" We heard one relate his experience thus:—"I have been many years in the army; sometime in the Russian war, and was wounded; but none of these things moved me. On my return home I was given up to pugilism and drunkenness. My father died praying for me; still I wept not. My child was taken from me, and that day I went to get drunk; and never did I relent or shed a tear till I heard the Primitive Methodists singing and preaching in the streets." And now this same person who was a terror to many in Oakham, is as meek as a lamb—"A wonder to many." We could give other examples to show the power of the gospel in hushing the turbulent passions of men. A new chapel or larger room is wanted, and we are thankful to add that the Baptists very kindly lent us their chapel, July 26th and 27th, when three sermons were preached by Miss Buck, of Leicester, and collections were made towards this object.

FOUNDATION-STONE LAYING at MONMOUTH. — PILLAWELL STATION. — Monmouth is celebrated as the birth-place of King Henry 5th., in the year 1388; a statue of whom stands in Agincourt-square, a central place of the town so called after Agincourt, in France, the place of Henry's skill and valour in conquering the French army, which event was the prelude to his heirship to the French crown. This Henry, while Prince of Wales, had a dissolute companion, who, for some breach to the law was brought to account under Sir William Gascoigne, Lord Chief Justice. Henry, provoked at the issue of the trial, insulted and struck the judge in open court; for which Sir William, mindful of the reverence due to the tribunal, committed him to prison. The reigning king highly approved the conduct of this upright judge; and the prince, on his succession to the throne, also honoured and encouraged him with marks of approbation.

Monmouth, Primitive Methodistically, has, for the want of a chapel, hitherto excited but little interest, although it has been the residence of the superintendent preachers and the seat of a small society for nearly thirty years. Under the superintendency of the Rev. T. Hobson, about the year 1840, a fund was commenced for a new chapel, and a site of land sought, but no acceptable plot offered itself, until last Christmas, when providence opened the way to cheap, excellent, and well situated premises, which were purchased at once at a cost of £450, and connexionally secured by a trust deed. Plans and specifications having been gratuitously drawn by the writer and Mr. R. Edwards, and sanction to build duly obtained, the foundation-stone was laid on Tuesday, July 28th, 1863, by J. Spilsbury, Esq., one of our borough magistrates, to whom a silver trowel was presented in the name of the trustees by G. Dobson. Interesting memorial documents, hermetically sealed in a bottle, having been placed in a prepared cavity of the wall, and a copy read to the audience, the stone was laid in the name of the holy Trinity, as the foundation of a Primitive Methodist chapel.

The gentleman, amongst other things, then said, "Not the least amongst the many blessings which the most lowly amongst us enjoy, under a liberal and enlightened government in this our happy England, is the perfect freedom of religious opinion; a freedom the more valuable and the more dearly to be prized, when we reflect upon its absence in other countries, and the history of our own in its past and darker ages. Such reflections induce me to express to you how much I am gratified in your having selected me to assist you here to-day, and which I take as a kindly feeling manifested on your part to the Established Church, of which I feel myself a staunch member. Is it not by the cultivation of such kindly feelings that the peace and prosperity of our beloved country are to be maintained? I therefore express my sincere hope that we may continue to live together righteously and piously, in the fear of God, honouring the Queen, and in charity with each other."

Immediately after this address the Rev. T. Hobson, of Bristol, preached an excellent sermon to a large and attentive audience, from which a liberal collection was obtained. Also at 5 o'clock p.m., nearly four hundred persons partook of an excellent tea (in the new market-house) gratuitously provided by Miss Williams and Mrs. Price of Gwern-y-saint, and others. At 7 o'clock p.m. a public meeting was held, presided over by the writer, and addressed with much power and pathos by the Revds. J. Broadhurst, B. D. Smith, Baptist; Mr. J. Orphan, Wesleyan; and the Rev. T. Hobson.

The proceeds of the day amounted to £30. Donations as follows, Mr. P. Clayton, £3; Mr. B. Stephens, £5; Rev. L. and Mrs. Ramsden, £5; Mr., Mrs., and Miss Price, £3; Mrs., Miss, and Master G. Robson, £3; Mr. Prosser, £2; Mr. Edwards, £5; Miss Williams, Mr. Vaughan, —Brudley, Rev. J. Broadhurst, and others, £1 each; £15 from the society's funds; which, together with materials, labour, and substantial promises amount to £120 now received; and for which all have our best thanks, and God our highest praise.

In connection with these proceedings the following solemn and admonitory event occurred. On Saturday, the 25th, previously to the stone being laid, Brother James Davies, local preacher, trustee and contractor for the mason-work of the chapel, was taken suddenly ill while at work on the premises. By the kindness of Mrs. Edwards, wife of his co-contractor for the carpentering work, he was put to bed in her house, and a medical gentleman was soon in attendance. Under his treatment hopes were entertained of his recovery; but on the 28th about half an hour before that stone, the laying of which he was in the act of preparing for when seized, and which he hoped to see laid, he breathed his last, not more than a few feet from the spot. In reply to questions put by the writer, about two hours before his departure, he said, "I have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Verily all human foundations are in the dust; happy those, who, like our departed brother, are ever found built on this "Rock of ages;" and need not to "make haste" at the sudden approach of death. G. DORSON.

HORNSEA STATION.—Our annual "great gathering" in this station took place on Wednesday, August 5th, in Hornsea, on which occasion this little, beautiful, and increasingly popular watering-place appeared all alive with the large company drawn together. At one o'clock p.m., we processioned from our chapel down to the sands, where a camp-meeting was held; after which tea was provided in a large tent, fitted up for the occasion, and nearly 600 persons partook of the social meal. An overflowing and enthusiastic public meeting was held in the evening in the tent, under the able presidency of S. Hodge, Esq., of Hull. The Revs. W. Whitby and J. Tongue, of Hull; T. Newsome, and R. S. Blair, the circuit ministers, took part in the religious services. The whole day's proceedings rendered great satisfaction and pleasure to the parties connected with them, and the sum realized, after paying all costs will, we expect, be about £26, to be devoted to the building of a minister's house.

MISSIONARY SERVICES. — GUERNSEY STATION.—On Lord's-day, August 9th, 1863, very interesting and effective sermons were preached in the morning and the evening by the Rev. W. Antliff, of London, and in the afternoon, by the Rev. W. Brewer, of Alderney, to large, attentive, and respectable congregations.

On the following evening our annual missionary meeting was held, which was presided over by our highly esteemed and long tried friend, Dr. Collenette, who opened the meeting with a very appropriate and friendly speech. At its close a few extracts from the annual missionary report were read, and the financial proceeds of the Guernsey Branch Auxiliary Missionary Society stated by the Rev. G. Grigg. Very able and thrilling addresses were delivered by the Rev. W. Wedlock, Wesleyan, Rev. W. Antliff, deputation, and the Rev. W. Brewer. The chapel was well filled, and the people were deeply interested and pleased, and they liberally responded to the appeal made by the deputation to support the missionary cause.

On Tuesday, the 11th, we held a missionary tea, when about fifty sat down to "the cup that cheers but not inebriates," and after enjoying our social repast, we repaired to our Truchot-street Chapel, where we held an interesting meeting. Mr. Kellow took the chair, and spoke of the great good he had seen effected by the agents of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society. The Rev. T. Crate (Baptist) said he had been acquainted with the operations of the Primitive Methodist Society for many years, and rejoiced in the success that had attended our labours. Messrs. Piesing and Simon spoke on the duty of the Church to labour, give, and pray more earnestly for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom. They were followed by the Revs. W. Brewer and W. Antliff, who favoured us with thrilling addresses relative to our past difficulties and prosperity, and our present position and prospects.

On Wednesday, the 12th, the Rev. W. Antliff delivered a lecture on Temperance (in connexion with our missionary services). The room was well filled. Dr. Collenette took the chair; the attendance was very good, and the lecture highly appreciated. The whole of the services were well attended, and accompanied with a divine influence, and the proceeds were £9 5s. 1d. G. GRIGG.

REDUCTION OF DEBT ON STAFFORD TRUST ESTATE.—No doubt the readers of our magazines will be glad to hear that the friends connected with our Stafford Trust Estate have by making strenuous efforts during the last eighteen months succeeded in reducing the debt £376 19s. 7d. We desire to thank the General Chapel Fund Committee (who made us a grant to the amount of £90); the stations who allowed us to beg; Messrs. Bennett, for a donation of £11 10s. 3d.; P. Child, £10 14s.; C. Broomhall, £10; W. Hodgetts, £10; J. Biddle, £5; Alderman Sidney, M.P., £5; W. S. Allen, Esq., £2; Mrs. R. Bowen, £2; Rev. G. Peake, £1 5s.; Messrs. Withington, £1 11s. 6d.; J. Starkey, £1 10s.; T. Hill, £1 10s.; T. Tibbetts, £1 1s.; W. Tibbetts, £1 1s.; —Crosbie, £1 1s.; and the persons who gave us a donation of £1 each: the trustees and Sabbath-school Committees for liberal donations in various stations, and all our numerous friends. We have received from the following stations:—Stafford, £126 4s. 5d.; Tunstall, £28 17s. 2d.; Nantwich and Crewe, £26 16s. 6d.; Wrockwardine Wood, £24 14s. 2d.; Briarley Hill, £14 15s. 6d.; Ramsor, £12 7s. 7d.; Westbromwich, £11 15s. 9d.; Darlaston, £9 12s. 5d.; Newcastle, £9 0s. 9d.; Bilston, £6 0s. 6d.; Oswestry, £5 4s. 6d.; Leominster and Weobley, £3 10s.; Leintwardine, £2 17s.; Cwm, £2 16s.; Whitechurch, £1 5s.; Lichfield, £1; and Bishop's Castle, £1 1s. 2d.

We record our gratitude to God, who has opened the hearts of those who have aided us in our great undertaking, and who has given us peace and prosperity, and enabled us to report an increase of members in our station every quarter during the last two years. R. BOWEN.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF A NEW CHAPEL AT LYDIARD MILLICENT, BRINKWORTH STATION.—On Monday, the 31st of August, many hundreds of persons assembled at Lydiard from Wootton Bassett, Tockenham, Lyneham, Grittenham, Brinkworth, Malmesbury, Sherston, Swindon, Purton, Cricklade, Broad Town, and other places, to witness this very interesting ceremony. At three o'clock the service was commenced by Mr. Samuel Humphries, of Nore Marsh, giving out the hymn, "Praise ye the Lord," &c., and after the hymn had been sung the Rev. D. Williams (Independent) solemnly engaged in prayer. The Rev. T. Powell, superintendent of the circuit, then read suitable portions of the Scriptures, and produced a bottle to be deposited in a cavity in the stone, containing a report of the last Primitive Methodist Conference, held in the Leeds Town Hall, a plan of the Brinkworth circuit, a bill of the foundation services, and a piece of parchment with the names of the architect, agent, and builder, also the name and residence of each trustee. He then, in the name of the trustees and friends, presented a mallet of famous dimensions, and also a silver trowel of beautiful design, to Mr. Humphries, at the same time very affectionately expressing his best wishes for the spiritual well-being of the whole family, and earnestly imploring God's richest blessing upon them. Mr. Humphries having laid the stone, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, counted out ten sovereigns upon it—a liberal offering where it was much needed and much appreciated. Several small sums followed, making in the total £50 at this service. Mr. Humphries then addressed the meeting. He remarked that though not a speech maker he approved speech-making. He rejoiced in the prosperity of all who loved our Lord Jesus Christ; he would cheerfully give all such the right hand of fellowship and bid them God speed. He honoured the Queen and loved his country, and gloried in the liberties which Englishmen enjoy; but he did not understand how one body of people could stand in the way and spoil all of another body who sought to serve their God. Primitive Methodism in this country had brought glory to God; it had obeyed the Divine injunction in seeking to preach the gospel to every creature. When the people would not come to hear the word of life, Primitive Methodists had in thousands of instances, carried it to them, and great good had been done.

At half past four the company, to the number of between 400 and 500, proceeded to a field, where tea was provided in a spacious marquee, after which a public meeting was held, and Mr. S. Gantley was unanimously voted to the chair. The Revs. D. Williams, W. T. Mace, T. Powell, S. West, E. Alford, C. Portnell, and G. Fowler addressed the meeting. The service was brought to a close about nine o'clock, and the friends returned to their homes rejoicing in what they had seen, heard, and felt that day. The total income for the day was about £40. Great credit is due to the parties who had the management, and here we tender our thanks to all who helped us, and believe the 31st of August, 1863, will be an eventful period in the history of Lydiard Millicent.

LITERARY NOTICES.

The power of the Tongue, or, Chapters for Talkers. By BENJAMIN SMITH, author of "Vice-Royalty," "Climbing," &c. London: John Mason, 66, Paternoster Row. 1863.

"DEATH and life are in the power of the tongue," was a wise saying of the wise man. And many are the instances in which the truth of this proverb receives fresh illustration. How needful we all find it to pray "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips." How necessary also is it to be frequently reminded that we should take heed to our ways, that we offend not with our tongue; and that if any man seem to be religious, and bridled not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Well, the volume before us is destined and adapted to bring these things impressively and usefully under notice. In examining it we are reminded of another text which says, "How forcible are right words," and still another, "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." "The importance of the human voice, the authorised standard of speech, the perfect model of speech, crimes perpetrated by wicked talkers, blunders committed by careless talkers, blessings conferred by wise talkers, words spoken by those around us, the correct estimate of our own words, elements of power in speaking, the voice a witness for its Maker, control over the tongue attained, and incentives to the right use of our lips," these are the subjects of so many interesting and instructive chapters. We have great pleasure in recommending this valuable and highly interesting volume to the notice of our readers.

Promise of the Father; or, a Neglected Speciality of the Last Days. Addressed to the Clergy and Laity of all Christian Communities. By the author of "The Way of Holiness," &c., &c. London: W. Tegg. Manchester: A. Weston, and W. Bremner.

We are not sure that our readers would know from the above title what is the subject of this volume. We think it would have been as well if the work had been entitled, "A Defence of Women's preaching," as such the work is.

Mrs. Palmer is well known as an American lady of distinguished piety, talent, and usefulness, and the authoress of several spiritual and popular books. She and her devoted husband, Dr. Palmer, have lately laboured in promoting a revival of religion in several parts of the United Kingdom, and many among those who have heard them, and some, doubtless, among those who have not, will be glad to peruse these earnest pages. We do not find much that is original or striking in the work, but the old arguments are worked up in an agreeable manner. There is a lack of condensation, which to certain persons will be objectionable, but on the whole the volume is readable and valuable. We suppose the excellent authoress may not be aware that there exists in these realms a Primitive Methodist denomination that has availed itself from the beginning of the labours of devoted women; otherwise, she might have qualified some of her conclusions. However, the reader who wishes to see the subject of female preaching fairly discussed, and the principal objections thereto answered, by "one of themselves," will do well to consult this work. We are fully satisfied no substantial Scriptural argument against the preaching of the gospel by holy and able women can be produced, but that, on the contrary, some striking examples of their having been so employed can readily be adduced from the inspired volume. Hence we think the different sections of the Christian Church ought to be cautious how they interfere with the call of such as God has qualified for this work, while at the same time they should guard against the employment of any whose call is not sustained by Scriptural evidence.

The Complete Works of Richard Sibbes, D.D. Edited by Rev. A. B. GROSE. Vol. VI. Containing: The Faithful Covenant, Josiah's Reformation, the Spiritual Favourite, the Successful Seeker, the Return of Praise, the Saint's Comforts, the Church's Complaint, God's Inquisition, Rich Poverty, Spiritual Mourning, Violence Victorious, Angel's Acclamations, Fruitful Labour, Matchless Love, a Heavenly Conference, King David's Epitaph, Lydia's Conversion, and the Bride's Longing.

SOME quaint things, a few objectionable sentiments, but a large proportion of precious thought. The author of the "Bruised Reed" that led to Baxter's conversion deserves to be well studied by his countrymen, even of this generation. There were giants in those days. This volume, like those that have preceded it, is beautifully got up, and is creditable alike to author, editor, and the publishers, who are Messrs. Nichol, of Edinburgh, and Nisbet, of London.

The Qualifications for the Christian Ministry Required by the Times. Being the substance of a sermon preached at Grimsby, on Tuesday evening, May 5th, 1863, before the Primitive Methodist Ministerial Mutual Improvement Association of the Hull district, and published by request of the association. By the Rev. JOHN PETTY. London: R. Davies, and all Primitive Methodist Ministers.

This admirable discourse is reprinted from the October number of the Magazine, and sells at two-pence. Those friends, therefore, who wish to have it in a portable form, those who do not subscribe for the Magazine, and those who may wish to distribute it gratuitously, can all be accommodated. We hope it will have a circulation equal to its great merits. Suppose some of our better-to-do friends were to present it to all the office-bearers of their respective stations, who can say how much good might result? It is, indeed, worthy of its esteemed author, of the Connexion to which he belongs, and of the important subject to which it relates. May it prove extensively useful!

Being the Twenty-first year of its publication, and Leap-year; by WILLIAM GARNER. Price one penny; with diary, &c., in leather, 6d.; with pocket-book, and elastic band, &c., 1s. 6d.

To all Primitive Methodists this Almanack presents strong claims. It contains a large amount of valuable information both denominational and general. Among other things it gives the statistics of the Connexion, a tabular list of the itinerant ministers, their ages, stations, and years of travelling, &c. It contains important information for gardeners, commercial men, ministers, and other classes; and the proceeds of its sale are devoted to the support of ministers who are past labour, ministers' widows, and fatherless children. Its circulation is extensive, but it deserves to be still more so. Our friends should apply for it at once to their circuit preachers.

Here and Hereafter. By the Rev. J. SIMPSON, author of "Smiles and Tears," "Prodigal Son," &c. London: W. Kent & Co., and R. Davies. One shilling.

This little book contains more than might be expected in it. It treats very comprehensively of our present duties and privileges, and our future destinies and prospects. It shows us how we may make the best of both worlds. It is written in its author's best style, and is well calculated to sustain his reputation. No one can carefully read it without being all the better mentally and morally for the performance. We hope it will be as widely circulated as the "Prodigal Son," and, sure we are, it will then prove very useful.

Cassell's Illustrated Bunyan. The Pilgrim's Progress. London: Cassell, Petter, & Galpin, Ludgate-hill, E.C. Quarterly section; section I. 1s. 6d.

WHAT next, and next? When will the respectable house of Cassell & Co. have done inventing something fresh, good, and cheap for the great reading public? Truly, this effort out Cassell's Cassell! Here is first-rate letter press, splendid illustrations, fine paper, 120 pages, quarto size, all for 1s. 6d. Poor old Bedford tinker and dreamer! Little did he see or know of what awaited him, when those weary years he lay in that dingy jail pondering o'er his Bible, and meditating his pilgrim. Little did he foresee what his pilgrim would come to, when he waited those years after he had written the work, before he could venture to send it to press. When the population of England and Wales was one fourth its present number, and those who could read, hardly, perhaps, one fourth of that, he might well hesitate; but the character of the people, and the stranger character of his book made him hesitate the more. Well, he ventured at last to go to press, and posterity echoes his applause. In all possible shapes and styles, and at all possible prices, his immortal allegory is now published and sold. By all sorts of readers his work is now perused. Southey, Arnold, Johnson, Macaulay, have been in their days sponsors for the child of the brain and heart of the quondam tinker. In its early infancy the litterati ridiculed it, but the great heart of humanity then beat in harmony with its sentiments, and now, all men respect it. Coleridge read it first for its poetry, next for its theology, and lastly for its devotion. The present edition is handsome enough for the aristocrat, and cheap enough for the peasant. May the enterprising publishers be rewarded by an immense demand!

Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. In very large type, with numerous illustrations. Published in weekly numbers at one penny each—to be completed in thirty-six weeks; also in monthly parts at fivepence each. Parts I. and II. London: The Book Society for Promoting Religious Knowledge among the Poor, 19, Paternoster-row.

Now our aged friends have presented such a "Bunyan" as we suppose they, long as they have lived, never saw before. They may put their glasses aside while they read this. It is beautifully printed for the poorest sight. The illustrations are good, and the work is exceedingly cheap. Only a large circulation can possibly make it pay. Let our readers recommend to all their aged acquaintances this capital edition of Bunyan.

Euclid's Plans Geometry Practically Applied. Book I. the Geometry of Plane Triangles, founded on SIMSON'S Text with explanatory notes, shewing the use of the Propositions, &c.; by HENRY GREEN, M.A. Manchester: J. Heywood. London: Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.

This neat edition of Euclid's First Book sells at sixpence in cloth. The work is very suitable for schools and private students.

The Standard Arithmetic. Three parts in one volume. By E. L. JONES. Price, in cloth, sixpence. London: Simpkin, Marshall and Co. Manchester; John Heywood, 143, Deansgate; 1863.

This appears to be a very excellent elementary work, well adapted both for schools and private tuition. Young persons who wish to have a cheap and useful handbook of arithmetic will do well to secure this.

A Pen and Ink Sketch of the Rev. Richard Roberts, Wesleyan Minister. By the Rev. R. WRENCH, author of "Who and What is Spurgeon?" London: W. J. Johnson, 83, Fleet-street. 1863. Eightpence.

MR. WRENCH is of the Gilfillan order of writers. He has a great taste for sketching character. The present is neither his first nor second effort: and if he go on as well hereafter as he has done hitherto, he may ultimately present us with a companion volume to Gilfillan's literary portraits. We hope he will. The gentleman whom Mr. W. introduces to his readers in the present pamphlet is possessed of striking traits, and is a good subject for a pen-and-ink sketch. He is very popular, both as a preacher and a lecturer. Next to Mr. Punshon, he is unquestionably the most popular preacher the Wesleyan Methodist community now has. He is a Welshman, which is by no means to his disadvantage. He has all the fervour and energy by which the preachers of the principality are commonly distinguished. Moreover, he has gone through a reasonable course of cultivation, and is endowed with a powerful imagination, and enjoys true religion and good health. We have herein indicated some of the elements of his popularity. As a Methodist preacher his fault is that his discourses are too ornate, so that many who may be charmed must fail to be spiritually profited by his preaching. We once heard him lecture, and were induced to think he copied Mr. Punshon in his style—not in his action. We should prefer his taking a different model. Flowers and glitter are well enough in their way, but they are not the most substantial and useful things after all. We apprehend Dr. Newton and Dr. Beaumont were very different preachers to the gentlemen named; and we are of opinion that different ones are required to effect the conversion of the world. Mr. Wrench has given a faithful description of his subject, but he is somewhat tautological. Condensation would make his sketch more acceptable.

The Watchman's Lantern; being a series of papers intended to throw light on the proceedings of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference and its representatives. London: G. J. Stevenson, Paternoster-row. 1s.

THIS volume reminds one of the flight of time, and the brevity of human life. Many of our readers will remember the stirring events which agitated the Methodist community nearly thirty years ago; and here they are brought again before us. And how short the period that has since elapsed now seems to us when we look back, and yet a generation has passed away in the time. O what changes in men and things in thirty years! Dr. Bunting, Dr. Newton, Dr. Beaumont, Edward Grindrod, Joseph Taylor, Samuel Jackson, Dr. Warren, Robert Eckett, and hosts besides, who were then prominent men in Methodism, are now silent in the grave. Nay they live in other scenes, and have loftier aims and engagements. Bickerings, the strife of tongues, and the war of words, so far as they are concerned, are now hushed for ever. How soon we who survive will be with them! May we be as ready as we trust they were! Let any person who wishes to see what was doing in those past days, about a theological institution and collateral subjects, refer to the present volume. It is a magazine of intelligence of that order. Some useful and many striking papers are herein contained. Wesleyan Delegate Takings; or short sketches of personal and intellectual character, as exhibited at the Wesleyan Delegate Meeting, held in Albion-street Chapel, London. 1850. London: G. J. Stevenson, Paternoster-row.

A handy little sketch-book, written con amore. Many of the gentlemen are done to the life, and as a recreation we could enjoy the Takings very well. Anyone solicitous to see and hear what sort of stuff the said delegate meeting of 1850 was made of, will do well to scan this volume.

Ministerial Portrait Gallery of the United Methodist Free Churches. Parts I. and II. London: G. J. Stevenson; Manchester: Heywood.

WE have here sketches by an able artist of Caughey, Eckett, Mann, Guttridge, M. Miller, and J. S. Withington. A good deal may be learnt by their perusal. Every man has his failings as well as his excellencies, and both the one and the other are brought out respecting the gentlemen named. A friend may think the sketches under-drawn, an enemy will think they are over-done. A stranger may get a pretty good idea of each subject by glancing through these portraits. Some of us may see things to be avoided, as well as things to be admired, in each. On the whole the portraits are true, and that is the most important matter; and then they are interesting and instructive. Tact and sincerity distinguish the writer or writers, and many persons will doubtless read the portraits with considerable pleasure.

OBITUARY.

If our organs of vision had been fitted to perceive the flight of spirits, what multitudes of Primitive Methodists might have been seen winging their way from earth to heaven. They fly as a cloud and as doves to their windows, and the number is constantly swelling. They have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, and, therefore, when liberated from their probationary condition, they depart to be for ever with the Lord. Among the number of departed ones we must now count the late MRS. HANNAH SMITH. Her trial life commenced December 16th, 1799, at Windley, and ended, January 8th, 1863, at Derby. In early life she became acquainted with the founders of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, who were entertained at the houses of her parents and her brother. In 1826 she passed from death unto life, and received the assurance that she was become an adopted daughter of the Lord Almighty. But such had been her amiable disposition and exalted morality that this glorious change in her spiritual condition and relationships was not strikingly visible to her friends. But notwithstanding the excellence of her former life, she was perfectly conscious of the vast change she had experienced, and feeling her obligation to God and his people, as well as her personal need of Christian fellowship, she joined the Primitive Methodists, and soon became the stay and leader of the society to which she belonged. Some time after she became the wife of Mr. Thomas Smith, a local preacher, and removed to Derby, when she united with the society of which she remained a valuable member till she was called to the skies. Her life was not marked by any singular and exciting incidents, but was like the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Her consistency of conduct and purity of life were unchallenged; her deportment was such as becometh the gospel of Christ; her industry was seldom surpassed; she was not slothful in business; her husband found in her a helpmeet indeed. When he found a wife he found a good thing, and obtained favour from the Lord. But she was not more diligent in things temporal than in things spiritual. She was fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. Her piety was not fitful and noisy, but constant, quiet, earnest. Her attendance at chapel was exemplary. After attending to business till the Saturday evening was far advanced, she arose on the Sabbath morning to attend the prayer meeting at seven o'clock. This practice was continued till she was considerably advanced in years. And, of course, she could get to the preaching in the forenoon. Those who rise soon enough to attend the morning prayer-meeting are seldom unable to get to the service in the Sabbath forenoon. Her class meetings were most punctually attended, and other services were not neglected. Three times a day she and her husband worshipped God together through a lengthened series of years. Her husband was never kept from his duties by her, but was urged to discharge them. Her house for many years was a home for ministers, and her liberality in supporting God's cause was systematic. She regularly subscribed to the Bible Society, our Missionary Society, and kindred institutions. She subscribed not from impulse but conviction. With her giving was one important branch of practical religion. She did not pray for the coming of God's kingdom and refuse to contribute for the accomplishment of what she prayed for: she showed her sincerity and the strength of her desires by her contributions. Her religious experience was like her outer life, very regular and very good. She had fellowship with God, and called him Father by the Holy Ghost, who had been given unto her. The blood of Jesus Christ cleansed her from sin, and she had the strongest assurance of salvation by faith. Her death corresponded with her life; she was prepared for the change, and was not dismayed in prospect of it. Her removal is a loss to the church at Derby, but those she has left behind have the fullest persuasion that she is a glorified spirit in the presence of her Saviour. May each of her earthly companions hereafter rejoice in the worship of Him that sitteth upon the throne. So prays—SAMUEL ARTHUR.

Died in the Lord, at Wootton Bassett, Brinkworth circuit, Mrs. ELIZABETH HUMPHRIES, aged sixty-nine years.

As my beloved mother was not favoured with religious training whilst young, she knew but little of religious influences until about five years after she was married, when, under a sermon preached in the open-air at Broad Town by a Wesleyan preacher, she felt her soul awakened and her conscience aroused; she then became a hearer of the Word amongst them. Some time after the Primitive Methodists visited the neighbourhood, and in the year 1826 they built a chapel, and she then became a seatholder and a hearer amongst them. She often felt wept under the word on account of her soul, but was fearful and timid to join the Church in consequence of her numerous and complicated trials, lest she should do something detrimental to its interest. The Lord having converted one of her sons, and he having thrown in his lot with the Primitives, this had a great influence on her mind and helped to bring her also to a decision on that point.

In the year 1840, she united with the same people by becoming a member of Mrs. Miles' class. This step she never regretted; but often expressed her thankfulness for the good she received at those means of grace under her pious and judicious leader. Her religion was not of the showy or professional kind only, but consisted in the enjoyment of great and good principles, which developed themselves in her life. This was apparent in her parental affection and her solicitude for the conversion of her children; in her rigid adherence to justice and uprightness in her commercial transactions; in her decision and promptitude in her social and business habits; in her attendance on the means of grace, and her support of the cause of God both in general and in special matters.

In the year 1831 my father died, having been ill and unable to attend much to business for nearly four years, leaving my mother a widow with ten children in circumstantial embarrassment. She at once resolved to struggle as well as possible with her heavy family; and this she did early and late. Her eldest son took the lead in the business under her judicious counsel and judgment, and the rest of the family acted in subordination. Thus, by united effort, under the blessing of God, success was secured. After seventeen years of her widowhood, and having the means then by her—although under no legal obligation—yet, feeling a moral obligation—she called all the creditors together, to whom money was owing at my father's death, and paid them the whole; at the same time telling them, that it was her Bible that taught her to take this course.

In the year 1851, she retired from business, and settled down at Wootton Bassett, in the midst of her numerous family. During her retirement she was very devotional and attentive to the public and private means of grace, excepting when prevented by affliction. Her chief reading was the Bible and our magazines—the former was her every day book. She took to her bed on returning from our family meeting, held at her eldest son's, January 2nd 1863, and never rallied. During her few days' confinement to her bed she was quite rational, and conversed freely until the 9th, when her family met by her side; then, like the patriarch, she gave each her advice and blessing: taking the eldest by the hand she addressed him, and so proceeded with each according to age, till she came to the last. This was deeply affecting, especially whilst she was addressing an unconverted son. Her work on earth was now done. She said but little after, excepting to reply to any question put to her. When told she was dying, she said, "Bless God, it will soon be over." Her end was calm and peaceful. Thus died my honoured mother, on Tuesday, January 13th, having lived in the neighbourhood fifty years, and been respected by all, loved by many, and so far as is known, hated by none. As a wife she was faithful, industrious, and careful; as a mother she used strict discipline with her family, but she was kind, tender-hearted, and instructive; as a widow she was virtuous, a keeper at home, and not a busybody; as a neighbour she was peaceable and obliging; and as a Christian she was humble and sincere. She was interred in a family vault in the burial-ground belonging to the chapel at Broad Town, to await with two of her daughters a glorious resurrection to eternal life. She has left behind, to mourn their loss—but to rejoice in her gain—seven children, forty-five grandchildren, and a great number of friends.

ISAAC HUMPHRIES.

THOMAS JOBLING, junr., son of the Rev. Thomas Jobling, was early taught the necessity, importance, and advantage of possessing experimental and practical godliness. He saw that God demanded his first and best days,—that true religion would be an ornament of grace to his head, and chains of glory about his neck. He chose Christ for his portion. It was on July 18th, 1858, in a prayer-meeting in King Street chapel, Salford, when he yielded his heart to God, believed, and was saved. He was in earnest. He attended to the fire the Lord had kindled in his soul, and from the day of his conversion to the day of his decease, he was a consistent member in our society, steady in his walk, regular in his use of the means of grace, and thirsted for Christian knowledge. He had had a good education and possessed good natural abilities. Amongst his papers have been found some excellent essays, and, allowing for his youth, they do great credit to his head, and to his heart. And among his papers have also been found some pious soliloquies, and in others, expressions of his confidence in the truth, power, and blessedness of Christianity, as a system of doctrines and laws, and as a moral lever to raise the world. Many judged he was destined to fill a larger sphere—that he promised well to be a blessing to the Church and to the world. But the Lord has taken him. From the firm of Sir James Watts, and Co. we have received high testimonials of his excellent character. But how uncertain is life! Death meets us everywhere, and may attack us at any time. On the evening of September 11th, 1862, he read eighty-six pages of the "Martyr of the Tongas." After supper he conducted family prayer, then with his brother repaired to his bed-chamber, where for a time he knelt in private prayer, then undressed himself, lay down in bed, and in a few minutes breathed his last—having only just entered on his eighteenth year. O how sudden! Truly we know not the day of our death, nor what a day, or an hour may bring forth. Our young brother has finished his work and ended his day—he has crossed over Jordan before us. With his weeping family we vow to meet him in the world of immortal life and glory.

W. ROWZ.

P.S.—"Dear Brother Antliff,—

"Although the death of my beloved sen Thomas was so sudden that neither relative or friend had the satisfaction of receiving a word from him in his transition from health to death, yet, it is pleasing to find among his papers one in pencil containing his views and feelings as to the adequacy of true Christianity to support the soul both in life and death; of which paper the following is a verbatim copy:—

“But a man, a Christian man, who has proved that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation, requires no stronger evidence, no arguments of a more thrilling nature, to prove that Christianity is of God, or is the only true religion, than the peace of mind which he possesses, the happiness of which he is the subject, and the numerous answers which he has received to his prayers both for temporal and spiritual blessings, along with the blessed prospect which cheers him while passing through this wilderness, namely, that of seeing the ‘land which is afar off,’ there ‘to range the sweet plains on the banks of the river,’ there to spend an eternity with the blood-washed throng, and join in the chorus of Hosanna! Hosanna! What an argument is this for Christianity! Let the infidel rest in his objections, this is the religion for me, which will best sustain me when my head is bowed on the bed of death, it will fill my heart with praise and my lips with blessings, when family and friends come around my couch to receive the last adieu.” “THOMAS JOBLING.”

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Ogbourne St. George, on the 30th of May, 1862, DINAH CRAWK, the daughter of John and Susan Lye. Her parents not being pious, she lived until the age of fourteen a stranger to God. She was then sent to a Sabbath school, and there she was taught the way to the Kingdom, and found peace through believing in Jesus. In the year 1835 she cast in her lot with the Primitive Methodists, and her house was always open for the ministers of the Gospel. Her Christian course was not smooth, for she was frequently tempted by the great enemy of souls, and her mind's eye often darkened by doubts and fears; but by grace she endured to the end. A fortnight before her death she had a mighty conflict with the devil, but she overcame him through the blood of Christ. Her end was peace. She has left behind a husband and seven children, who mourn the loss of an affectionate wife and loving mother. May they be saved eternally. Amen.

H. PORTNALL.

ELIZABETH DAWES departed this life August 27, 1862, aged twenty-nine years, at Emmeth, Wisbeach Circuit. In early life she became a scholar in our Wisbeach Sunday School, where she received those impressions which resulted in her conversion to God, and becoming a member of our society. Being considered a suitable person, she was appointed to a class as teacher, an office which she continued to hold till called to her heavenly home. A few years ago she had to bear the heavy loss by death of her pious widowed mother and her two sisters, and her two brothers left this part of the country—one removed to the north of England, the other to Australia, where they still continue to reside. These bereavements were bravely endured by our departed sister, who, instead of giving way to melancholy and unavailing repinings, put forth her energies in useful toil, by which means she was able to keep herself respectable, and contribute to the cause of God. She was an active, steady, judicious, and diligent worker in the Church of God, and took a lively interest in whatever tended to extend or build up the Redeemer's Kingdom. But neither piety nor good management could keep away disease. Consumption had marked her for its prey. This she had apprehended as likely to be the case, some of her family having died of that disorder; she, therefore, made provision for the evil day by depositing a little money in the Savings' Bank, that she might not have to depend on the charity of others in the time of affliction. Her faith was strong in God, and she cheerfully endured her sufferings. Her anchor being cast into that which is within the veil, her bark outrode the storms of life.

Her affliction was of four or five months' continuance, during which time grace was triumphant; and those who visited her found her firmly trusting in God. In the course of her affliction she many times expressed her admiration of the kind Providence that had found for her so comfortable a home, and such attentive friends as Mr. and Mrs. Gibson were—the friends at whose house she died. On August 25th, two days before her demise, I spent most of the afternoon with her. I found her suffering, but happy in her soul. The next morning she was taken worse, and felt that death was rapidly approaching. Her joy became ecstatic, and while her strength lasted she continued to speak in rapturous language of “the opening heavens,” “the dear departed friends,” and “the precious Saviour.” In this happy state she closed her eyes upon mortality. The weary wheels of life stood still, and her peaceful spirit glided away from earth to enter upon that state where she is

ISABELLA BENSON, the wife of Mr. Anthony Benson (our circuit steward), was born at Workington, Cumberland, February 5th, 1798, of poor but honest and industrious parents. She lived after the course of this world until the age of twenty-nine, when it pleased the Lord to remove from her by death her first husband. This painful event brought her to serious reflection, and resulted in her conversion to God, when she immediately united with the Wesleyans.

In the year 1831, she became the wife of him who is now left to mourn his loss. After this, having accompanied him to hear the Primitives at Harrington, where they then resided, both of them resolved that, "This people shall be my people, and their God shall be my God." And thenceforth she continued an honourable member to the day of her death—a period of twenty-four years. The testimony given of her by her bereaved husband is, that she was an affectionate wife, industrious, and in all things faithful, and ardently attached to the means of grace. Her seat at class was seldom or never vacant; her leader says her experience was that of a soul ardently panting after God. At the last class-meeting she attended, she expressed her gratitude to God for having kept her a member of his Church so many years, and her hope that when the summons of death should come she would be able,

"To clap her glad wings and soar away,
And mingle with the blaze of day."

Her removal hence was sudden and unexpected. On the Wednesday prior to her death she seemed much disposed for praise and prayer, frequently saying, "Lord bless me;" and "Lord, help me to the end;" and then with her remaining strength she broke forth in singing,

"There will be no more sorrow there;—
In heaven above, where all is love,
There will be no more sorrow there!"

On Friday, August 29th, she fell asleep in Jesus, aged sixty-four years.

T. YATES.

Died at Lynn, in Norfolk, August 30th, 1862, ANN BILLING, aged forty-six years. She was brought to God under the labours of the Primitive Methodists in the year 1834. She immediately on giving her heart to God identified herself with his people, and evinced a desire to be made a blessing to others. She entered the Sabbath-school and laboured successfully therein for about twelve years. When our High Gate Sabbath-school was opened, she, in connection with some others, visited every house in that part of the town, soliciting children to attend the school.

When our benevolent society was formed she was chosen as one of its visitors. In this she took great interest, and was made a blessing to many. Our departed sister was a woman of much prayer and strong faith, and was very successful in leading penitent sinners to the cross. She was a member of our sewing society, and also of the choir, and was much beloved in those circles of friends. Her last affliction, which was a very painful one, continued about seventeen weeks, during which time she was always found trusting in the Lord, believing her heavenly Father was too wise to err and too good to be unkind. Her little daughter, Mary Ann, died on July 22nd, 1862, aged thirteen years. It was an affecting sight to see the mother and daughter both lying in a dying state. On one occasion the child, seeing her mother suffering acute pain, affectionately said, "Cheer up, mother, we shall reach the shore." The dear child died in peace, and in about three weeks after they met in heaven's better land, where,

"Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

On another occasion, when two of the friends visited her and asked her the state of her mind, she said, "I have no ecstasy, but I feel a solid peace, I am on the rock, cleaving to Christ, I feel quite safe, I have no distressing fears, I feel quite calm, it is the Lord, and he will do right." I and Mrs. Dawson visited her several times, and on one occasion her mind seemed wonderfully elevated, while we were at prayer she lifted up her eyes, and raising her hand, shouted "Glory! glory! glory!" At another time, when very near the Jordan, she was asked respecting her prospects; she said, "I am struggling in the billows; I cannot see the harbour lights yet, but I shall; the pier is not yet in sight, but it will soon appear. I am struggling to get free. I have a holy trust; I am in my Father's arms; I feel quite safe." When the long-looked-for hour came, it was not an hour of darkness. When her feet were in the river, and death's dew was on her cold brow, her countenance was lit with an unearthly smile. A friend said, "He is coming, Jesus is coming with a host to fetch you home," and although articulation had almost ceased she lifted up her eyes and exclaimed, "Yes, yes;" and sank into the arms of death. Thus died this excellent woman, who during the twenty-eight years of her membership never cost the Church a sigh till it lost her. She has left a husband and two children behind to lament their loss. May they all meet her in heaven. Amen.

G. DAWSON.

[How suddenly the writer of the above sweet sketch has been called to join the sister whom he so meetly described. After walking out on Saturday, August 29th, he took his dinner, reclined on his couch, and without a word, we understand, he fell asleep in Jesus.—ED.]

ISABELLA, the wife of John GATEHOUSE, left this world of toil and trouble, and entered into the joy of her Lord, August 31st, 1862, at Birtley, in the Leintwardine branch of the Ludlow Circuit, aged forty-five years. She was the daughter of David and Mary Thompson, both members of the Primitive Methodist Connexion. She was converted to God more than twenty years ago, and joined our community, of which she continued a steady and consistent member until she joined the church triumphant. On the 2nd of April, 1844, she was united in marriage to the writer, who is now left with one son to mourn her loss; but he has the consoling hope of meeting her again on the shores of immortality. She was of a delicate and nervous constitution, consequently, she was rather irritable, which oftentimes caused her grief; nevertheless, she had a kind and benevolent heart, and a strong attachment to the people of God, and her liberality in support of his cause was only limited by the smallness of her means; for I bear her record that if her means had been equal to the benevolence of her heart, she seemed to me as if she would have supported the whole Primitive Methodist Connexion. And if a cup of cold water given to a servant of Christ for the Master's sake shall not lose its reward, she will not lose hers. Her house was always open to receive the servants of the Lord, and great was her joy in ministering to their necessities. They were always welcome to the best she could provide. Many ministers and members of our beloved Connexion would gladly give their testimony to the truth of this statement. She loved God's house, and thither would she go every Sabbath, unless prevented by illness, and with attentive ear would she listen to the Word of life, from which she drew strong consolation. For many years she was a subscriber for our large magazines, and with delight she perused their contents. Owing to her nervous temperament, she was very timid and fearful, and esteemed herself one of the unworthiest of God's people, and some years since, when affliction brought her near the gate of death, and it was thought impossible she could recover, she was very timid and fearful of death; but the time was not yet come. When it did come the Lord took care of her. Truly he carries the lambs in his bosom. Her doubts and fears all left her, and her sun set without a cloud. Her last illness was of short duration—only one week. Her feeble frame sank fast, but her sufferings were not severe. The Lord dealt gently with her; no enemy was suffered to approach to molest her at the last. She manifested no fear or doubt, but with confidence in the all-sufficiency of her Saviour's merits, she peacefully, without a sigh or struggle, fell asleep in the arms of Jesus.

"O may I triumph so,
When all my warfare's past;
And dying, find my latest foe
Beneath my feet at last."

J. GATEHOUSE.

JOHN FARNDALE, son of Joseph and Mary Farndale, was born at Nunthorpe, near Ayton, in Yorkshire, and died at New Shildon, Darlington Circuit, September 1st, 1862, aged forty-three years. His parents were moral, and his mother has for a number of years been connected with the Wesleyan Society. About eighteen years ago he removed to New Shildon, and began occasionally to attend the chapel, but did not become decidedly religious until about four years ago, when there was a gracious revival. For some time he was under heavy conviction, and could not find any rest for his soul, until one day when at work alone, he realized a sense of sin forgiven, and was made happy in God. He immediately joined our society, and remained a steady, consistent, and devoted Christian up to the time of his death. He was a teacher in our Sabbath-school, and laboured with much earnestness in our prayer meetings. He was emphatically a man of prayer, not only in his closet, but he regularly conducted family worship, reading his Bible and praying with and for his family. About three years ago the disease which terminated in his death commenced; but in all his affliction he was resigned to the will of God. He was frequently visited by the friends, who generally found him with a Bible or Testament near him, repeating such passages as the following: "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." "Our light afflictions, which are but for a moment," &c., and "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil."

In the last struggle he was more than conqueror; death to him had lost its sting. He exclaimed in triumph, "Glory be to God! Glory be to God!" About half an hour before he died, he called his children to him and told them to love Jesus, and be good to their mother, and then he softly fell asleep in Jesus.

J. WORSKOP.

HANNAH, the wife of Charles RHODES, Esq., was born at Bradford, Yorkshire, February 3rd, 1792, and was removed to the land of immortal light on the 10th of September, 1862. She began in early life to serve the Lord—in the year 1807 she was enabled by faith in the Saviour to realize peace with God. She then joined the Wesleyans, with whom she remained a zealous and active member until the year 1829. She then cast in her lot with our people; and thus for fifty-five years she was a valued and consistent member of the Christian Church. Her life was one of pious devotion, of holy communion with God, of high spirituality of mind. Her life was hid with Christ in God, manifesting its internal existence by an outward stream of gentleness and affection, and in many works of faith and labours of love. During the last two years of her life her bodily afflictions were very great, but these only tended to test her state of grace, and to mature her experience in the deep things of God. Her death-bed was made solemnly cheerful to all her friends by the placid resignation and heavenly temper she manifested, and by her continually noticing the mercy and goodness of God to herself and her family. And she fervently prayed that she might meet them all at the right hand of the Judge at the last day. Such were her patient suffering and her cheerful submission to the will of God that our hearts have often been affected, as were the hearts of all who knew how keen were her sufferings. At intervals, when she had an alleviation of pain, her joy and thankfulness were very great; and often, very often, did she say, "Praise the Lord, O my soul!" Her last words on earth were, "Praise the Lord!"

W. JACKSON.

[We have lately received intelligence of the death of her husband. In their death they were not long divided.—Ed.]

SELINA, wife of Samuel SIMS, of Holbrook, Belper Circuit, died in the Lord, Aug. 16th, 1862, aged twenty-five years. She suffered much and long prior to her decease; but when told by her attendant to look to God for help, she joyfully replied, "O bless the Lord! he does help me; before I call he answers, and while I am yet speaking he hears." J. BARFOOT.

MILLCENT, the beloved wife of Mr. William SPENCER, Circuit Steward, of Belper, died in great peace, Aug. 22nd, 1862, aged sixty-two years. She had been a consistent member of our Belper society about thirty-eight years. Some of her last words were, "He does save me," "He does save me," "Victory! victory!" "Jesus is precious!" After solemnly charging her children to meet her in heaven, she quietly fell asleep in Jesus. J. BARFOOT.

JOSEPH HALLSWORTH, Cross of Hands, Belper Circuit, departed to be with Christ, Sept. 5th, 1862, in the eighty-second year of his age. He had been a good member about twenty years, generally walking to the meetings, a distance of about a mile, with two sticks. His end was joyful.

J. BARFOOT.

Died at Redmile, Bottesford Circuit, Sept. 6, 1862, aged fifty-nine, FRANCES, the wife of Thomas STEVENSON, farmer. From the Magazines for 1832, page 50; 1839, page 97; and 1840, page 215, may be gathered the fact that the parents and family of our departed sister were, in the hands of God, the principal means of originating the society, raising the chapel, and commencing our Sabbath School in Redmile. The pioneers of our Connexion in the vale of Belvoir,—Benton, Wedgwood, Heath, &c., were befriended by the Stockwells at a time when friends were few and foes were many; and the preachers were sometimes rudely handled by the mob. All honour to those friends and families who stood by those men of God in their bonds, and who said, "Come unto my house and abide there!" And from the commencement of the Connexion in this part of the country to the present time, nothing could ever shake the attachment of this honoured family to our people. Their large and beautiful dwelling still welcomes the poorest local preacher. Six of the family form a part of the society, and the father stands at the head of the local preachers on the circuit's plan. Our departed sister was converted to God when twenty years old, and generally during the thirty-nine years of her Christian profession, her evidence was very clear. With her the experience of God's love was a delightful theme. She was generally first to speak in the love-feast. And when it became her lot to pass through a long fiery ordeal of affliction, so that for six or seven years she could neither attend the public means nor take much part in any exercise at home, she submitted with becoming patience; and as the time drew nigh that she must put off her tabernacle, she had no objection so to do. Her calm composure of mind on coming face to face with death was very striking: "Lord, loose me if it be thy will," she repeatedly said. A firmer reliance on the atonement, a clearer assurance of adoption, or a stronger faith relative to soon being in heaven, I have seldom found.

J. NORTON.

Died recently, at Hoyland Common, Hoyland Branch, WILLIAM WILSON, in the forty-first year of his age. He was blessed with a pious mother, through whose influence and that of the preaching of the Gospel, he was led as a penitent to the feet of Jesus. He continued to enjoy a sense of God's pardoning love for some time, but, like many others, in an evil hour he lost his confidence in God and returned to the world. He remained in a backsliding condition for some time. However, not being satisfied with the husks that the swine eat, he returned to his Father's house, and found through the intercession of Christ a gracious reception. He united with our people at the above place, and continued steadfast to the day of his death. He was a coal miner, and consequently it was his task to earn his livelihood in the bowels of the earth. On Sept. 12th, 1862, he committed his family to the care of Him who has promised to protect the fatherless and widow (as he was wont to do before taking his leave of them for the day). Little did they think this was his last farewell—that the next time they would see him he would be a mangled corpse. Such was the case. Whilst at work two large stones fell from the roof, and his head was crushed between them. He died in a very short time, without being able to speak or ever becoming conscious. How true that

"Dangers stand thick through all the ground
To push us to the tomb."

The society has sustained the loss of a truly good man, the family a loving husband and kind father; but our loss is "his infinite gain." S. HICKLING.

DOROTHY POVEY, of Blaronpoint, in the Chester Circuit, died in peace September 14th, 1862, aged eighty-three years. She was brought to a knowledge of divine things in early life, her father being a class-leader amongst the Wesleyans. When our people first visited this part of the country, she received them into her house and joined the society. In her daily walk and conversation she gave Christ and religion the first place. She loved the means of grace, and was a devoted reader of the sacred Scriptures; and, although not able to attend the house of God for many years in consequence of bodily infirmity, she held fast the better part, and could rejoice in prospect of her removal from earth to heaven; and when the day of her departure came, having bid her friends farewell, she clasped her hands together and exclaimed, "Heaven, O heaven!" and her spirit fled from its earthly house. W. JONES.

Died, on the 18th day of September, 1862, Mrs. JANE RILEY, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, in the sixty-third year of her age.

Mrs. Riley was born at Kelso, in Scotland; but from a child she resided in Newcastle. For a while she attended a Sunday school in connection with a Baptist church, but her mother dying, family duties broke off her attendance rather early, which was a matter of regret to her in afterlife. About thirty-three years ago she was induced by her husband to attend the preaching of the Primitive Methodists, not long after which she became decided on the great subject of religion, and joined the Church. Being of a quiet, reserved disposition, she excelled in the passive rather than the active virtues. She was an humble, a meek, a charitable, an industrious, and a patient Christian, loving the means of grace, but frequently hindered from attending by home duties, being the mother of twelve children, eight of whom are still living. She said but little of her religious enjoyments, but she repressed the ungodly in the spirit of meekness, and otherwise endeavoured to promote the temporal and spiritual welfare of her family and others. Through much tribulation she entered the kingdom. Her end was strikingly sudden. Her health had been indifferent for a considerable period, but she appeared to be something better awhile before her decease. Early on the morning of Thursday, Sept. 18th, 1862, she was seized with a fit of apoplexy, which deprived her of speech, and at two in the afternoon of the same day her spirit returned to God. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." W. DENT.

THOMAS PARTLETT was born at Northleigh, in the Witney Station, in the year 1829, and expired September 18th, 1862. We know but little of his youthful life, more than he was rude, and in every respect uncultivated, pursuing a ruinous and downward course, unrestrained by domestic discipline and paternal authority. He was arrested in his carnal pursuits and constrained to abandon his former practices by the powerful and affectionate entreaties of a few pious soul-seekers connected with our small society at New Yatt; by them he was led to attend the house of God, and when at one of our services at Coate, in the Faringdon Station, he was subdued and brought into liberty while the little Church were singing, under a divine influence.

"There is a fountain filled with blood."

From the service he went home, entered the Church, and, without a known flaw, maintained a Christian course to the day of his death. His mind, under gospel teaching and divine influence, soon began to unfold and to evince signs of usefulness. Twelve months after his conversion he was honoured with a place on the circuit's plan, but in consequence of affliction, he was prevented from rendering great assistance as a preacher of the word of life. His disease was consumption, which laid him aside from his labours. Though his affliction was of long duration, his fine spirit and unshaken confidence in the promises, secured for him friends and un-failing support.

His death was easy and triumphant. As he was entering the valley, he waved his hand, and with a smiling face his happy spirit entered his eternal home.

Mrs. ARTHUR, the beloved wife of Mr. Evan Arthur, of Oswestry, died in peace, September 22nd, 1862, aged fifty-one years. Our departed sister was brought to know Jesus as her Saviour, about twenty-six years ago, in a prayer meeting at Knockin Heath, Oswestry circuit. She at once joined the Church, and continued a worthy member to the day of her death. She showed her faith by her works—she was a burning and shining light. If we look at her as a wife, she was truly devoted to the interests of her husband. In business she had but few equals. She was not “slothful in business,” but diligent, honest, and persevering; and to these qualities her sorrowing husband is deeply indebted for his present easy temporal circumstances. She was not forgetful of his spiritual welfare, but sought to help him on to God—she was a helpmeet indeed. As a member of the Church, she was of great worth. Mrs. Arthur could always be depended upon; no one ever questioned but she would be at her post, unless something took place to hinder her over which she had no control. At camp meetings, tea meetings, &c., she might always be seen helping on the work, not selecting her place and work, but doing whatever her hand found to do, and doing it with her might. She could hew wood, or draw water, or take a higher place, without murmuring or complaining. She shrunk not from duty because there might be some difficulty in the way. When Oswestry Circuit was passing through deep waters, and it was feared that Oswestry Chapel would be lost, she was one of the few that stood by the cause, and laboured for its right; and she had the pleasure of seeing it again prosper. Her constancy won the respect and love of all who knew her. She was looked up to by the Church in general, but among the young converts she was especially useful; to her they would run with their little troubles, and from her they would be sure to receive a word of comfort and encouragement. During her last affliction, by them she was frequently visited, and those visits were often highly beneficial to both parties. On one occasion several of the young people were in her room; while she spoke to them the glory of the Lord filled the place, and they felt as though “quite on the verge of heaven.” That time, by those present, will never be forgotten.

Her last affliction was very painful—cancer in her face—but it was borne with Christian fortitude. For eighteen months she was in the furnace, but no murmur escaped her lips. If her friends remarked, “Your sufferings are great;” she would reply, “Yes, but the Lord is very good to me; he will not lay more on me than I can bear. Bless his name!” When she could not speak, she raised her hand as a sign that all was right. So she lived, laboured, suffered, and died, leaving an unquestioned testimony that she is gone to be with Christ, which is far better.

MONTHLY SUMMARY.

The Protestants in St. Domingo (that part of the island of Hayti, belonging to the government of Spain) who have had a settlement there since 1834, which was confirmed by a treaty of peace with the British Government in 1850, and which was further ratified in 1861 by a proclamation which declared valid all the acts of the Dominican Government since 1854, were surprised on the 22nd March last by the Commanding General at Puerto Plata sending to the Wesleyan minister of that place a royal order to prohibit him from continuing the celebration of Divine service in his chapel, and from exercising his ministerial functions in any part of his district. The Protestants there have forwarded a petition to the Committees of the Wesleyan Society in London, and of the Evangelical Alliance. This protest has been supported by the English vice-consul at Puerto Plata, and has received about 150 signatures. The number of Protestants settled in the districts of Puerto Plata and Samana is estimated at about 1200.

On the 1st of July last Holland made free the whole of her West Indian slaves, amounting to 45,000. Great rejoicings have been manifested among the emancipated slaves, and great order has been maintained.

The Rev. Moses D. Hoge, from the Confederate States of South America, has written an article in “Christian Work” for October, in which he explains the reasons of his forwarding the Confederate ministerial paper to that journal a few months ago. He maintains his former ground, and contends against certain statements made by the correspondents who had written against the insertion of the paper in "Christian Work."

M. Renan, a French author, has lately published a book on "Christianity," which is occasioning a good deal of excitement in France, Italy, England, and elsewhere. It seems to hold Socinian notions in some passages, and in others it is decidedly sceptical. Like the Essays and Reviews, and Colenso's books, it aims a blow at "the glorious gospel of the blessed God." But like those productions it will, we anticipate, be shown to be unphilosophical as well as unscriptural and unsound; and good may come out of intended evil. Our faith in the word of God is not in these days to be seriously disturbed by the babblings of these uncircumcised Philistines.—The Wesleyans are celebrating the Jubilee of their missionary society with right good will. Ten thousand pounds were promised in one day in Leeds towards the objects aimed at. The venerable William Naylor and Thomas Jackson preached sermons, along with other eminent ministers, at Leeds. The Yorkshire Methodists have given the movement a good start; London, Manchester, and other places will worthily follow.—The shock of an earthquake was extensively felt in the west, south, and north of England early in the morning of the 6th ult. No serious results, so far as we know, followed the occurrence; but a good deal of alarm was experienced.—Archbishop Whately, the author of works on Logic, Rhetoric, and several other subjects, died on Thursday, October 8th. He was seventy-six years of age. Dr. Gaussen, too, an able German theologian, has passed away.—The seventeenth annual Conference of the British organization of the Evangelical Alliance has been held in Dublin. It is said the gathering was a very happy and successful one. Interesting addresses were delivered by gentlemen from Sweden, Germany, and other countries.—The Lancashire distress seems to be gradually abating, and we hope the worst of it, at all events, is past. The present winter will doubtless be much better than the last.—Government has appointed Bishop Trower to be the new Bishop of Gibraltar. While a Scotch Bishop he gained an unenviable notoriety by his tractarian and tyrannical proceedings. He even excommunicated the Duke of Argyll, some years ago, for attending a Presbyterian place of worship. One may say in the language of Oliver Cromwell, in his maiden speech in Parliament, "If these are the steps to Church preferment, what are we to expect?"—Another batch of emigrants, in connection with the Nonconformists, has lately gone to Albert land, New Zealand.—Our friends in Norfolk have just opened three good chapels at East Dereham, Thetford, and Watton. Chapel building is advancing also, in both London and other parts of the country. On the whole the Connexion is steadily moving upward and onward. May the Divine glory soon cover the land! Amen.

NEED OF JESUS.

I NEED thee, precious Jesus,
To cleanse me from my sin,
To fill me with thy fulness,
And make me pure within.
I need thee in the sunshine,
As well as in the storm,
To guard me from the tempter,
And keep my soul from harm.

I need thee, precious Jesus,
I need thee as my Friend;
In travelling life's intricate maze,
Do thou my steps attend.

I need thee, yes I need thee,
When earth appears so bright,
When pleasures press upon my path
In false, deceitful light.

I need thee, precious Jesus,
When trials on me press,
When burdened with the cares of life,
I long for perfect rest.
I need thee, that my Father's will
May be fulfilled in me;
And trusting, lovingly submit
To thy all-just decree.

BIOGRAPHY.

MEMOIR OF THE REV. ROBERT KAYE.

THE REV. ROBERT KAYE was the second son of Evan and Catharine Kaye, and was born February 25th, 1804, near Port-e-chee, in the parish of Braddan, Isle of Man. His parents endeavoured to bring up their children in the fear of God. His mother, in particular, was assiduous in imparting to them religious instruction and admonition, and her efforts were not in vain. She sought to impress on their minds the propriety and necessity of keeping holy the Sabbath-day, of being honest and truthful, and of revering the Divine Being in all things. But as the subject of this sketch grew up he exemplified the propriety of the language of the Scripture which says, "Evil communications corrupt good manners," for he began to associate with young men of corrupt morals, who led him occasionally into outward immoralities; and being naturally of an ardent temperament, and possessing a high degree of daring, his conduct sometimes was most hostile to God.

In youth he was sent to school in Douglas, where he obtained the rudiments of a secular education, but his progress in learning was neither very rapid nor extensive. However, under the diligent care of his pious mother he formed a tolerably good acquaintance with the holy Scriptures, and this he found through life to be of great service to him.

At the age of eighteen years he had a narrow escape from being killed. While undressing on a Sunday evening for bed, the gable of the house fell, when the débris crushed the bed to pieces. Had the fall been three minutes later he would have been in bed, and most probably crushed beneath tons of falling materials. But a Divine Providence watched over him, and preserved him for future usefulness. This circumstance made a deep impression on his mind, and along with others resulted in his conversion to God. This providential deliverance occurred in 1822, about the time that the Primitive Methodist missionaries first visited the Isle of Man. In the spring of the year 1823 they visited Douglas and its neighbourhood, where the subject of this account first heard them. He was first attracted by their singing the hymn beginning,

"The voice of free grace cries, Escape to the mountain,
For Adam's lost race he has opened a fountain;
For sin and uncleanness, and every transgression,
His blood flows so freely in streams of salvation.
Hallelujah to the Lamb who has bought us a pardon,
We'll praise him again when we pass over Jordan!"

The word preached in the sermon arrested him in his course of sin, so that his language became, "For thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore: there is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; neither is there any rest in my bones because of my sin." In this condition he humbled himself before God, and after a short but severe struggle he found that he was justified freely through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, and he knew that he had received a knowledge of salvation by the remission of his sins. In his family and in the Church the fruits of this change were very conspicuous, both in his spirit and in the whole of his deportment.

In June, 1824, his name was placed on the preachers' plan as an exhorter, and being full of zeal for God's glory in the salvation of souls, he went forth exhorting sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and pointing them to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world; and notwithstanding that he was then possessed of very considerable physical energy, such were the extensive and excessive labours in which he engaged, that he overtaxed his strength, and had, in consequence, for a short time to desist from his beloved work.

In 1827 he went to Bolton Circuit as a hired local preacher, and he moved in this capacity till the following year when he entered the itinerancy, in which he continued to labour uninterruptedly with zeal and energy till his death, except at short intervals when laid aside by affliction brought on by his toils. His thirty-six years of ministerial work were spent in the following stations, namely, Bolton, Chester, Preston Brook, New Mills, Stockport, Isle of Man, Keighley, Liverpool, Silsden, Warrington, Ramsey, Bury, Bolton, Rochdale, Preston Brook a second time, Staleybridge, Lymm, Stockport a second time, and Preston. By an official document I find that with a small exception these stations, under his judicious superintendency and ministerial labours, and those of his colleagues, progressed numerically, financially, and spiritually.

As I have laboured thirty years in the Manchester District, in which district the whole of Mr. Kaye's official career was spent, I have pleasure in being able to say from a long acquaintance with him, that he was an exemplary, an earnest, and a prudent, prayerful, and faithful minister of Christ. In his private and public deportment he showed that in his estimation much of heaven should be connected with an office, the purpose of which is to conduct men thither. His preaching was earnest, as that of one who intended his own salvation and that of his hearers. His prudence did not lead him to keep back any important truth, to listen to any compromise with sin ; he was not silent when he ought to speak, nor did he sit in quaking cowardly concealment when the honour of God and his cause called for boldness and activity. His practice showed that he well understood the following sentiment uttered by the late Rev. R. Watson, who says, "If there be a truth in Scripture explicit and decided, it is this, that the success of the ministry of the Gospel, in the conversion of men, is the consequence of Divine influence ; and if there is a well ascertained fact in ecclesiastical story, it is, that no great and indisputable effects of this kind have been produced but by men who have acknowledged this truth, and gone forth in humble dependence upon that promised co-operation contained in the words, "And lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world.'" And here we have the cause of the addition of those hundreds of precious souls which were added to those stations on which Mr. Kaye laboured.

The following letter I have received from the Rev. W. Rowe :—
 "In the year 1843 I was stationed in the Warrington Circuit with the late Rev. R. Kaye. The station had had a decrease of eighty-two from March to June, and on the whole it was low, numerically and financially. Steps were taken to organize the societies and for working the station more efficiently. Into this brother Kaye threw his whole soul. He neither spared body nor mind ; his labours were incessant. Here I saw the man ; what was his brightest glory and purest joy. I soon formed a very high opinion of him as a deeply pious minister, and watched him closely for my own spiritual benefit. He was not a brilliant preacher, but for practical godliness he had few superiors. He was a sound Methodist preacher. He well understood man's ruin by the fall, general redemption by Jesus Christ, and the plan of a sinner's salvation. I shall never forget some of his discourses on these subjects. He had a very tender conscience ; he abhorred dissimulation, and was unsparing with the rod in cases of moral wrong. He was naturally diffident, had very humble views of himself, so much so that at times he thereby appeared to disadvantage. But he was a good man, a man of much prayer. He prayed much in private, so much so that his knees became unusually hard through kneeling so much. For his piety and godly zeal I loved him dearly. We were of one heart and mind the two years we were together, and our love to each other lived to the end of life.

"His health failed him in Warrington Circuit, and I often begged of him to slacken his labours. I saw he was doing more than his constitution could bear. He never fully recovered his strength after his illness in this circuit. But he lived and laboured to do good, to save souls, and serve God. His work is done; may we be ready to meet him in the better land.—W. ROWE.”

By protracted ministerial labour his physical strength had for the last two or three years become enfeebled, so that some of his friends were of opinion that he would have been quite justified in applying to the Conference of 1861 for superannuation. But as a true minister of Christ he was anxious to do his work, and he therefore went forward aiming at his Master's glory in the discharge of ministerial duties, until April, 1862, when he was seized with diabetes while attending a round of missionary services in his circuit. With this complaint he was severely afflicted, and at length compelled to seek superannuation, which he did by sending to the Conference, and the yearly meeting of the Friendly Society, of 1863, an application, from which the following is an extract :—

“ Dear brethren,—Grace and peace be multiplied unto you, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. It is with peculiar feelings that apply to you for superannuation. But necessity is laid upon me, and I must bow to the will of Him who ruleth over all things. Through affliction I am unable to labour on any station.” He was fifteen months under this affliction, during which time the graces of patience and resignation to God's will were pleasingly developed. He calmly endured his pain, and bore his sufferings without murmuring.

As a superannuated minister, in compliance with his own request, he was appointed by the Conference to reside at Stockport, whither he removed from Preston on the 8th of July. The fatigue and bustle attendant on the removal were anything but favourable to the health of a person in his situation; notwithstanding he appeared to rally as he got settled in his own house. But how uncertain is everything in this terrestrial state of existence. On Sunday, July 19th, he was seized with ulceration of the throat, and his old complaint having greatly reduced his physical strength, and as he was unable to take any solid food for seven days, he sank into the arms of death, which to him was but the passing through a dark entry out of one room of his Father's house into another which is fair and glorious. This took place on the following Sabbath evening, July 26th. Miss Kaye has sent me the following lines :—

“ My dear father in his affliction said little, except in family prayer, which seemed his delight. As a Christian he was humble, earnest, and sincere, frequently powerful in prayer, believing in God, taking hold of his strength, pleading the promises and the blood. At one time writing to uncle Antliff, he expressed himself as being ready for death, and quite resigned to the will of God. At many times, while he lay suffering, we could see him engaged with his heavenly Father. On the Tuesday before he died, while at dinner, with tears in his eyes he said, how comfortable he felt in his new home, and at the same time he seemed very happy in his mind; he said he should like us all as a family to be making ready for our end, that we might all meet in heaven. He said he should not like one here, and another there, but all at the right hand of God. And after this we had great difficulty in understanding what he said, but at many times we could see a tear roll down his cheek. As a husband he was all a wife could desire. As a father he was loving and kind to his children, training them up in the way they should go, praying much for them, anxious, most anxious that they might become the subjects of grace. Nor were his efforts in vain. On the Saturday night before his decease, seeing him much worse, mother said to him, none but Jesus could do him good, and that he must look to the Lord for strength. Not being able to speak, he raised his hand in response; and after that he seemed to close his eyes upon all in this world. May we all as a family meet him in heaven.—S. A. KAYE."

The Rev. H. J. Huffman says:—"Ever since I became acquainted with Mr. Kaye, I have possessed the highest esteem for his character. There was nothing repulsive connected with his religious profession. 'He was a good man, and feared the Lord above many.' I was fond of him as a superintendent. I believe he loved and sought to maintain the discipline of the Connexion of which he was a worthy minister."

Many ministers and friends attended Mr. Kaye's funeral, which took place in the Stockport Cemetery. Messrs. R. Hill, G. Stansfield, J. Macpherson, W. Ball, and others, took part in the solemn ceremony. I preached his funeral sermon to a large and affected congregation in our Stockport Chapel, and the Rev. J. Peet improved his death, I understand, at several places in the Lymm station, in which he was highly esteemed.

T. JOBLING.

[It is a painful task to have to add our solemn testimony to the foregoing favourable sketch of the character of our beloved and lamented brother. For many years we have known Mr. Kaye with the intimacy of affectionate relationship; and we can therefore unhesitatingly endorse all the most favourable opinions the above sketch contains. He was indeed a man of prayer, of a tender conscience, and of a noble disposition. Nothing low or mean attached to his character. His eye was single and his body was full of light. He was a transparent Christian, and a devoted and useful minister. In all the relationships of life he was tender, loving, faithful, and true. His bereaved widow has lost one of the best of husbands, and his three children one of the kindest fathers. They will not soon forget his pious example and his fervent prayers. His sufferings were protracted and painful, but patiently borne. His end was peace. We sorrow not as those without hope, for we know when the Saviour shall come he will bring him with him. May his sorrowing friends meet him in heaven.—EDITOR.]

MEMOIR OF MR. GEORGE HERRING.

OUR departed brother was born at Kimberley, Notts., in the year 1801, and died at Ilkeston, February, 12th, 1863, aged sixty two-years.

Mr. Herring was converted to God at Ilkeston, at the age of seventeen, and was among the first-fruits of Primitive Methodist toil in that town. His conversion showed itself in lively zeal for the Redeemer's glory, and in fervent concern for the moral well-being of man. At the time of his conversion he was living in the capacity of a servant. The family retired at a fixed hour. George loved the means of grace, and used to go on little excursions occasionally after his day's work was done, to tell his fellow-creatures about the Saviour. He did not always return soon enough to get into the house, on which occasions he had to content himself with a bed of straw.

Mr. Herring was soon appointed to lead a class, and also put on the plan as a local preacher, and he would, it is thought, have been called into the regular ministry, but for a change in his station in life, which he saw fit to make. He became, however, a trustee for Canaan Street chapel, Nottingham, and subsequently for our chapel at Ilkeston.

For forty-five years he went in and out among us consistently ; and for most of those years he was an acceptable local preacher and class-leader. His information was not very extensive, but he could express himself clearly and acceptably in his public addresses. The subjects on which he discoursed were few, but they were of the marrow of the Gospel. His intellect was not high, but his heart was right, and after forty years of preaching he was a welcome visitor at any place on the plan.

Our dear brother suffered much bodily pain, especially during the latter years of his life ; and his last illness was particularly severe. During its continuance I visited him, and once when I was there he said, "I suffer much pain. Sometimes it almost amounts to agony. But then I try to think of the 'suffering Saviour.' I try to think of Gethsemane and Calvary ; and this helps me to bear it. And then too I remember that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." Our brother was of a sanguine and fervid temperament ; consequently his religious experience was by no means equal, sometimes the tide of feeling would be high ; at other times correspondingly low. Now, as might have been expected, he was much harassed by the "adversary" in his low moods. He said to me on one occasion, "I have to wrestle hard sometimes with doubts and fears. I have an oppressive sense of my unworthiness. But this comforts me, that I am going to heaven through boundless mercy. I believe God loves me through his Son, and will not let me sink." While humming a part of a hymn one night just before he departed, his attendant asked him what he was singing. "I am conversing with my heavenly Father," he replied. Thus he continued while consciousness lasted, and finally fell asleep in Jesus. Let us hope that the death of the husband and father will be the means of life to the widow and children.

MEMOIR OF MR. ALEXANDER SHARMAN.

ALEXANDER, the son of Alexander and Mary Sharman, of Aldbourne, was borne in the year 1801. In childhood and youth he manifested no regard for truth and righteousness, but was a sort of ringleader in vice and folly until he was between twenty and thirty years of age. But one day he wandered into the Wesleyan Chapel out of mere curiosity and heard a local preacher. His attention was fixed, he listened to the story of the cross with marked interest, light was poured into his mind, deep conviction seized his polluted heart, and his compunction of soul led him to exclaim "What must I do to be saved?" He was then directed to Christ, whom he soon found to the joy of his soul. He united with the church and continued for some time a consistent member. By and bye some little unpleasantness arose in the society which had a peculiar influence on his young and tender mind, and caused him to be less frequent at the means of grace, and this produced a marked diminution of that lively joy he had previously manifested. In this state of mind he was found when brothers Ride and Petty visited Aldbourne as Primitive Methodist missionaries from the Brinkworth circuit. Brother Sharman with numbers more went to hear these new preachers in the open air; the plain, pointed preaching, fervent praying, and lively singing took hold of his heart and cheered his drooping spirit, and led him to exclaim, "These people shall be my people, and their God shall be my God." And when a society was formed he gave in his name, and became the second member in what is now the Newbury circuit. He, in connexion with two other members of society, met together on one occasion to pray for the Lord to raise up some local preachers at Aldbourne, and in a short time after this they were surprised to find all their names on the preachers' plan. Brother Sharman felt this acutely, and expressed a wish to have his name removed, for the cross seemed more than he was able to bear, and he expected he should not be able to stand up in public and point out the way to Christ and heaven. But after a good deal of praying he was convinced it was his duty to try. He accordingly took up his cross, and went to work in this new sphere of action, and with some degree of success. He also opened his house as the preachers' home, and he accommodated them more or less from that time till the day of his death. His house was likewise occupied as a preaching place until a more suitable place could be obtained. Brother Sharman had to endure severe trials in his Christian course. The cause he had espoused was held in disrepute by many of the professed respectables of the village, and every means they could invent was used to drive our people out of the place. While the Lord saved sinners persecution raged, and this poor man and his family had to suffer severely. One instance may be given:—He was afflicted for nearly two years, during which time the enemies of the cross were actively engaged in seeking to injure him. His landlord was influenced by them, and he threatened to turn him out of his house unless he turned the society out of doors. And when his wife went to the farmers' meeting for relief, she was told there was no relief for her, but she must go to that sect they belonged to for relief. When the poor woman returned home and told her afflicted husband the rebuff she had met with, he retired to lay his case before the Lord, and while pouring out his complaint to God he received such a conscious assurance that help would be afforded, and that his heavenly Father would take care of him and his family, that he was filled with peace and joy, which enabled him in the midst of all his sufferings to sing praises to God. Just at that time brother W. Farmer called to see how he was able to bear up under the peculiar trial he was now in, and to his surprise he found him singing as well as his weakness would allow. The words he was singing at the time were—

“They cannot take from us, though oft they have tried,
The heart-cheering promise, The Lord will provide.”

Brother Farmer asked him how he could be so happy in such trying circumstances. He pointed upwards and said, “I have a good Father in heaven, who has told me that my bread shall be given and my water shall be sure.” The same day, and but a short time after brother Farmer's visit, the relieving officer sent his son with relief for him. How true that the man whose ways please the Lord shall find his very enemies to be at peace with him. The persecutors sometimes broke the windows of his house while the people were met together for worship; but none of these things moved him. He was diligent in the promotion of God's honour, and constant at the means of grace when health would permit; the prayer and class-meetings were his chief joy. The threat of the landlord was never executed, for he remained in the same house until his heavenly Father called him to enjoy a better one, whose builder and maker is God. He felt a deep interest in the good cause; the society and chapel occupied his attention; for their prosperity he prayed, and he lived to see the society in prosperity and the chapel debt reduced £40, which was a source of great satisfaction to his mind. His last affliction was long and tedious, he being unable to work for a long time, but he was not confined to his room altogether until the last week of his life. The last Sabbath I was with him was the last time he was out at the preaching service, and that day he was out twice and appeared to enjoy the services. On the Tuesday following he was taken worse and sank rapidly. The following are a few of his last expressions. Sometimes he said, “This is a long, cold river, but it is better on before.”

“My prospect is good, there is land ahead; the chariot will soon be here, I am getting near the shore.” He exhorted all who came to see him to be sure to meet him in heaven, he exhorted his weeping wife not to cry for him, and his children he exhorted to meet their father in heaven, and they promised him they would. He then said, “I shall soon gaze upon the glorious face of my Redeemer and Saviour, I can give all up now, to die is gain!” And after a few more struggles he quietly fell on sleep, on February 15th, 1863. May his widow and fatherless children all meet him in the better world, is the prayer of

MEMOIR OF STEPHEN LUMB SHAW.

STEPHEN LUMB SHAW was born at Greetland, Halifax circuit, January 26th, 1822, and died at the same place, February 20th, 1863. At a proper age he began to attend a Sabbath School, and was looked upon as a steady, persevering youth. When our Sabbath School was commenced at Lindwell, in Greetland, in 1838, he was one of the first who offered their services as teachers, and he was ever ready to give assistance and to endure inconvenience so that the institution might prosper. And as a labourer therein he continued until the affliction which ended in his death.

In the month of March, 1840, he was converted to God. He was arrested with conviction by hearing a band of Primitives sing in the open air, “We are travelling home to heaven above.” He sought and found God’s pardoning love, and then became a member of our society. He stepped at once into various spheres of usefulness, by becoming a member of the choir, the chapel steward, the school superintendent, an assistant class-leader, and a member of the circuit committee, in all of which capacities he conducted himself well, blending with some human infirmities the higher principles of true manhood and of Christianity. His religion made him a blessing in his family and in his neighbourhood.

The Rev. A. Worsnop, late superintendent of this station, knew him well, and he says of him:—

“Excellencies he had, but he had also his infirmities. He was not an angel; he was human. However there were many points in his character worthy of special notice.

“1. His attachment to God’s house. He loved the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. And as he was an efficient singer of the songs of Zion, his presence was the more valuable, particularly on week-day evenings. But his voice is no more heard in temples made with hands: he has gone to the heavenly one, to join in the new song of Moses and of the Lamb.

“2. In the Sabbath school he took a delight, and laboured to be useful, and his labours were not in vain in the Lord.

"3. As one of the chapel stewards he rendered great service (in connection with his brother Charles), to the financial state of the chapel by his diligent efforts to reduce the debt, as well as to raise money for the improvement of the property.

"4. His table was always accessible to the preachers, where they have frequently been refreshed after the toils of the day, and fitted for their journey homewards.

"5. As a father and a husband he was loved and obeyed. His kindness won the affection of his family; but his tenderness did not glide into softness inconsistent with government. He ruled well his own house.

"6. As a Christian he walked by the revealed will of the Most High, and followed the steps of his blessed Redeemer. So that now, having finished his appointed work, he has 'entered into the joy of his Lord.'"

Similarly gratifying testimony to the worth of the departed is given by the Revs. W. Bennett and Thos. Smith, who knew him well.

His last affliction, commencing with inflammation of the lungs, and ending with something like consumption, was long and tedious; but throughout he was graciously aided from on high. A while before his departure he desired the members of his class to visit him, to whom he gave suitable advice. It was a most affecting time. He lingered on a few days longer, and then calmly departed to be with Christ.

MEMOIR OF MR. GEORGE CAPP.

GEORGE CAPP was born at Stewkley, in the Aylesbury circuit, July 12th, 1812. In early life he made rapid advances in a career of wickedness. He did not only manifest a spirit of enmity against his Maker, but a principle of opposition against the people of God, and against our church in particular. But God who is rich in mercy, graciously manifested himself to George's wife a short time before her husband's conversion, and her changed conduct had a subduing influence upon him. Her prayers and pious conversation seemed to arouse him to a sense of neglected obligations, and produced within him compunction for the aggravated crimes of which he had been guilty. He would sometimes weep and promise amendment; but his goodness was like the morning cloud and early dew that soon pass away. His sinful habits had taken such hold of him, that he found it difficult to break the chains and unrivet the fetters with which he had been bound. After these melting influences he was induced on one occasion to attend a steeple chase, a practice as cruel as it is degrading. On his way to the scene of the sport, a friend said to him, "George, I have been thinking that the steeple-chasers are riding to hell as fast as they can gallop." This kind reproof was like a nail fastened in a sure place by the Master of assemblies. If the divine injunction, so full of compassion, "Thou shalt not suffer sin upon thy neighbour," were complied with by all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, what multitudes might be converted from the error of their ways!

As brother Capp was returning home in the evening he met with a friend to whom he unbosomed the feelings of his soul, and he engaged to accompany him to the house of prayer on the ensuing evening, but when this friend called to take him to the house of the Lord, brother Capp was not at home. When he returned home his wife informed him that his friend had called agreeably with his engagement. This simple circumstance threw him into an agony of grief, nor could he get relief to his wounded spirit, till he obtained redemption through the blood of Christ, the forgiveness of his sins. This invaluable blessing he obtained after attending the house of God a few evenings.

This change was so divine and so glorious that his enraptured soul was filled unutterably full of glory and of God. His progress in holiness was marked and rapid, the joy of the Lord was the strength of his heart. Having received good he was concerned to do good. He was soon placed upon the plan, and became a valuable local preacher.

In performing the duties appertaining to this office, he exemplified as much courage and untiring zeal as he did in the service of Satan. His sermons were characterized by sound sense and spiritual power. He would seldom leave a house at which he was entertained, without praying before proceeding to the house of God, and we have a young man on our plan who was first awakened while our departed brother was pouring out his soul to God at a family altar before preaching. He felt a generous solicitude for the spiritual welfare of the families he visited, and for the congregations to whom he preached the Word of Life. He thought little was done unless souls were saved and believers quickened.

His kindness to the preachers, and the liberal manner in which he supported the institutions of religion are worthy of all praise. The memory of such a man is blessed. The affliction which terminated his mortal probation was a disease of the brain. The influence this disease had upon his mind was most distressing at times, but in his lucid moments his confidence in God was firm and his patience exemplary. Indeed he was never heard to murmur. After a paroxysm of pain he said to his sister, "It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good. I am in the hands of the Lord." A few weeks before his death, his joy was unspeakable, and some hours were spent in devout adoration instead of sleeping.

As he approached the shores of bliss, he seemed to inhale some of those delightful gales ———"which betray their breath,

And whence they steal their balmy spell."

The day on which he died he told his wife and sister that he was going to be with Jesus.

Although he could only speak at intervals, still his expressions of confidence in the God of his salvation were most consoling to his friends. It appeared evident that God was showing him the path of life, and bringing him into his "presence, where there is fulness of joy, and to his right hand, where there are pleasures for evermore," for when his voice was lost in death he made an effort to lift his hand in token of victory over his last enemy. Thus passed from our midst on the 21st of February, 1863, a man of real piety, of burning zeal, of great benevolence, and of great moral worth.

May his dear wife, who attended him with such anxious solicitude through all the stages of the gloomy disorder which terminated his valuable life, be divinely sustained and comforted in her pilgrimage to meet him in heaven.

MEMOIR OF MR. THOMAS BILTON.

THOMAS BILTON commenced his earthly career at Methley, in the Leeds Second circuit, December 21st, 1801, and terminated it in great suffering, on February 28th, 1863, in the Leeds General Infirmary, to which place he had been borne a few hours previously. His parents were pious persons, being members of the Wesleyan society during many years. His father died in a somewhat untimely manner when Thomas was about nine years old, and his mother survived that event, in widowed life, about thirty-nine years.

Our brother lived according to the course of this world until about his thirty-fifth year, when, under the ministry of the Rev. W. Clough, he was arrested by divine power, and led to seek forgiveness of sin and an inheritance among the sanctified. From that period he maintained an even tenor, growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and devoting himself, as opportunity offered, to the service of the Church. Like all who dwell in this world of light and shade his lot was chequered ; but there is not much to be noted of any very special interest.

On Saturday morning, February 28th, 1863, he left home on his employer's business, in his usual health and spirits. Early that morning he had spoken to a fellow-servant of having had a severe conflict with Satan during most of the night ; and of having overcome the enemy by earnest, believing, persevering prayer. Whilst preparing his team for the day's journey, he was heard to sing in his wonted cheerful and hearty style—

" When our race we have run, and the vict'ry won,
We to mansions of glory shall fly :
There eternally praise the blest Ancient of days,
For his love made us ready to die."

And subsequently, as he left the village, he made the streets echo with the song,—

“The Gospel ship has long been sailing, Bound for Canaan’s peaceful shore.”

Sometime about noon he arrived at his destination, in the neighbourhood of Leeds, and after having loaded his waggon he prepared to return home. He had not proceeded far, however, on the return journey when the horses took fright, and starting off at a fearful pace threw the driver on the ground, when the wheels passed over his body and dreadfully mangled it. Our brother was at once conveyed to the institution already named, where he lingered in an almost unconscious state, until about eleven o’clock in the evening, when he breathed out his spirit, and found rest from all the toils and pains of earth in the bosom of his Lord.

Brother Bilton sustained for many years the office of class-leader in our society at Methley, and by his consistent walk won great respect from rich and poor, saint and sinner. Brother Benjamin Myers improved his death in the Wesleyan chapel (the largest in the neighbourhood), on March 22nd. The place was crowded to excess, numbers being unable to gain admission. From all parts of the surrounding country the people flocked to hear the last earthly tribute to be paid in public to their much respected neighbour.

In many respects brother B. may be held up as an “ensample to the flock.” There were about him a roughness of manner and a quaintness of expression which to a stranger might repel rather than attract; but besides a certain piquancy in many of his sayings, not altogether destitute of interest, there was an earnestness and an out-spoken honesty about him which commended him to all who knew how to value a man of sterling qualities. In diligent attendance on the public ordinances of religion there were few to surpass him. He has frequently, in busy seasons, set aside for a time the urgent demands of his body, rather than miss the pleasure and profit arising from the communion of saints and the hearing of the Word. At home he devoted much time to prayer and the reading of the Bible. In the spiritual and eternal welfare of his family he took a very deep interest. He was really and truly a man of prayer. In the closet, the farm-buildings, the fields, and as he went along the streets, his soul was lifted up in supplication to God. He was also a frequent visitor of the sick. For the last two or three years of his life he made it a rule to devote some portion of each Sabbath to this Christ-like work. He was a lover of good men. When there was no service in his own chapel, he would join the Wesleyans in theirs, and was always at home where pious souls were found. May his surviving children and friends meet him in heaven.

THOMAS NEWELL.

MEMOIR OF MR. GEORGE BRADLEY.

GEORGE, son of James and Martha BRADLEY, of Flockton, was born May 25th, 1804, and died at Scissett, in the parish of Emley, in the county of York, March 13th, 1863, aged fifty-eight years. In childhood he was under serious impressions, but he followed a course of sin and folly. However, having a pious, praying mother, he was arrested in his career of sinfulness; for often when he returned home at midnight he heard his mother praying for the family, but especially for him. He would then pause at the door, and not disturb her in her devotions. Often he would promise to amend; but his good desires were not carried into practice until he with his family removed to Denby Dale, in what is now called Clayton West circuit.

One Sunday morning while he was visiting one of his neighbours who was sick, a number of Primitive Methodists went to pray with the person. They invited him to accompany them to the preaching; and God accompanied the word to his heart, and this resulted in his conversion. He united with the Primitives, and soon became exceedingly useful to the infant cause, and rendered efficient help in supporting it, both by his labours and his purse. He became one of the trustees of the new chapel at Denby Dale. From the year 1837 up to his decease he was the treasurer. He also became the superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and in this capacity he laboured with unwearied zeal, and loved to see it prosper. When he had removed to Scissett on account of work, though he was now two and a half miles from the chapel, he attended regularly. He was still at his post, for that house lay near his heart. He has been known to attend as often as seven times a week, thus setting a good example to the flock. He was also the leader of a class, and in this duty he was very punctual and well received, and he saw the work prosper. Brother Bradley's interest was not confined here, but his house was open for local and travelling preachers; in their company he delighted.

On the 21st of February he came home from work, complaining of shortness of breath; and immediately a doctor was sent for, and some relief was obtained; but this was of short duration, for on the Thursday, being fine, he walked out a little, and caught cold. On Friday he called his wife to his bedside, and opened his mind to her. She then asked him if he had any ties to earth; he replied, "Only one, that is the child; but," said he, "I give that up and all beside." His wife asked, "How are you for heaven?" "All right," said he; "packed up. Christ is precious! Praise God!" His sufferings being very severe—"They are," said he, "not half what Christ suffered for me." The disease of which he died was bronchitis. By the assistance of his wife he was got up into a chair, and he called upon God to bless him; but suddenly and unexpectedly he expired, leaving a widow and five children behind.

THE LORD IN HIS TEMPLE.

A Sermon preached at the opening of the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Tuckingmill, Cornwall, Sunday morning, September 27, 1863,

BY THE REV. SAMUEL DUNN.

(Free Church, Camborne.)

‘The Lord is in his holy temple: let all the earth keep silence before him.’—Hab. ii. 20

THERE is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth him understanding. God hath made him to know more than the beasts of the field, and to be wiser than the fowls of heaven. He, of all the creatures on earth, can think, reason, contemplate, reflect, anticipate. But that which specially distinguishes him from the other creatures is his capacity for devotion, his susceptibility of religion; the inferior animals have instinct, some knowledge of visible objects, and give proofs of affection, but they discover no knowledge of religious subjects, no sense of Deity, no trace of piety. It is the glory of man that he alone should know, serve, adore, and enjoy his Maker; he can hear his voice, catch his smile, feel his love, sing his praise, can hold intimate, delightful and transforming communion with him. Man alone is capable of understanding, appreciating, and realizing the important sentiments of the text.

I. THE DECLARATION. The Lord is in his TEMPLE.

The universe is the temple of Jehovah. There is no point in the vast immensity of space that is not occupied by him. Plunge into the profoundest depths, and he is there; rise to the loftiest heights, and he is there; soar away to those unmeasured solitudes, beyond the revolutions of the most distant stars, and there he subsists in infinite fulness. He is not spread through space, a part of him here, and a part of him elsewhere; but the minutest point he fills with the plenitude of his consciousness and power.

Heaven is his temple. Though he filleth immensity and inhabiteth eternity, there is a locality called heaven, where he dwells in visible magnificence, and where there are the most glorious displays of his perfections. He sitteth on high. “Heaven is my throne.” Whatever is vital, harmonious, joyous, is produced by him. He fills, illuminates, sanctifies, and beatifies all with his presence and splendour; he is surrounded, in his pavilion of light, by unnumbered holy, happy intelligences, who stand in his presence, hearken to his voice, contemplate his glory, watch the evolutions of his attributes, and celebrate his praise. As the fountain of being and blessedness, he is continually pouring forth streams of life and happiness, and receiving them back from the worshippers in ceaseless acts of adoration, love, and obedience. The benignity and radiant glory that emanate from his countenance fill their hearts with gladness, and tune their lips to praise.

The house erected by Solomon on Mount Zion was Jehovah's temple. To the inquiry at its dedication, "Will God indeed dwell on the earth?" an answer was soon given, "The glory of the Lord filled the house, and the priests could not enter, because the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's house, and all the people bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshipped, and praised the Lord, saying, He is good, for his mercy endureth for ever." In that temple the Lord dwelt for four hundred and sixteen years, after which it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. No spot of earth was so favoured. Thither the tribes went up, there the priests officiated, the altars stood, the fires blazed, the victims bled, the worship was performed, the divine glory was displayed. The Holy of Holies was the inmost recess of the temple, the palace of the Great King, the chamber of audience, the place of the oracle. There was the Shekinah, the symbol of himself, his own habitation, the throne on which he sat, and manifested himself in visible glory.

Every Christian place of worship is a temple of the Lord. "In all places where I record my name, I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee." Again, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." This house is his temple; it is erected to his honour; we now dedicate it to the Three One Jehovah. Here his praises will be sung, his footstool approached, his word read, expounded, and applied; his ordinances administered; we want no bishop to consecrate it. The presence of the Lord of the temple, which we have this morning, waves consecration all around; we proclaim his name as a name above every name that is named. There may be that are called gods many, and lords many; but to us there is but one God. The gods of the heathen are vanities and lies; fictions, nonentities, things that never existed; or if they ever had a being, were mere creatures, dependent, circumscribed, changeful, revengeful, passionate, unjust. The God that we worship in this temple is self-existent, from everlasting to everlasting, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, immutable. We take up the triumphant challenge, "Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders?"

The Lord is in his HOLY temple. In the temples of Baalim and Ashtoroth, of Dagon and Chemosh, were the most horrid yells, cruelties and obscenities, monstrous pomps and fanatic revelries; and in the heathen temples of the present day sin reigns and triumphs. Their gods are its patrons, and their priests its teachers. It pervades their whole system of morals, is recommended in their books, exhibited in their images, pervades their worship, and heaps its abominations on their altars. Their drink-offerings of blood will we not offer, nor take up their names into our lips. The temple of our God is holy ; he is absolutely and unchangeably holy ; his law is holy : his worship is holy ; his ministers are holy ; for unto the wicked he saith, " What hast thou to do to declare my statutes ? " and while the seraphim on high cry one to another, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts ; the saints on earth give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness. Holiness becometh the house of the Lord for ever.

The Lord is in his holy temple—

For his own pleasure. The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. He is more glorified by public than by private worship. In his temple doth every one " speak of his glory." The more worshippers there are the more he is glorified. The very erection of a temple is a proclamation of his claims, a memorial of the facts of his religion, a reproof to infidelity, a breakwater against the floods of immorality. The temple is the depository of his truth, the centre whence it radiates. Out of Zion the perfection of beauty, God hath shined ; he is pleased to see the inhabitants of one city go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord of Hosts ; I will go also. All are welcome. It is a house of prayer for all nations. The place is public, the service common ; the high and the low here meet together ; nobles and peasants, masters and servants, are here on an equality. Saints and sinners of every colour and of every condition may assemble, and the Lord is in the midst of them.

To observe the worshippers. The regularity of your attendance, the punctuality with which you come, the motives by which you are actuated ; whether you come out of curiosity, or from the force of custom, or the tyranny of fashion, to display your persons, to attract by the music of your voices, or to hear what God will say concerning you. His eye and his ear are here continually, marking your behaviour, the posture of your body, whether you are sitting when you ought to be kneeling, lounging when you ought to be standing, turning over the pages of the hymn when you ought to be attending to the sermon, looking at the clock or the watch, when you ought to be examining your own hearts. All the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts. He is fully acquainted with your most secret thoughts and desires. Every breath that comes out of you, is as a clap of thunder before him.

To receive the Services. When in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, you make melody in your hearts to the Lord ; when you worship and bow down, and kneel before the Lord your Maker ; when you listen to the reading and exposition of the sacred Word, he is near unto all them that call upon him. Here we have the Great High Priest of our profession, the altar that sanctifieth the gift, the sacrifice of a sweet smell, the ministry of reconciliation, and the laver of regeneration. The Lord is in his holy temple.

To bless the worshippers. To assist his ministers, to give energy to his word, to reclaim the backslider, to arouse the careless, to pardon the penitent, strengthen the weak, establish the wavering, comfort the desponding, succour the tempted, and to wholly sanctify believers. You can have no want which he is not able to supply, he is infinitely more ready to bestow favours than you are to receive them. In his mountain hath the Lord of hosts made unto all people a feast of fat things ; a peace that passeth understanding, a hope that blooms with immortality, a joy unspeakable and full of glory. He is now saying, what is it that I shall do for thee ? open thy mouth wide and I will fill it. Prove me now herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it. I will make the places round about my hill a blessing ; and I will cause the shower to come down in his season ; there shall be showers of blessings.

To prepare you for Heaven. To give you a title, in the pardon of your sins ; a foretaste by shedding his love abroad in your hearts ; a preparation, by the entire purification of your souls. Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord ; or who shall stand in his holy place ! He that hath clean hands and a pure heart. This is a Bethesda where you may find the healing, cleansing and refreshing waters. God is here, by his all pervading and all purifying influence to wean you from earth, to elevate your affections, invigorate your religious principles, mature your graces, and teach you the notes you are to warble forth in the great temple above.

Secondly. THE PROCLAMATION. Let all the earth keep silence before him. The silence of attention ; keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools. Come, if possible, from your closets. Come in a devout frame. Come at the appointed time, that others may not be disturbed by your late entrance. Remember the majesty of Him into whose presence you come, the importance of the business you have to transact, and that you may not have another opportunity of listening to a sermon. If the world follow you, drive it back. If vain thoughts obtrude, resolutely repel them. If turbulent passions arise, say, Peace, be still. Disengage your minds from all foolish imaginations. Watch your hearts, lest they go after covetousness. "I will wash my hands in innocency, so will I compass thy altar, O Lord." Be impressed with the sentiment, How dreadful is this place ! this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. Do not be restless or staring about. Exercise mental discipline. Cultivate a habit of attention. Collect your thoughts, and let them strike their roots deep into the subject, till you go through the service with ease, profit, and delight.

Of Contrition. Let there be no lofty looks, proud boasting, contemptuous expressions of Stand by, I am holier than thou ; or, God, I thank thee that I am not as other men, or even as this publican. Keep silence. Even Abraham, in the presence of his Maker, confessed himself to be but dust. Job exclaimed, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear ; but now mine eye seeth thee : wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Isaiah said, "Woe is me ; for I am undone : because I am a man of unclean lips ; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." And now that you are in the presence of his unspotted purity, silently reflect on your natural depravity, the light you have extinguished, the mercies you have abused, the opportunities of getting and of doing good you have neglected, until shame cover you, compunction fill you, and you be humbled ; until one of the seraphim take a live coal from off the altar, lay it upon your mouth, and you hear a voice sweeter than music, "Lo, this hath touched thy lips ; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged."

Of Submission. Dare not with impious Pharaoh to say, Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice ? Nor with the infidels in the days of Malachi, It is vain to serve God : and what profit is it that we have kept his ordinance ? But like Cornelius and his friends to Peter, say, We are all here present before God, to hear all things commanded thee of God. It is not enough that you come to the temple regularly, listen attentively, sing melodiously, or pray eloquently ; there must be a full and sincere resolution to comply with the Lord's injunctions. Dare not to rebel. Dispute not about his doctrines. Complain not of the strictness of his laws. Keep silence. Put down all rule, and all authority and power that would rise against him. Yield yourselves unto God. Bind your whole nature, and lay it on the altar before him. Be ruled by his will absolutely and universally. Lord, what wouldest thou have me to do ? Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven.

Of Communion. Truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. If you say, I beseech thee show me thy glory, he will answer, Come up to me in the holy mount, and I will make all my goodness pass before thee. There you shall silently hold intercourse with him, close, tender, filial, joyous, assimilating. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will show them his covenant. He will converse with you as a man with his friend, familiarly, confidentially ; and all you see in him you may appropriate. His wisdom to guide you, his power to defend you, and his fulness to supply your every need. And all so silent, that those sitting by your side shall know nothing of what is going on between God and your soul. But you know it, you feel it, are overwhelmed with it. Breathe unutterable praise in rapturous awe and silent love.

Of Adoration. God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. He is Lord of all ; the Fountain of all blessedness. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name ? The seraphim, with their wings, veil their faces. God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of his saints, and to be had in reverence of all that are about him. Display no levity, but the greatest circumspection, the deepest seriousness ; a solemnity yet consistent with joy, a feeling of sacred awe mixed with admiration and delight. Here you may silently soar on the wings of contemplation. We have thought of thy loving-kindness, O Lord, in the midst of thy temple. How precious are thy thoughts unto me, O God ! how great is the sum of them ! Meditate on his matchless beauties ; on his infinite, harmonious, and glorious perfections ; on the rich provision he has made, in Jesus Christ, for your salvation, till your hearts swell with gratitude, and you pant beneath the weight of obligation you are under to him, feeling

“ The speechless awe that dares not move,
And all the silent heaven of love.”

Of Anticipation. Everything here—the Sabbaths, the assemblies, the worship, is designed and calculated to direct your thoughts to the temple above. You only see through a glass darkly ; but the very attempt to penetrate the invisibilities of that world, to form clearer conceptions of the glory to be revealed, will strengthen your faculties, and train your spirits for those loftier employments and richer enjoyments that there await you. Then silently and joyfully look forward to the period, when passing through all interposing veils, you shall be admitted to the hallowed recesses of the heavenly temple, and have no need to say, O when shall we come and appear before God ? for you shall ever be before him. Every spot will there be alike holy, equally fitted to the incense of devotion, and the song of praise ; all will be filled with his presence ; the glory of God doth lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. Till then,

Be thankful that temples to God are erected for you here. They are the honours of our native place and bulwarks of our land. Their gates are open continually. You can safely sit, protected by your country's laws.

Be diligent in your attendance. Allow no trifling secular concerns, or slight bodily indisposition to keep you away.

Endeavour to get others to attend. What will be good for you will be good for them. Kindly invite them. Go out into the highways, and compel them to come in, that God's house may be filled.

Contribute towards the support of the temple. Remove the debt on it as speedily as possible. Regularly meet the current expenses. Take a lively interest in Zion. Often go round about her ; tell the towers thereof, mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces, that ye may tell it to the generation following. ## WORKS OF CREATION.

THE ANIMALS MENTIONED IN SCRIPTURE.

THE animals of which mention is made in the Bible belong principally to the countries of Egypt and Palestine.

Of the animals of Egypt, the most remarkable are the crocodile and the hippopotamus; the former being occasionally mentioned under the Hebrew name liv' yáthan, the leviathan of the authorised version, while the latter named animal is denoted by the Hebrew behemoth. The leviathan may denote almost any huge "monster." In the forty-first chapter of Job it undoubtedly represents the crocodile of the Nile, and no other animal, notwithstanding the assertion of Sir G. Wilkinson to the contrary. It is perfectly true, as this eminent writer maintains, that "Isaiah (xxvii. 1) calls 'leviathan the piercing serpent,' and 'that crooked serpent,'" where it is probable that it corresponds to the aphophis or great serpent of Egypt; but this by no means invalidates the opinion that liv' yáthan is a generic term to signify any huge monster, whether terrestrial, amphibious, or marine. Thus, in Psalm civ. 26—"O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches. So is this great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable. . . . There go the ships: there is that leviathan whom thou hast made to play therein"—there can be little doubt that some whale is intended. The word monster, therefore, is perhaps as good a translation as can be proposed of the Hebrew term: indeed, the village clerk's proposed rendering of "that great live thing" was not very far from the mark. Great difference of opinion, however, has prevailed amongst the old commentators as to the animal denoted, which is very remarkable, considering the indications which the Bible affords of its identity:—"Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons? His scales are his pride, shut up together as with a close seal." "Who can open the doors of his face?" "His teeth are terrible round about." "The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold; the spear, the dart, nor the habergeon." "He esteemeth iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood." It is impossible to have a better clue to identification than is conveyed by these expressions. Some of them, indeed, would apply to a large serpent, yet not all equally; besides, it is clear the animal is, for the most part, aquatic in his habits, which python-snakes, as a rule, are not. Many of the oldest commentators were persuaded that "a whale" is signified. Beza and Diodati appear to have been the first to suggest a crocodile; and Bochart, as Mason Good has well observed, "has supported this rendering with a train of argument which has nearly overwhelmed all opposition, and has brought almost every commentator over to his opinion." Our own translators of the Bible seem to have believed that the leviathan of the Book of Job was a whale, as is evident from the marginal reading whale or whirlpool, formerly synonymous terms. Milton ("Par. Lost," i. 200) represents leviathan as a whale, or some yet greater sea monster, with a scaly skin; for he speaks of

"That sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest that swim th' ocean stream;
Him, haply, slumb'ring on the Norway foam,

The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff,
 Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
 With fix'd anchor in his scaly rind,
 Moors by his side under the lee."

Lee, in his "Commentary on the Book of Job," has laboured hard to show that leviathan is the common grampus (Delphinus orca, Linn.); an opinion which cannot for a moment be maintained, being utterly destitute of any argument to recommend it. The crocodile was regarded by the Israelites as an emblem of the Egyptian king: "Thou didst divide the sea by thy strength. . . . Thou brakest the head of leviathan in pieces, and gavest him to be meat to the people inhabiting the wilderness,"—that is, Thou didst destroy the princes of Pharaoh, and didst give their dead bodies to the jackals of the desert of Sinai. The jackals, which are pre-eminently the "wild beasts of the field," are doubtless intended by the expression "people inhabiting the wilderness;" just as in Prov. xxx. 25, 26, it is said that "the ants are a people not strong; the conies are but a feeble folk." It was very natural that the oppressed Israelites should compare their great enemy with the terrible crocodile; and so in Ezekiel (xxix. 3) Pharaoh, king of Egypt, is called "the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers."

The question as to the animal denoted by the behemoth of the Book of Job has been as much discussed as the former word. Some critics have suggested the elephant; others, as Mason Good, have thought that the behemoth was some extinct mastodon or mammoth (!). There can be no doubt, however, that the hippopotamus is the behemoth of Scripture. The expressions, "he eateth grass as an ox"—"he lieth under the shady trees in the covert of the reeds and fens"—"he moveth his tail like a cedar"—clearly point to the hippopotamus. Though he passes much of his time in the water, yet he takes not his food from thence, like his associate the crocodile: he eats grass like cattle; the hill-sides bring him forth food. Again, according to the opinion of many Oriental scholars, as Bochart, Gesenius, Fürst, Jablonski, and others, the Hebrew behemoth is equivalent to the Coptic pehemou or pehemout,—that is, Bos marinus. But let the reader peruse the whole passage of Job xl. (15-24), and say whether every particular does not suit the hippopotamus?

There is abundant evidence to show that the hippopotamus formerly existed in other regions than those to which it is now confined. It has entirely disappeared from Lower Egypt; but in 1600 it was found in the Delta of the Nile, for the traveller Zereughi killed two individuals near Damietta. Bones of the modern species (H. amphibius, Linn.) have been found in the river Chelif, in Algeria. There can be no doubt that the hippopotami which were introduced into the Roman shows were derived from Lower Egypt and North Africa; and doubtless the behemoth of the Book of Job refers to an animal of the same locality.

But if the behemoth and the leviathan have each of them received a very large share of discussion, perhaps both are surpassed in this respect by the claims of the unicorn. Pages upon pages have been written on this subject. Some have said it must have been the antelope (Oryx leucoryx) of North Africa, Syria, &c.,—that the horns seen in profile appear as one, and hence the mistake of regarding the animal as possessing a single horn; others have no hesitation in referring the unicorn to the one-horned rhinoceros (R. unicornis) of Asia. This is the opinion generally entertained at this day. But all attempts to discover a one-horned animal that shall represent the unicorn of our English Bible are beyond the mark entirely; and for this simple reason, the so-called unicorn is no unicorn at all: the Hebrew word r'ém denotes a two-horned animal beyond a shadow of doubt. The "unicorn" of our authorized version owes its origin to the μονοκέρας of the LXX. That the r'ém possessed two horns is evident, as observed by Schultens in 1737, from the seventeenth verse of Deut. xxxii., where of Joseph it is said, "His horns are like the horns of a r'ém." Our translators, seeing the contradiction involved in the expression "horns of the unicorn," have rendered the Hebrew singular noun as if it were a plural form. In the margin, however, they give the correct translation. The two horns of the r'ém are the ten thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasseh, and represent the two tribes which sprang from one (namely, Joseph), just as two horns spring from one head. We may dismiss the idea, therefore, that a unicorn is spoken of anywhere in the Bible. The r'ém is a two-horned animal, and almost certainly denotes some kind of "wild ox," as appears from a comparison of the different passages where the word occurs in Holy Scripture. The r'ém is almost always mentioned with bovine animals: it is said to push with its horns: it must have been frequently seen by the ancient Hebrews roaming on the hills of Palestine and in the woods of the Jordan valley, as is evident from the numerous allusions to it. It is true there is no "wild ox" at present known to exist in Palestine; but this is no reason why in early times some mighty species, allied perhaps to the urus of the Hercynian Forest, of which Cæsar speaks, should not have existed in that country. Lions were certainly not uncommon in Palestine and Syria in Biblical times, as is clear from the numerous allusions to them in Holy Writ; and it is interesting to note, in verification of the Scriptures, that the late Dr. Roth discovered bones of the lion in gravel on the banks of the Jordan, near the sea of Galilee. It is, therefore, quite probable that future investigations in Palestine may result in the discovery of the bones of Bos primigenius, or Bison priscus, or some other species of the once formidable ox. Our readers will remember the beautiful passage about the r'ém in the Book of Job. Now, let us compare with it the account Cæsar gives of the fierce urus, which in his time was to be seen in the great Hercynian Forest:—

"These uri are scarcely less than elephants in size, but in their nature, colour, and form are bulls. Great is their strength, and great their speed; they spare neither man nor beast when once they have caught sight of them. The hunters are most careful to kill those which they take in pitfalls, while the young men exercise themselves by this sort of hunting, and grow hardened by the toil; those who kill most receive great praise when they exhibit in public the horns as trophies of their success. These uri, however, even when young, cannot be habituated to man or made tractable. The size and shape of their horns are very different from those of our oxen."—Bell. Gal., iv. 29.

The indomitable nature ascribed to these wild uri exactly agrees with the description of the r'ém, as given in the thirty-ninth chapter of Job: "Will the r'ém be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy crib?" and the implied contrast between the domestic ox and the intractable r'ém finds an analogue in the above extract from Cæsar.

But of all the animals of which mention is made in the Bible, the greatest stumbling-block to critics is found in the fish that swallowed Jonah. It is generally supposed that no animal exists with a gullet sufficiently wide to allow of the passage of a man to the stomach. This, however, is an error. The white shark, that terrible foe to sailors, is quite able to swallow a man whole. A well-known ichthyologist thus speaks of this shark's capabilities in this respect :—

"White sharks usually cut asunder any object of considerable size, and thus swallow it; but if they find a difficulty in doing this, there is no hesitation in passing into the stomach even what is of enormous bulk; and the formation of the jaws and throat renders this a matter of but little difficulty. Ruysch says that the whole body of a man in armour (loricated) has been found in the stomach of a white shark; and Captain King, in his 'Survey of Australia,' says he had caught one which could have swallowed a man with the greatest ease. Blumenbach says a whole horse has been found in it; and Captain Basil Hall reports the taking of one in which, besides other things, he found the whole skin of a buffalo, which a short time before had been thrown overboard from his ship."

It is true that in the New Testament the fish is called "a whale;" but the Greek κῆτος is not to be restricted to such a meaning: it is used in classical authors in a wide sense to denote either a "seal," or a "tunny," or a "whale;" in fact, almost any large marine monster. But even if it were necessary to suppose some Cetacean was signified, there is, so far as ability to swallow is involved in the question, nothing opposed to zoological fact. The spermaceti whale (Catodon macrocephalus) has a very capacious throat, quite wide enough to admit the body of a man: it might occasionally find its way from the Northern Seas into the Mediterranean, the scene, doubtless, of the transaction recorded in the Book of Jonah; but the ordinary food of whales consists of comparatively small animals, Crustacea, Medusæ, &c. Dr. Harris observes, "that the fame of the prophet's miraculous preservation was so widely propagated as to reach even Greece; whence was, no doubt, derived the story of Hercules escaping alive out of a fish's belly, alluded to by Lycophron."

In no book in the Bible are there so many and such full descriptions of animals as in the Book of Job. The whole of the thirty-ninth chapter consists of beautiful pictures drawn from nature—the allusions to the habits of wild asses, for instance :—

"Who hath sent out the wild ass free? or who hath loosed the bands of the wild ass?"

"Whose house I have made the wilderness, and the salt places his dwellings.

"He scorneth the multitude of the city, neither regardeth the crying of the driver.

"The range of the mountains is his pasture, and he searcheth after every green thing."

The species here referred to is probably the Asinus hemippus, which inhabits the deserts of Syria, Mesopotamia, and the northern parts of Arabia. Mr. Layard, as he was riding through the desert to Tel Afer, saw a troop of these wild asses, which at first he mistook for a body of horse, with the Bedouin riders concealed. "The reader will remember," he adds, "that Xenophon mentions these beautiful animals, which he must have seen during his march over these very plains. 'The country,' says he, 'was a plain throughout, as even as the sea, and full of worm-wood. . . . The asses, when they were pursued, having gained ground on the horses, stood still (for they exceeded them much in speed); and when these came up with them, they did the same thing again. The flesh of those that were taken was like red deer, but more tender.'—(Strabo, i. § 5.) In fleetness," continues Mr. Layard, "they equal the gazelle; and to overtake them is a feat which only one or two of the most celebrated mares have been known to accomplish." The Asinus vulgaris of North-east Africa, and perhaps also the A. onager, or koulan, of Persia and West India, were probably known to, though not discriminated by the ancient Hebrews.

The modern Orientals hunt gazelles, partridges, sand-grouse, quails, herons, bustards, &c., by means of falcons; sometimes, as in the case of antelopes and hares, assisted by greyhounds. There is, however, no evidence to show that the ancient Orientals pursued falconry. "The partridge hunted on the mountains," to which David compares himself, alludes probably to the method of taking these birds by throw-sticks. The modes generally adopted in Biblical times for taking wild animals were by nets and pitfalls. Dogs do not appear to have been employed at all in the chase, and are almost always spoken of in terms of reproach. House-dogs were kept by the ancient Hebrews: "His watchmen are blind; they are all ignorant: they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark." And shepherd-dogs were used for guarding the flocks. Job complains that his juniors "have him in derision, whose fathers he would have disdained to set with the dogs of his flock." A sorry race they doubtless were, and the breed does not seem to have improved. "They are a mean, sinister, ill-conditioned generation," says Dr. Thomson, "kept at a distance, kicked about, and half-starved, with nothing noble or attractive about them." Poor brutes! it would have been a wonder had they been otherwise.

Of the Carnivora, express mention is frequently made in the Bible of the lion, the bear, the hyæna, the wolf, the leopard, the fox, and the jackal. All these animals, with the exception of the king of beasts, which has entirely disappeared from Palestine, are occasionally to be seen there now, though not in anything like the numbers which prevailed in Biblical times. That the lion, which was probably the Persian variety, formerly existed in considerable numbers in Palestine is evident from the frequent Bible allusions. According to Rabbinical writers, seven names at least are assigned to this animal at different periods of its life. In ancient times the lion inhabited some parts of Egypt; but it has long since ceased to exist there. Lebaoth, Beth-Lebaoth, and Laish probably derived their names from the lions which frequented these places. In the "forests," and "thickets," and "caves of the mountains," and in the brushwood of the Jordan banks, they had their lairs: this last was their favourite haunt; and if we do not over-interpret the words of Joannes Phocas, who travelled in Palestine about the end of the twelfth century, it would seem that lions were in his time occasionally seen there. The lion is represented as spoiling villages and towns, devouring men, and attacking flocks. Amos draws a very graphic picture of the "shepherd taking out of the mouth of the lion two legs or a piece of an ear." Harmer very ingeniously, and with much probability, supposes that this "piece of the ear" was a portion of the long pendulous ear of the Syrian goat, which is common in Palestine at this day. The Persian lion has not the courage of his African relative. According to Olivier, he has recourse rather to cunning than to force in the capture of his prey. He dares not attack the boar, and flies as soon as he perceives either a man or a woman, or even a child; if he catches a sheep, he makes off with his prey, but he abandons it to save himself when an Arab runs after him. If this is his true character it may serve to help us more easily to understand those scriptural passages which record instances of shepherds attacking lions single-handed.

The bear that destroyed the forty-and-two children that mocked Elisha was, no doubt, the Ursus Syriacus, the Palestine representative of the U. arctos of North Europe; it was noticed by Hemprich and Ehrenberg, on the Macmel, one of the summits of Lebanon ; and, according to Dr. Thomson, it is still found on the high mountains of that part of the country. The hyæna and wolf are also still found in Palestine, while foxes and jackals are common everywhere. We may here remark in passing that the three hundred foxes that Samson is said to have caught were no doubt jackals. The Hebrew schûal is the Persian shaghal, the German schagal, and the English jackal. Critics have advanced many objections to this transaction of the Hebrew Judge. Part of the difficulty, however, vanishes if we suppose that jackals are intended ; for these animals, which for the most part are gregarious in their habits, might readily have been captured in nets or pitfalls in great numbers ; and there is no necessity for concluding that Samson did all the hunting himself, and had no helpers. With respect to the other difficulty, that two animals united by their tails, instead of running off, would stand still and fight most fiercely, it must be remembered that we are not told the length of the cord that united the animals—a very important consideration—for a cord of merely a couple of yards long might have answered the required purpose ; jackals being, as was said, gregarious in their habits, we can easily believe that couples thus united would run together, and make the best of their way out of the sight of their captors.

Boars and leopards are still found in some parts of Palestine. Mount Tabor is a favourite haunt of wild boars ; and Pococke observed herds of these animals near the Jordan, where it flows out of the Lake of Tiberias. The havoc which wild boars do to vineyards is well known, and is especially referred to in the Bible. Miss E. A. Beaufort relates, in her charming work, "Egyptian Sepulchres and Syrian Shrines" (vol. ii. p. 59), a curious anecdote of a panther, which formed an attachment to a Russian hermit that a few years ago lived on the top of Mount Tabor :—"One winter's day a noble panther approached the cave in which he lived ; he threw him a piece of bread, and the panther crouched down at his feet. He soon became quite tame, and thenceforth, wherever the hermit went, the beautiful creature was at his side following him like a dog. Mr. Rogers, the English Consul at Haiffa, who told me this story, frequently saw them together on the mountain."

The ornithology of Palestine is very varied, and the Bible contains several allusions to birds. The migratory habits of some species are especially noticed :—"The stork in the heavens knoweth her appointed times, and the turtle, and the crane, and the swallow observe the time of their coming ;" "Doth the hawk fly by thy wisdom, and stretch her wings towards the south ?" In this country the smaller species of Raptors are resident the whole year ; but in Palestine nearly all are summer migrants. The singing of birds and the soft murmuring of the turtle-dove were indications that "the winter was past, the rain over and gone," and that the warm spring had commenced. Palestine is rich in song-birds. The blackbird and thrush of England mingle their melodious notes with those of the nightingale of the country (Ixos xanthopygus), the finest songster in Palestine, which pours forth its song long before sunrise, and continues its concert with its fellows till nearly noon. Various kinds of pigeons (Columbidae) may be seen ; the Turtur auritus frequents the orange-groves round Jaffa ; and the Turtur Egyptiacus is common near Jericho. Partridges, francolins, quails, and sand-grouse are abundant.

Much has been written on the subject of the "quails" which fed the wandering Israelites in the wilderness, but we think that the common quail is denoted by the Hebrew term Selav. Ludolf would have it that they were locusts, and has written a work in support of his theory. He has been followed by Patrick. Rudbeck said the selav were flying-fish (Exocetus). Ehrenberg was of the same opinion, substituting, however, the genus Trigla for Exocetus. Mr. Forster has advanced an opinion that red geese, of the genus Casarca, are the birds intended. Sir E. Tennent is inclined to adopt this explanation. Several Biblical commentators, as Rosenmüller and Gesenius, refer the selav to a species of sand-grouse (Pterocles alchata) common in the Bible lands. The bird last named has some slight claims, but not equal claims with the common quail, to represent the selav of the Scriptures. The explanation of selav by "wild-geese," or "cranes," is purely gratuitous. Mr. Forster's casarca is the C. rutila, a bird about the size of a mallard, which can by no means answer the supposed requisite of being two and a half cubits high. Professor Stanley's "large red-legged cranes" are evidently white storks (Ciconia alba), and would suit as to height, but certainly not as to flavour. Had the learned Professor of Ecclesiastical History only tried to swallow a mouthful of stork's flesh, he would have been convinced that the Israelites would never have eaten it for a day, much less for a month! The Hebrew selav is the same as the Arabic salwa, which, according to Schultens, is from an Arabic root signifying "to be fat;" the round, plump form of the quail suits this derivation admirably. Quails (Coturnix dactylosomans) migrate in immense numbers; as many as a hundred thousand have been taken near Nethuno in one day. They fly in the evening or at night; they are so exhausted after flight that they are barely able to rise a few feet from the ground, and are in consequence readily captured. "Clouds of quails," says Shaw, "alight in spring along the coasts of Provence; here they are sometimes found so exhausted, that for a few of the first days they may be caught with the hand." "And there went forth a wind from the Lord and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, as it were a day's journey on this side, and as it were a day's journey on the other side round about the camp, and as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth." This latter expression is explained by the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Josephus to refer to the height at which the quails flew above the ground in their "exhausted condition," as just mentioned.—Abridged from the "Quarterly Review."

ARCHBISHOP USHER'S DIRECTIONS TO MINISTERS.

1. Read and study the Scriptures carefully, wherein is the best learning, and the only infallible truth; they can furnish you with the best materials for your sermons, the only rules of faith and practice, the most powerful motives to persuade and convince the conscience, and the strongest arguments to confute all errors, heresies, and schisms. Therefore be sure, let all your sermons be congruous to them: and to this end it is expedient that you understand them as well in the originals as in the translations.

2. Take not hastily up other men's opinions without due trial, nor vent your own conceits, but compare them first with the analogy of faith, and rules of holiness recorded in the Scriptures, which are the proper tests of all opinions and doctrines.

3. Meddle with controversies and doubtful points as little as may be in your popular preaching, lest you puzzle your hearers, or engage them in wrangling disputations, and so hinder their conversion, which is the main design of preaching.

4. Insist most on those points that tend to effect sound belief,—the love of God to us, sincere love to God, repentance for sin,—and that may persuade to holiness of life; press these things home to the conscience of your hearers as of absolute necessity, leaving no gap for evasions, but bind them as close as may be to their duty. And as you ought to preach sound and orthodox doctrine, so ought you to deliver God's message as near as may be in God's words, that is, in such as are plain and intelligible, that the meanest of your auditors may understand. To which end it is necessary to back all practical precepts and doctrines with apt proofs from the Holy Scriptures, avoiding all exotic phrases, scholastic terms, unnecessary quotations of authors, and forced rhetorical figures, since it is not difficult to make easy things appear hard, but to render hard things easy is the hardest part of a good orator as well as preacher.

5. Get your hearts sincerely affected with the things you persuade others to embrace, that so you may preach experimentally, and your hearers perceive that you are in good earnest; and press nothing upon them, but what may tend to their advantage, and which yourself would venture your own salvation on.

6. Study and consider well the subjects you intend to preach upon, before you come into the pulpit, and then words will readily offer themselves; yet think what you are about to say before you speak, avoiding all uncouth, fantastical phrases or words, or nauseous, indecent, or ridiculous expressions, which will quickly bring preaching into contempt, and make your sermons and persons the subjects of sport and merriment.

7. Dissemble not the truths of God in any case, nor comply with the lusts of men, nor give any countenance to sin, by word or deed.

8. But, above all, you must never forget to order your own conversation, as becomes the gospel, that so you may teach, by example as well as by precept, and that you may appear a good divine every where as well as in the pulpit: for a minister's life and conversation are more heeded than his doctrine.

9. Yet after all this, take heed you be not puffed up with spiritual pride of your own virtues; nor with a vain conceit of your parts or abilities, nor yet be transported with the applause of men, nor dejected, nor discouraged with the scoffs and frowns of the wicked and profane.—Extracted from Bickersteth's Christian Student.

FOR THE FAMILY.

A WHISPER TO MOTHERS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "WHAT ARE YOU DOING?" ETC.

I WAS out to tea the other evening at a friend's house. We were reading aloud a very interesting book which had just been published. Georgie, a fine little lad of nine years old, was lying on the carpet by the open glass door, building up a house with some bricks which had been given him a day or two before. Whilst we were reading, the time-piece on the side table gave warning for the hour.

"Georgie, that is seven o'clock; pack up your bricks now, and get to work at your lessons ready for school."

"Ma, mayn't I just stop and finish this house? I've only got a bit of the roof and some chimneys to put on, and it won't take me a minute."

"No, Georgie; you always get to your lessons at seven, and I can't have you fall into idle shuffling ways. Pack them up directly now, and get out your books."

Still Georgie lingered. He had been all the evening since tea time building up his house. It only wanted a few touches now, and it was hard to leave it unfinished. He stood before it looking wistfully at his mamma, and then at the two or three bricks which remained to be put on.

But Mrs. Main is a woman of great determination. She brings up her children to implicit obedience, and her commands must be obeyed whatever else is left undone. Seeing Georgie's undecided look, she rose promptly from her chair, with one brisk motion of her hand shattered down his imposing edifice, and commenced packing the bricks away in the box.

"Now, Georgie, get your books, like a good boy, and sit down to your lessons."

The big tears fell splashing on his pinafore, one by one, but there was no rebellion in the boy's face. Slowly he turned away from his dismantled structure, sought up his lesson books, and, with a grieved look, sat down at the table to prepare for school next morning.

"I do admire your authority so, Mrs. Main," said Miss Day, an elderly maiden lady who was staying in the house on a visit. "You really have such command over your children. There isn't one mother in a hundred could have done that as you did."

"Oh! Miss Day, my children know it's no use hesitating when I tell them to do a thing. I expect to be obeyed, and they always submit without any words. I never allow altercation in my family," and Mrs. Main went on reading our new book. I made no remark, for I never think it wise to interfere personally with a mother's sacred right of authority over her own children.

Half an hour passed quickly away, and Mr. Main came in out of his study.

"My dear," he said, "have you remembered to write me out that list of cases to take to the meeting to-night?"

"No, love; I quite intended to do it at once after tea when you told me of it; but this book is really so very interesting that I could not lay it down."

"Could you write out the list now, dear? you know I ought to take it to-night."

"Well, Edward, I scarcely think it's of such great importance; another week will do just as well; and we're in the midst of such an amusing chapter, just now, that I really don't think I could give my mind to anything else. I'll see that you get it next week."

"Well, dear; only don't forget;" and Mr. Main went out again.

All this time little Georgie had been looking up at his mamma—a world of questioning in his mild grey eyes, still dim with the tears he had just shed; but he said nothing, and once more our reading was resumed.

A day or two after, I was at the house again. It was a splendid summer evening, and Georgie, with half a dozen of his young companions, was having a game of cricket in the garden. He was in the midst of "running for notches," when the ruthless stroke of the timepiece was heard. Mrs. Main went to the open glass door—

"Georgie, there's eight o'clock striking. Come away now, like a good boy, and go to bed."

"Just wait a little, ma, till we've finished our side, and find out who's won."

"Georgie, the clock has struck, and I insist on your coming in at once. Kiss me now, and go to bed."

There was no pleading in the boy's voice this time—no mute eloquence of tears; but his eyes sparkled with suppressed anger, and the firmly set close shut lips showed that his mother's forced strictness was sowing in her child's heart the seeds of determinate rebellion. He left his companions in the garden, hung up his cap, and without word or look to his mother, went up-stairs. She did not ask him again for the good-night kiss; but Mrs. Main is a rigid disciplinarian, and so long as she gains obedience, does not trouble herself about the love which should go with it.

This little incident sank into my thoughts. If I had a child to train I would not deal with him after this fashion ; and I would like to say a few words to mothers on the subject.

Implicit obedience is doubtless a requisite of home training, but only in things that are reasonable. Children have a keen sense of justice, and know as well as grown up people when you are requiring from them more than you would be willing to render to your own superiors. You tell your child to give up his play at a moment's notice, and settle down to a dry lesson. The little fellow leaves his hoe and rake, his box of tools, his steam engine, kite, or what not, with a brave effort, which, in children of a larger growth, would be called absolutely heroic, and works away at the hard sum, or harder page of grammar. By-and-by your husband comes in, and asks you to attend to something for him.

"Wait a moment, will you, my dear ? I'm in the midst of a very interesting story just now, and I really can't leave off to do it for you. Will you come again in half an hour ?"

The child looks at you. His faith in his mother is shaken. After that you will never again be to him just what you were before. He may obey you just the same, because your relation to him entitles you to exact that ; but henceforth his obedience will be mingled with a certain scepticism. You have put in his young heart a doubt as to the reliability of human nature.

Or, perhaps it is the night for the weekly service at church ; and as your elder daughter reaches down the books ready for starting, you interrupt her—"Fanny, dear, I really think after all we won't go. It is such a splendid evening, and I haven't been to the botanical gardens for an age. We will go there to-night."

Your little lad is busy learning his lessons for school, but he notices what you say. Next Sunday afternoon you call him in from the sunshiny lawn.

"Harry, dear, it's nearly two o'clock ; fetch your cap and Bible and run away to the Sunday-school, or you'll be late."

The child gazes into your face with a quaint, questioning expression. He says nothing, but the words in his little heart are these ;—"Ma went for a walk last Wednesday instead of going to church ; why can't I too ? I'd a deal rather stay here than go to Sunday-school." Ah, mother ! you did much more that night than simply neglect church. You did something that you can never, never quite undo.

It seems to me that we shall never do much in training children, except by being ourselves what we wish them to be, and by showing them that we acknowledge and obey those laws of truth and justice to which we expect them to render an obedience so rigid and oftentimes painful. My little friend Georgie Main ought not to have been compelled to desert that brick house of his, and settle down to an hour's spell of dry lessons, by a mother who, not many minutes afterwards, declined to lay down an amusing book and attend to her husband's wants. We must not order an unfortunate little lad to pack up his playthings, and "go to bed like a good boy," as soon as the clock has struck eight, if we make no scruple in that child's presence of setting aside daily duties for daily pleasures, and putting off needful engagements for the sake of passing amusements.

Children want to have justice done to them, and they are sharp enough in finding out when they get it. You may preach to your boys and girls from morning to night about "duty first and pleasure afterwards," but the sermon will go for nothing if your own life is not a practical illustration of it. You may read them the prettiest books and tell them the prettiest stories about the joys of benevolence, and the evils of selfishness, and the little eyes will brighten, and the little faces glow, and they will say, "Read that again, Ma, please—tell me the story over ;" but the little hearts will be untouched still, and the little fingers held tight as ever over the halfpenny which you want them to drop into the missionary box, unless they see "Ma" practise the same lessons, and live like what she reads.

There is a saying in my country, that old maids' children are always the best taught. It may be so. Perhaps if I had a nursery of little boys and girls to look after, I should make no better of them, practically, than most people ; but I do think one great secret of family management is this—to be ourselves what we wish our children to be, and to obey in our own daily lives, after its purest, most spiritual meaning, that law which we set before them. And woe to that mother who, neglecting the sacred trust committed to her—seeing not its infinite honour and beauty—shall, by needless self-indulgence or ignorant indifference, cause one of these little ones to offend !

SPOILED CHILDREN.

SCENE IN A BREAKFAST ROOM.

"I think," said the lady to her children's governess, "it will be better for Charley and Louise to have their breakfast in the nursery, for I know that our friends from towa like a quiet meal. What do you think ?"

"It will, perhaps, be the more agreeable plan."

"Well then, my dears, go up-stairs, and you shall be attended to."

"O ma !" cried two young voices at once ; "O ma, we must stay in the breakfast-room !"

"No ; I cannot allow it. Be good children, and do as I wish."

Charley and his sister, like many young pets under similar circumstances, could easily see infirmity of purpose underneath the manner of a parent who turned her back on the instant, as if she had no further interest in the obedience of her children.

"Now then, dears," said the governess, "come with me into the nursery as your ma wishes you."

"No, no !" said Charley.

"No, no !" repeated Louise ; "ma will say nothing more about it ; she will allow us to stay here, I am sure, when pa comes."

And Charley twirled his cane, and Louise threw herself on the sofa.

Poor governess ! thy difficulties thicken about thee ; and the worn expression which in spite of thy youth, is gathering on thy face, tells of many a vain struggle to keep thy sorry place consistently between weak fondlers and over-indulged fondlings. The father comes. The mother re-enters. The guests take their seats, and the young conquerors press their way to the table and choose their places without even a reproving look from the easy mother.

"Charles !" says the father, "how dare you come to the table with that cane in your hand, sir ? Put it down directly or leave the table !"

The head of the cane slowly disappeared from above the cloth, but it was still held firmly beneath ; and neither Charles nor his cane acknowledged the force of parental will or word.

"Ma, I want some fish," said the boy, rudely stretching his hand across a visitor's plate, and pointing to a dish of delicacies provided specially for a particular guest.

"No, my boy, you must not have any. Please to wait till your friends are cared for."

"O pa ! I do wish to have some fish ; I must taste it."

"Charles, I am ashamed of you. Please to wait, sir."

"No, pa, ma said I should have some !" cried the half-blubbering child ; "please I should like to taste it."

"And if Charley has any I shall have some too," was Louise's cry.

"Well, be good ; that's good children. Charles, don't cry, my darling ! Come here ! kiss me and be good ! Don't be naughty ; and if I give you a little fish you must be quiet, and not disturb the table. I am ashamed that you should behave so before our friends. Be good, that's a dear !"

Charley had some fish, of course, and so had Louise ; and the guests were allowed to feel that they were expected to sacrifice the honours of the most dainty dish to the youngest pets of the house.

Those were spoiled children. Their parents did the wretched work, and will eat the fruit of their doings in the evil time coming.

POETRY.

THE BURIAL OF MOSES.

Composed by C. F. ALEXANDER, and published in a volume of poems, written for the benefit of an Asylum for Mutes in the North of Ireland.)

"And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor; but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day."—Deut. xxxiv. 6.

By Nebo's lonely mountain,
On this side Jordan's wave;
In the vale in the land of Moab,
There lies a lonely grave;
And no man dug the sepulchre,
And no man saw it e'er;
For the angels of God upturned the sod,
And laid the dead man there.

That was the grandest funeral
That ever passed on earth;
But no man heard the trampling,
Or saw the train go forth.
Noiselessly as the daylight
Comes when the night is done,
And the crimson streak on ocean's cheek
Grows into the great sun.

Noiselessly as the spring time,
Her crown of verdure weaves;
And all the trees on all the hills
Open their thousand leaves.
So without sound of music,
Or voice of them that wept;
Silently down from the mountain's crown
The grand procession swept.

Perchance the bald old eagle,
On grey Beth-peor's height,
Out of his rocky eyrie
Looked on the wondrous sight.
Perchance the lion, stalking,
Still shuns that hallowed spot;
For beast and bird have seen and heard
That which man knoweth not.

But when the warrior dieth,
His comrades in the war,
With arms reversed and muffled drum,
Follow the funeral car;
They show the banners taken,
They tell his battles won,
And after him lead his masterless steed,
While peals the minute gun.

Amid the noblest of the land
Men lay the sage to rest,
And give the bard an honoured place,
With costly marble drest;
In the great minster transept,
Where lights like glories fall;
And the choir sings and the organ rings
Along the emblazoned wall.

This was the bravest warrior
That ever buckled sword;
This the most gifted poet
That ever breathed a word;
And never earth's philosopher
Traced with his golden pen,
On the deathless page truths half so sage
As he wrote down for men.

And had he not high honour?—
The hill-side for his pall;
To lay him in state while angels wait
With stars for tapers tall;
And the dark rock pines like tossing plumes
Over his bier to wave, [land,
And God's own hand in that mountain
To lay him in the grave.

In that deep grave, without a name,
Whence his uncoffined clay
Shall break again—most wondrous thought!—
Before the Judgment Day;
And stand with glory wrapt around
On the hills he never trod,
And speak of the strife that won our life
With the incarnate Son of God.

O lonely tomb, in Moab's land,
O dark Beth-peor's hill;
Speak to these curious hearts of ours,
And teach them to be still.
God hath His mysteries of grace,
Ways that we cannot tell;
He hides them deep like the secret sleep
Of him He loved so well.

THE SABBATH-SCHOOL.

BOOKS.

Books have prodigious power. I had a young friend once, whose early years were passed under decidedly religious influences, he was endowed with unusual strength of mind, and at a very early period of his life, became distinguished as a public man. Few memorials in the quiet seclusion of Mount Auburn mark the resting place of one more respected for learning and integrity. He had been an observer of the devoted piety, and triumphant death of a Christian friend, whose hope of salvation had no basis but the blood and righteousness of Christ, and his own views until he reached maturity were settled, (at least speculatively), upon the same foundation. But a printed sermon by a distinguished preacher of a radically different faith, was put into his hands, and with the help of peculiar personal associations, changed at once the whole current of his views, and persuaded him to adopt a system of belief, in which Christ and his cross occupy a very subordinate place, if recognized at all. I do not cite this case to encourage a blind adherence to one set of opinions, however hoary with age, and fortified by venerable names, or by the authority of powerful sects, but to illustrate the influence of a book over a strong mind, and long settled convictions. If we could trace the means which have contributed to form our present views to three principal external sources, viz. : what we have seen, what we have heard, and what we have read, we should probably find the last by no means the least active or fertile. A book is a silent but most intimate companion ; it does not ask attention, nor take offence at neglect ; its name and dress give us no certain clue to its character ; the opinions of others as to its value may be the result of prejudice or ignorance. We are told that to know what it is, we must read it, and to read it is to subject ourselves to its influence for better or worse. Prudent travellers in public conveyances, or sojourners at hotels, are very careful what intercourse they encourage, or allow strangers to have with them, for a pickpocket is not always distinguishable by dress or manners from an honest gentleman ; but how much more vigilant should we be to preserve the mind and heart from contact with what may pollute or pervert, than to protect our purse or watch from light-fingers ! When you take up a book to read, of the character of which you are wholly unapprised, is your presumption less than when you admit to your confidence one to whose principles and motives you are a stranger ? It might indeed be easier to throw the book aside than to discard the treacherous friend ; but on the other hand, the former may conceal the poisonous fang till the fatal wound is made ; while the latter by his tone and manner will be very likely to betray his character in season to defeat his evil purpose.

The art of introducing false or equivocal principle into the public lecture, the newspaper paragraph, or the book, in company with incontrovertible truths, has been brought to great perfection in our day ; it is not always, perhaps not generally, an intentional fraud upon the hearer or reader. The author's or lecturer's mind may have been perverted ; or truth and error may be so uncertainly comprehended as to be mistaken the one for the other ; but however ample such an apology may be for writing a bad book, it does not cover our imprudence, not to say <sup>folly</sup>, in reading it. Magazines, pamphlets, and newspapers, are the sluices through which every production of the human brain, that can be shaped in type metal, passes into the reading world. There is no principle so corrupt, no sentiment so false, no ribaldry so base, no jest so profane or obscene, that it has been denied an imprint. And what is particularly to be noted, the brightest wit, and the most sparkling popular style, are found in close alliance with some of the grossest forms of error. If marriage, the most sacred of all human relations on which the chief interest of civilization and social virtue and progress rest, and to which woman owes her elevation above the condition of abject slaves ; if marriage is to be assailed as a factitious rite, to be modified o entirely dispensed with as the parties concerned may choose, some glib romancer is at hand to prepare a flashy tale, or magazine story in which the sacred bond which the hand of God hath woven is rejected as a superfluous obligation, or an impertinent imposition on natural liberty, and a hundred thousand copies are afloat in a week, and largely in the hands of those who are least on their guard, and most easily deluded by meretricious reasoning.

Direct and open assaults on the Christian faith are rare in our day. Its principles commend themselves so generally to the wise and good, and are so obviously necessary to the well-being of society, that it requires no little boldness to impugn them; and besides, there is a way of sapping their foundations which has become quite common, and while it is much more effective, it excites no odium and very little resistance. Those who are unaware of the Protean shapes assumed by the subtle supplanters of our faith, are very likely to find themselves in the midst of a plausible argument against some cardinal doctrine of the Bible, before they suspect their proximity to danger.

A popular story is advertised, we will suppose, under the title of "The Forest of Glenburne," a Tale of the Reformation. It is puffed into public notice, as any thing may be by sufficient effort, and is soon making its influence felt on thousands of minds. It is written with signal ability, a vein of historical truth runs through it, and the incidents are selected and wrought into the story with consummate skill and tact, giving it all the vividness of a present reality. The principal parties neither say nor do what is not perfectly proper and orthodox; we are enchanted by their purity, love of truth, intelligence, charity, and social virtues. A conversation springs up between them respecting a notable church dignitary, named Cranmer: some of his acts and opinions are the theme of much public discussion and controversy, and it is quite natural that the subject should be introduced into private circles. If Archbishop Cranmer be an intelligent and sensible godly man, competent to decide questions of faith and duty; if he conscientiously abide by the truth when error is in the ascendant, and encounter the terrors of persecution and death with a stout heart and steady faith; his example and authority will be of great weight. His rebuke of the ceremonies and superstitions of a corrupt religion will be felt, and neither arts, arguments, nor threats will avail against the powers of truth so illustriously vindicated, even at the stake. But now, suppose we put in array the attractions which Popery presents to the corrupt hearts of men, its claims to exclusive authority and infallibility, the imposing ceremonies of its ritual, its appeals to sense rather than to faith, and the coincidence of its whole genius and spirit with the gross conceptions of ignorance and superstition. And suppose further, that one of the intelligent and interesting parties to whom we just now referred is disposed to think well of Popery, and would fain bring his fair companion to embrace his view: to further his object, the good old Archbishop Cranmer is brought forward, and though treated with great deference as one of the lights of the church and a pillar of the reformed faith, yet arguments and opinions are put into his lips, which are too shallow for a school boy to use. The effects are what might be anticipated. "If the defences of the new faith be so weak as all that," says the too willing convert, "If that be all such a great and good man can make of them, it will certainly be safer for me to embrace that which claims to be primitive and infallible;" and the crucifix and beads are eagerly grasped. Or perhaps certain religious doctrines are in vogue which are not relished by persons of taste and independent opinion. Opposers make little or no head against them by the ordinary methods of evidence and arguments, and so they betake themselves to stratagem; they frame or exhume a system which in some of its features resembles that which is so obnoxious, and running back to the time when such a system had supporters here and there, a story is invented, and its incidents and characters so arranged as to bring into discussion the offensive creed. The tale will be wrought up with surprising skill. A clergyman will be introduced, who espouses and promulgates the odious doctrines. A disciple of his will be another leading person in the drama, and perhaps a rare specimen of credulity and bigotry. Other parties will appear of the most amiable and attractive character; they shrink from the harsh doctrinal views of the preacher; they take brighter views of religion, and are made to exhibit all the loveliness, and gentleness, and benevolence, which are supposed to be the fruits of a true faith. The contrast is very effective, and the reader gladly turns away from the cold, stern severity of what passed for orthodoxy, as from a frightful dream. The next sermon he hears will perhaps bring to view some leading truth of Scripture, so nearly allied in substance, if not in form, to what he has seen so odiously depicted in the romance of a past generation, that he is shocked, and hastens to some place where his new taste will not be offended. Or suppose again, the purpose is to bring into contempt, in a more general way, evangelical religion, and its ministers and disciples. Then the story is framed to present in contrast, (not so boldly as to awaken suspicion,) on one side a character, genial, generous, companionable, and free from all offensive traits that worldly people are quick to detect and condemn; and on the other, a professor, and perhaps public teacher of religion, thrusting himself, and his favourite topics, out of season quite as often as in season, into all places and companies, and exhibiting in his temper and manner, anything but the gentleness, and suavity, and punctilious regard to the proprieties of life, such as religion enjoins, with much more consistency and authority than the customs of society. Interviews occur, in which questions of duty or consistency are discussed, and the "parson" or the "deacon," or the other "well-meaning man," is made to propound and defend the most ultra views in such terms, in such a tone of voice, and with such weak arguments, as a lively imagination may conceive to be most provocative of contempt and disgust. If the tale is well wrought, the reader is scarcely conscious of its being other than a veritable report of something which actually occurred, instead of a gross caricature. The religious opinions of some of the most learned and godly men, that appear in the annals of the Christian church, have been thus presented in some fictitious tale; first misrepresented and distorted, and then made responsible for inferences and conclusions, which shock common sense and expose those to whom they are imputed to pity and contempt.

In the graver class of books—as histories and biographies,—similar insidious attempts to subvert sound principles implanted by a careful education, are by no means rare. But the more common theatre for the display of such skill is, as we have said, the lighter and cheaper literature, which finds its way into the hands of all classes and communities. Cart-loads of printed trash, decked out with coarse cuts, are in constant transit over the thoroughfares of the country; and though you may be protected by your social position from direct contact with them, you can scarcely fail to feel their incidental influence in the general deterioration of moral sentiment and intellectual vigour, which they are sure to produce. So rapid is the accumulation of printed matter, good and bad, that but a small portion of it can be read, even by those who have no other occupation. Some selection is therefore indispensable, and in making it, you should have reference to the cultivation of taste, the improvement of the mind, a proper familiarity with the current topics of interest; but most of all to the establishment or confirmation of right moral and religious principles. The authorship, or imprint of a volume, has long since ceased to be any certain guarantee of its character. Doctors of divinity in high repute among those who are regarded as evangelical, avow and defend doctrines and principles that are entirely irreconcilable with the received systems of our Protestant faith. Works of science are deeply impregnated with the poison of atheism. Magazines and newspapers, by incidental, but not less effectual, thrusts at our holy religion, succeed in diverting large numbers from the contemplation of it, and in imbuing others with prejudices and false views, which are, perhaps, never fully removed. Hence you will not wonder that your Christian friends should feel some anxiety to forewarn you on this subject. There will be no difficulty in finding as much reading as you desire, both secular and religious, outside of all obnoxious or equivocal productions. You will have neither time nor inclination to investigate questions of speculative theology; and as to the teachings of Holy Scripture, few religiously disposed people at the present day would insist on a higher, or be satisfied with a lower standard of orthodoxy, than is found in Hannah More's writings.

If you should decline to read a book or periodical, which a friend commends to you, on the ground that you stand in doubt of the author's views, or that you do not wish to read anything which advocates what you regard as an error, you will perhaps be at once rebuked for a course so narrow and illiberal. How will you ever know what truth is, it will be said, unless you examine it in contrast with error? A pretty judge indeed, to make up your mind upon hearing one side; you set down all who differ from you as errorists; to be right, they must embrace your opinions. Well, you withdraw yourself into the shell of your infallibility, and refuse to examine the grounds on which they rest their convictions. There is something plausible in this appeal. There is an appearance of bigotry, of pusillanimity in declining a challenge to investigate the grounds of another's convictions; and yet it is eminently unjust. Two men are about to engage in business, one decides to embark in manufacturing cotton goods, and the other betakes himself to mining coal. They have severally considered the probabilities of success, and each has acted upon his own conviction. It would be no evidence of narrowness or illiberality of views, if the manufacturer should decline to go into argument with the miner upon the comparative eligibility of the two pursuits. All his thoughts and energies must be bent to the prosecution of his own business; to spend his time in reading, or hearing arguments to unsettle his confidence in it, would be only to insure his failure. If each has used all proper and available means to obtain information, and has embarked heartily and energetically in the chosen enterprise, their success depends upon turning the eye and ear away from all diverting sights and sounds. Blind men who think they see, are very unsafe guides for those who are conscious that they are blind. Why should one who has been convinced upon evidence satisfactory to himself that, as a descendant of apostate Adam his nature is unholy, that his violations of the divine law have made him obnoxious to its terrible penalty, that provision is made in the gospel for the pardon of his sin and the remission of deserved punishment, that by faith in Christ and repentance towards God, he may obtain eternal life, and that faith and repentance are gifts of God, freely bestowed in answer to prayer, why should such a one willingly read a book, or hear a sermon or lecture in which these convictions are assailed? Why demolish a house built with so much care, and on what appeared a rock, in order to try some other foundation which cannot possibly be so safe? Why leave a good harbour, and put out into a stormy sea, upon a vague suggestion that a safe anchorage may be found somewhere else? Would a dutiful child willingly read or hear an argument against the obligation of the fifth commandment? Would a trustworthy and contented labourer patiently listen to evidence that his employer is a tyrant or a fool?

If I were asked to read a treatise advocating the doctrine of universal salvation, I should courteously, but peremptorily decline, on the ground that my views on that subject were well settled, from such an examination of the Sacred Scriptures as I had been able to give, and that I had no desire to know how much could be said in support of some other theory, so long as I was entirely satisfied of the truth of the one I had embraced. But, says my friend, you want me to adopt your views, and to this end you ask me to read your books and tracts. By no means; if, after proper inquiry and investigation, you are convinced that my views of this subject are not in accordance with divine revelation, you should resist every attempt to persuade you to renounce or modify your convictions, and should cleave to them with invincible pertinacity.

MISCELLANIES.

THE GREAT CONFLICT.

BY REV. T. SWALLOW, OF LIVERPOOL.

THAT we live in very important and eventful times will not be questioned by the serious and discerning. If we look into the political and religious worlds we see that both are agitated from centre to circumference. Light is contending with darkness, truth with error, virtue with vice. This conflict has long been going on ; it was commenced when the gracious promise of redemption was first made to man ; it has been perpetuated through all succeeding ages. Doubtless, however, towards the last, the contest will be severe and deadly ; nevertheless the victory is not doubtful, but certain, and shall be given to Him who came "from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah ; who is glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength, who speaketh in righteousness, and is mighty to save." "He must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet." Yes, and most assuredly this will be done ; hence the following words of holy inspiration, "I am God, and there is none else. I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, that unto me every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall swear." The battle, then, we say, has long since been begun, and is now carried on. But where is the field ? "The field is the world." Upon this immense and spacious plain the contending armies have marshalled their forces. The army of Satan is large, and by far the largest ; its instruments of war are ignorance, superstition, error, vice, in their various and almost numberless forms. The army of Immanuel is small, and far the smallest ; but its weapons of war are of celestial origin and temper, "not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." In this great spiritual contest all the servants of the Most High are called upon to engage. The energies of all are required. The most vigorous and well-directed efforts of all must be put forth. There must be united combinations of power ; this is indispensable to present success, also to future final conquest. We are aware that the great Captain of salvation could effect the purposes of his sovereign will, independently of any human agency whatsoever. Within the vast dominions of his empire he has immense resources of power that await his fiat, and are ever ready to move in accordance with his will. At any moment he has at his command "more than twelve legions of angels." By the agency of these he might accomplish his victorious designs ; yes, or without them : for were he to arise in the omnipotence of his strength, and make bare his mighty arm, terror would soon be spread through opposing ranks, and all his enemies would fall prostrate in submission at his feet. But God works by other means. In carrying out and bringing to a successful issue his wondrous plans of mercy and grace, he deigns to make use of human agency. To the members of the militant Church, in their individual and collective capacity, is committed the mighty task of converting our sinful world ; of subjugating its rebellious inhabitants to the supreme authority and rightful sway of the true Messiah and Prince of peace.

This is a great work indeed ; great in the object it contemplates, nor less great when viewed in connection with its glorious results. It is a work in which all the men of Israel, without any exception, are called upon to help ; by their influence, their property, their prayers, their talents, their time : in short, by all the consecrated ransomed powers of their bodies and spirits. Nor is it a matter of choice on their part to engage in this work or refuse. The obligation is binding, the duty imperative. When an individual enlists into the army of an earthly king, he engages that his best services shall be performed whenever they may be required ; hence, however much he might wish for an exemption from duty, he has it not ; and were he to refuse to take the field and charge the enemy when the word of command is given, he would be justly regarded as a traitor to his king and country. So it is considered in a spiritual sense in reference to the Christian. When he enlists under the banner of Jesu's cross, he swears allegiance to the King of glory, solemnly engages to "fight the battles of the Lord," to "wrestle against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." If, therefore, when summoned to action, he refuse to take the field, he ought to be regarded and reproached as a deserter from his Saviour's cause and even a traitor to his God!

But further, in the matter in question there is no neutrality. In "the battle of the warrior, which is with confused noise and garments rolled in blood," there may be neutrality. If a soldier under an earthly monarchy will not take the field against his enemies he may refuse to exert any influence that would give them the least advantage, and thus, by not assisting either party, occupy a neutral position. Not so, however, in the army of our spiritual Israel. Those who refuse to march and contend in valiant combat against the common foe, actually increase the power of the enemy, and turn their own arms against their friends and companions in the fight who are still faithful in their Master's righteous cause. Yes, every soldier of the cross who is not unitedly engaged in a determined, persevering war against the opposing powers of darkness, is contributing an influence which tends to consolidate the interests, perpetuate the reign, and extend the empire of Satan! He who fights not against the devil fights against God. He who joins not in close and vigorous contest against the emissaries of hell, is engaged in fearful though mistaken conflict against the royal armies of heaven. Accordingly our Lord has said, "He that is not with me is against me." Another important point in the subject before us is, the peril and punishment of those who stand aloof in the great spiritual conflict, and "come not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Their criminal indifference does not pass unnoticed. No, it is especially seen by him that sitteth in the heavens, and is marked by certain, though perhaps unknown righteous displeasure and just indignation. The lamentable case of the unfaithful, disobedient inhabitants of Meroz, recorded in the fifth chapter of the Book of Judges, ought to serve as a beacon to warn such persons of their imminent danger, and assure them that their dishonourable conduct, if not repented of, will not pass with impunity, but be followed, sooner or later, by richly-deserved punishment. And although it may not be inflicted by the denunciation of a positive "curse," proceeding from the mouth of "the angel of the Lord," nor carried into effect during the vicissitudes of time, yet it will be in the great day of eternity; that day in which, amid the terrific lightning's flash, and the awful thunder's roar, the Judge of mankind—"shall come and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that served God and him that served him not." Several important inquiries may now be made.

First. What, at the present juncture, is the state of the conflict of which we have written? The voice of full triumph has not as yet been heard, because the battle is not yet won. It is true that the engagement has become general, fierce, and determined; several of the enemy's forts have been stormed and taken; but yet the "prince of the power of the air" maintains his sway over many millions of subjects in his usurped dominions. "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty." Vice, in its complicated and hideous forms, abounds on every hand. Iniquity runs through our land as with the fearful impetuosity of a mighty desolating torrent. The daring impious arm of mutiny and rebellion is high and lifted up; the vast majority of our apostate race boldly reject the authority of the Almighty and challenge his omnipotent power. In short, the most malignant, inveterate powers of earth and hell are engaged and sworn to resist to the uttermost the claims and rights of the King immortal; and if they could they would destroy every vestige of Christianity, assail even the citadel of heaven itself,—and, were it possible, shake and beat down the very pillars that support the everlasting throne. We perceive, then, that a great work yet remains to be done. Many parts in the territories of Satan's kingdom are still to be taken and possessed. Before the armies of the cross can mingle in the full chorus of triumph, they must go on from strength to strength, till at length they shall "come off more than conquerors through him that hath loved them." When, indeed, the conquest shall be complete and universal, it were difficult—in fact, under existing circumstances impossible—to determine. It may, however, be safely affirmed, that, if the work go on only at the ratio that it has done during the last ten years, it will be lamentably long before it can be said, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ."

Here, the following appropriate question is naturally suggested, What is the conduct of the servants of Christ who are now in the field of conflict? Are all of them uniformly courageous and valiant? There is reason to fear it is not so. A few of them, it is true, are distinguishing themselves in the high places of the field, as mighty champions for the Lord of hosts; but some, alas! have grown faint in the day of battle, laid down the weapons of warfare, and are running, as it were, from the scene of action. Others are almost quarrelling with their comrades concerning the armour they shall wear, the instruments they shall use, and by what names the different regiments in the camp of Israel shall be called. And so, instead of being firmly combined in mighty phalanx, and marching forth "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," in order to attack and vanquish their numerous enemies; they are granting them a respite, a reprieve, and actually furnishing them with means whereby they may recruit their forces and perpetuate their power. "The sacramental host of God's elect" are not sufficiently zealous in his cause, nor true to their sovereign Lord. The various sections of the Redeemer's Church do not prosecute their holy enterprise with becoming ardour, fidelity, or perseverance; and it will be well if the great Head of the Church does not give the honours, and award the palms of final conquest to another people who shall be chosen, true, and faithful.

Another inquiry now ~~presents~~ itself, and it is this: What are we doing to serve the common cause, and hasten the universal triumphs of the cross? Servants of him who is King in Zion, how does this question affect you? If you are in the field, how are you engaged? Are you joining in the great fight against the King's enemies? Possibly you have merely taken up your position in some elevated part of the field, where you can behold the evolutions of both the contending armies; and it may be that, as you gaze upon the grand and awful scene, you are ready to say within yourselves, "The noble army of our Emmanuel is sure to win the day without any effort at all on our part; therefore, it is not necessary that we should expose our persons, or peril our lives, since it is quite evident that the warfare can be prosecuted and accomplished altogether without us." Ah! if it is thus you are speaking and acting, depend upon it you are neglecting imperative duty, and incurring a serious amount of guilt. Remember the case of the inhabitants of Meroz, already referred to. It is very likely that they also made similar excuses; but this did not prevent the malediction of Jehovah from coming on them: neither can such a vain excuse prevent the curse of the Almighty from falling upon you. God can and may curse you in your person or your families, your circumstances or business, in your life and death, in time and in eternity. Oh! take timely warning. Arouse yourselves to activity and diligence. Endeavour to ascertain—not whether your services are required, or can be dispensed with—not whether you can do anything, and if anything how little; but rather strive to find out how much you can do, also in what way you may most effectually do it. Put away everything like apathy, all undue earthly care and indulgence. Gird yourselves with power divine, and in the field of conflict "watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." Oh! that all the servants of the Most High were thus engaged; for then the contest would speedily terminate, and victory would be gained. The joyful acclaim of triumph would soon resound through the whole universe itself. The dwellers upon earth and the inhabitants of heaven would mingle in sweet harmonious concert; and the burden of their rapturous song would be, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever."

Serious reader! the question we have now to urge, and press upon your conscience, is this: Are you for us or for our enemies, for God or Satan, for heaven or hell? Perchance you are undecided; if you are, we appeal to you in the words of the prophet, "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal then follow him." "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." Neutral, as we have shown, you cannot be; the thought is absurd, the thing impossible. Hence, if you are not in the camp of our spiritual Israel, you are regarded as being in the ranks of the King's enemies—found contending against the Lord of earth and sky. Awful, indeed, and perilous is your condition; for "Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker!" When he bends his bow, makes ready his arrows, and prepares the instruments of death, when his hand takes hold on judgment, and he speaks in vengeance, his foes shall flee before him, and all "his enemies shall lick the dust." If, then, you would be saved from shame from defeat, from utter destruction, from everlasting death, cast down at once the weapons of your rebellion, sue for reconciliation and peace with your offended God, by faith in the atoning death of his Son. Join the noble army of the cross, and under the glorious Captain of the great salvation "fight the good fight of faith." On the broad field of conflict engage in untired, vigorous, persevering combat against the daring foes of God and man; and then, most assuredly, when the battle shall terminate, and all warfare is past, you shall receive the victor's crown, and wear it as your due.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

THETFORD CIRCUIT.—REMOVAL OF DEBT ON HOCKHAM SCHOOL-ROOMS.—Dear Editor, —An effort of the most successful kind has just been made in this place for removing the entire debt on the rooms built for the accommodation of the Sabbath and Day schools. About twelve months since these rooms were erected at an outlay of £70, which sum, with certain extras and et ceteras, was augmented to more than £80. Soon after the opening services more than £60 of the outlay was paid. Yet, although the friends succeeded so well in this undertaking, they could not be fully satisfied until the whole of the debt was removed. Accordingly, on June 21st, special sermons were preached by the Rev. J. Jackson in the morning, and Miss M. C. Buck in the afternoon and evening. On the 22nd Miss Buck preached again at 3 o'clock, this was followed by a public tea at which a goodly number sat down. In the evening a public meeting was addressed by Miss Buck, Mr. Hannett, and the writer. The sum required to meet all demands was forthcoming, and the friends and managers of the institution are glad to be able to pronounce the building debtless. Towards the accomplishment of this desirable object the liberality of Mr. G. Doubleday was extensively manifested, as was also that of Mr. J. Finch, Miss Finch, and Messrs. Norton, Ransomes and Adams; and a number of benevolent spirits who were willing to assist. J. ALLISON.

OPENING OF A CHAPEL AT CATFORTH.—PRESTON CIRCUIT.—Catforth is a thinly populated village in the Fylde country, about six miles from Preston. Travellers passing through the place may now behold a rather unusual sight, namely, a couple of Primitive Methodist chapels standing one alongside the other with only a few yards between them. The old chapel, which remains to show the contrast between the past and the present, has long been too small for the increasing congregation. After suffering much inconvenience for want of room, the friends determined on making an effort to obtain a more suitable place to worship in. They set about the work in earnest, and they have succeeded admirably. Some thought they would fail, but with the help of God they have surmounted every difficulty.

On the 4th of last March the foundation-stone was laid by J. Lamb, Esq., of Preston, who was presented with a very beautiful silver trowel, bearing an appropriate inscription, and a pretty mahogany mallet. James Thompson, Esq., of Catforth, prepared plans of the building, and had them lithographed, and the specications printed, at his own cost, and he very kindly engaged, on the same terms, to superintend the erection throughout. We are very much indebted to Mr. Thompson for his great kindness and very valuable services in this undertaking. All our friends have not only laboured heartily in carting, &c., which has all been done gratis, they have also contributed liberally. The building progressed rapidly and satisfactorily from the laying of the first brick to the finish. The chapel is built of red brick, and is 39 feet long and 30 feet wide—18 feet from floor to ceiling—well lighted and very well ventilated. The land on which it stands is freehold, and comprises 260 square yards. The chapel was opened for worship on the 28th June, when three impressive sermons were preached, those in the morning and evening by Mr. W. Mallalieu of Manchester, and that in the afternoon by the Rev. W. Knox, of Kirkham, (Independent); the collections for the day amounted to £38 12s. The services were continued on the 5th of July, when the Rev. J. Garner, of Oldham, preached in the morning and afternoon two powerful sermons, and in the evening an excellent sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Armitage, of Elswick (Independent); the collections for the day amounting to £35.

On Monday, the 6th July, we wound up these pleasing services by a tea meeting. A collection was made and £23 were realized—making the total amount collected on the two Sabbaths and at the tea meeting £96 12s. The entire cost of land and building is £334, which I am happy to say has been met by the subscriptions and collections. The house is the Lord's, not a penny of debt being left on it. Our friends are worthy of all praise for the zeal and energy with which they have pushed on the work; some of them have had a deal of labour in soliciting, and gathering in the subscriptions, but it has all been done cheerfully, and as the result shows, has been done well.

We wish to tender our thanks to J. Thompson, Esq., for his liberal donation of £65, and important aid in other ways. Also to the following persons for the liberal assistance afforded: W. Ludell, sen., £10; H. Dickinson, £10; T. Waring, £10; Thomas Miller, £10; W. Cross, £5; W. Ludell, junr., £4; R. Ludell, £5 5s.; J. Almond, £5; R. Almond, £1 10s.; W. Clarkson, £5; W. Rowcliffe, £5; W. Kirby, £5; J. Bickerstaff, Esq., £5; Ralph Hall, £3; Samuel Salthouse, £4 19s. 6d.; J. Shorrocks, £5; J. Lamb, £2; J. Tuson, £2; J. Knowles, £2; G. Breakell, £2; E. Gillon, £3; G. Tunstall, £3; Mrs. Blundell and Sons, £3; R. Ray, £1 10s.; H. Almond, £1 10s. That this may be the birthplace of many souls is the prayer of J. GRAHAM.

CHAPEL OPENING, LUDLOW CIRCUIT.—In the town of Tenbury, Worcestershire, we have had a small society in connection with this circuit for a number of years; but it has never been other than in a feeble state, one reason for which has been the need of a proper place in which to worship, our best place being a small and inconvenient cottage. On entering this station two years ago, I found the few friends at Tenbury very anxious to have a chapel; and I, seeing the necessity, resolved to do my best to obtain one. After making a number of unsuccessful applications for land, we at length succeeded in purchasing a small cottage and garden for the sum of £120.

The corner-stones were laid on Thursday, April 16th, 1863, by Mrs. Smallman and Mrs. Brandford, of Ludlow; and addresses having been delivered by the Revs. H. Badger (Weeleian), and G. R. Soper (Independent), and a collection made on the ground, amounting to £4 4s. 4d., including a sovereign from each of the afore-named ladies, a public tea-meeting was held in the Corn Exchange, at which about 400 persons partook of an excellent tea. The chapel is 33 feet by 19 feet in the clear.

The opening services took place on July 26th, when sermons were preached by Mr. E. Green, of Oswestry, and the Rev. C. Smallman, of Ludlow; and on August 2nd by Mrs. Gwillim, of Presteign. On August 5th a tea-meeting was held in the Corn Exchange, at which about 450 persons were present. At the laying of the corner stones and at the opening services we realised £38. The subscriptions and donations amount to nearly £60, making a total of nearly £100. The entire cost will be about £310. We desire to tender our thanks to all who generously aided us. C. SMALLMAN.

CWM-Y-GAST CHAPEL OPENING.—This is a thinly inhabited neighbourhood in the county of Radnor, where our people, of the Knighton Branch, have had preaching in a house for many years. Some twelve months ago the Central Wales Railway, which runs within about two hundred yards of the village, was commenced here, when every available accommodation was taken up with lodging for the navvies and other parties employed on the line. The old house in which we had been permitted to preach for a long time was taken from us, and as no other seemed likely to be opened fears were entertained that we should be shut out of the neighbourhood altogether; but in this extremity

Providence interposed—the farmers were prompted to express their sympathy and willingness to help in the erection of a new chapel. For this purpose land was offered gratuitously by the proprietor of our old meeting-house. The right time for action had evidently come, and we saw the importance of embracing it; so that at the earliest opportunity the ground was marked out, and in March last the first stone was laid by J. Meredith, Esq., who gave a donation of £5, which, added to the collection and profits of the tea-meeting, made the sum of £28. Thus the chapel was commenced under propitious circumstances, and has been finished equally prosperously. Its size is 27 by 21 feet. It was opened for Divine worship August 16th, when sermons were preached by Mr. I. D. Rutter, of Knighton, Mr. J. Nott, of the Farlands, and Mr. J. Edwards, of Kington, all staunch friends and members of our own Connexion. The collections amounted to £15. On the following Monday a public tea-meeting was held, at which 250 persons attended; the profits were about £8 10s.; altogether we have raised £53, which is one-half the entire cost. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood have evinced great kindness.

G. MIDDLETON.

BUCKLEY CHAPEL OPENING.—CHESTER CIRCUIT.—Buckley, in Flintshire, is rich in mineral wealth and rich in picturesque scenery, adjacent to the beautiful Dee, where it ships annually thousands of tons of patent brick, tile, and coal. Buckley is now a busy hive of industry, with an increasing population, nine miles from the city of Chester.

In the year 1824 it was missioned by Chester Circuit; but for some reason not now known it was given up. In 1838 the same circuit again visited it, and in cottage houses many a faithful sermon was preached, and many a time in the good old temple, the open field and common, many a heart felt the bitterness of sin and the claims of Christ. From time to time some were persuaded to turn from their evil ways and live for heaven. Through difficulty and changing circumstances the good work was continued, till in the year 1841 a small chapel was built. This gave the society firm foothold. Here much good was done, and through various degrees of prosperity there was progress. The leaven of truth diffused its influence, the salt of piety savoured others.

In the beginning of this year it was decided to have a new chapel, on a larger plan and in an improved style. A better site could not be had, but there were no obstacles in the way of obtaining more fully operations were commenced.

The old chapel was all but levelled to the ground with £80 debt on the trustees for it. The new chapel is 51 feet by 27, and 17 feet to the wall-plate. It is more than half-pewed, has a good platform for the singers, so constructed to be an excellent platform for public meetings, and a good pulpit. The chapel is a neat commodious substantial building, worth upwards of £400. The debt on it is only £120. Every pew is let, and many more are asked for. The society and their friends have done nobly. They made all the brick, and carted all the material free of charge, and for working men they have given liberally; they have been in earnest. On August 3rd, 1863, the Rev. W. Row and Mr. Postlethwaite preached to crowded congregations, and good was done. Here we have a promising society in number and circumstances, a good central position for surrounding places, nine local preachers, most of whom are young men, and a good list of Sunday-school teachers, workers, praying, believing, and hoping for prosperity on a larger scale. W. ROW.

BLAENAFON, PONTYPOOL CIRCUIT.—On August 16th, 1863, the Blaenafon friends held their chapel anniversary, when three sermons were preached by the Rev. T. Greenbury, of Selby. The service in the afternoon was held in Horeb Baptist Chapel, kindly lent for the occasion. After the evening service six souls professed to find peace in the blood.

On the following days, Monday and Tuesday, Mr. Greenbury delivered two excellent lectures to large and attentive audiences. The chair on both occasions was taken by Mr. Joseph Key. The amount realised at this anniversary was £40, being £5 in advance of last year.

On Wednesday, the 19th, Mr. Greenbury delivered a very interesting and edifying lecture in the Town Hall, Pontypool, to a crowded assembly. The chair was taken by R. Greenway, Esq.; the proceeds amounted to £5, which will be appropriated to the chapel fund.

W. L. HARRIS.

DRIFFIELD CIRCUIT.—August 21.—The Lord is reviving his work on this station. Our public services are well attended. Two chapels are being built and two others need enlargement. Most gracious influences are being exerted upon many of our congregations. At Driffield, Nafferton, Cranswick, Frodingham, Middleton, Hetwang, Lund, Watton, Halperthorpe, and Kelk, between sixty and seventy persons have professed to obtain salvation during the last five weeks. Most of these were "pricked in their hearts" at our camp-meetings. Many others have been convinced of sin, and on every hand there are such indications of spiritual life, as encourage us to believe that God is about to "show us great and mighty things which we know not."

May our ministers and members generally, "be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as we know our labour is not in vain in the Lord!" Amer.

CHARLES GARTON HONOR.

BIRKENHEAD CIRCUIT.—We are happy to report a little progress here. No missionary money has been used for the past twelve months, and recently a second preacher has been called into the work. We have peace and unity, and are looking for still better days.

Camperdown Street.—On August 23rd and 24th, our chapel anniversary was held, when Mr. Lowe, of East Dereham, preached, and lectured on Africa, to large and greatly interested audiences, and more than ten guineas were collected.

South Transmere.—The great annual tea-meeting was held for this chapel on July 27th, in a field at Bebbington, belonging to our old and tried friend Mr. J. Thomas. About 600 persons took tea. The profits of this meeting were more than £14. Efforts to reduce the debt £50 have been made during the past year, towards which Messrs. Thomas and Marsh have generously given £5 each.

Bebbington.—A good camp-meeting was held here on August 23rd, and during the past year the society has had a good increase.

Seacombe.—We recently held a good camp-meeting here, after which four souls were set at liberty. We "shall see greater things here." "God shall help us, and that right early."

Lower Transmere.—In November, 1862, we opened a chapel here (on rent). During the past few months a goodly number of souls have been saved. A society has been formed, which numbers about twenty; also a Sunday-school of some promise. Praise God for every token of good!

T. DOOBY.

CHELMSFORD.—The foundation-stone of a new chapel was laid August 24th, when a large congregation was gathered together. The Rev. M. Lupton, of London, conducted the preliminary devotions; after which J. A. Hardcastle, Esq., M.P., came forward and a silver trowel was presented to him, and hethen laid the stone. He afterwards gave an address to the people. He also handed over a cheque, and has promised to give us another. After his address the Rev. G. Lamb, of London, gave an excellent address, which gave great satisfaction. A hymn was then sung and the friends retired to the Wesleyan chapel, where tea was provided. After tea we held a public meeting, which was adressed by the Revs. G. Lamb, M. Lupton, S. Rowe (Wesleyan superintendent), and G. Wilkinson, (Independent). We had in the chair Mr. Samuel Turner, of Chelmsford, a tried friend. The chapel will be 28 feet by 38 inside. J. DAWSON.

BEACON'S BOTTOM, CHINNOR CIRCUIT.—CHAPEL OPENING.—In this small hamlet Divine Providence has opened our way to erect a nice little chapel in honour of our glorious Redeemer's name. The foundation-stone was laid by Miss Eustace, of Oakley, the daughter of our respected circuit steward, June 16th, 1863. And though the weather was very unfavourable, a considerable number of persons assembled on the occasion, and a good influence from heaven accompanied the services.

The site of freehold land, about 15 poles, was purchased of Mr. W. Grimsdale, of Sydenham, for the sum of £6. The chapel is connexional, and built of brick and flint, with a good slated roof. It is 25 feet in length, and 18 feet in width, and 10 feet from a good boarded floor to the ceiling. It has four windows, a good platform, and some rail back lettable seats, with forms to fill up; it is well ventilated, and presents a neat appearance. It is surrounded by two or three other hamlets, and thus affords seasonable accommodation for religious worship to the people around, who appear to be highly pleased with the provision made for their spiritual and eternal welfare. May their attendance be constant and regular.

The opening services were held August 30th, 1863, when three appropriate discourses were delivered by the Rev. E. Hancock, of Chinnor, Mr. J. Eustace, of Oakley, and Mr. E. Little, of Stockwell Lane, Risborough. The divine glory filled the place. An interesting meeting was held on the Monday, when about 100 persons sat down to an excellent tea. A public service followed, when Mr. J. Eustace presided, and some animating addresses were delivered. The total cost will rather exceed £80, towards which we shall realize over £30. Considering the circumstances of the people, and the rural locality, we have done well. Praise the Lord!

E. HANCOCK.

HINCKLEY STATION.—The authorities of this station have resolved that chapel debts shall not be increased therein, and that the present debt shall be reduced as much and as soon as possible. To meet the first part of this resolution, all necessary repairs and improvements are to be provided for by collecting the sums required before the work is done; and then immediate payment is to be made, and the very objectionable term, "Unsettled tradesmen's bills" is no more to be heard of in our locality.

Our Barlestone, Atherstone, and Newbold chapel cases were sent to the General Chapel Fund Committee, from our last December Quarterly Meeting, and a promise of £7 for Barlestone, and £7 for Atherstone, was given on condition that we raise £13 for each of them; and £15 was promised for Newbold if we raise £25. The Barlestone friends entered into the case heartily.

On Lord's day, August, 30th, Mr. Driver, of Burton-on-Trent, preached two sermons in Mr. Cuthbert'scroft, and £7 4s. were collected.

On August 31st a tea-meeting was held in the chapel (all the trays given). Our Baptist friends seeing we wanted help put their shoulder to the wheel, and £3 11s. were the proceeds of the meeting. Being yet deficient another collection was made, after an interesting public meeting. Having nearly removed the load we determined to complete it by collecting from house to house. We are happy to state that in this case our work is done. To pay off £20 in this locality is a great work.

W. WATTS.

DAISY BANK, BILSTON STATION.—On August 30th we celebrated our Sabbath School anniversary. The services of the day commenced with a procession which was attended with the power of the Holy Ghost, while the children and teachers were singing in the streets; after which, returning to the chapel, three sermons were preached by the Rev. W. Wright, of Wolverhampton, and Brother J. Turbey, of Daisy Bank. Collections were made amounting to the handsome sum of £14 16s. 7d., being more than last year by £4 8s. 7d., for which the school committee is thankful to God. We are happy to say through the whole of the day a glorious influence attended the services. At the close of the evening service a prayer meeting was held, when the power of God was manifested in the conversion of sinners, and we are still looking forward for better days.

J. LAWFORD.

BILSTON SABBATH SCHOOL.—The anniversary was celebrated on Lord's day, September 6th, when three sermons were preached by the Rev. H. Higginson, of Birmingham, and the Rev. W. Wright, of Wolverhampton. The collections amounted to £35, being considerably more than was realized for the same object last year, and the congregations were overflowing. I am happy to say the school is doing well. May God prosper it yet more and more.

S. MORRIS.

NORTHWICH CHAPEL.—The trustees of John-street chapel, Northwich, being few in number, the reduction of the debt was thought desirable. To effect this praiseworthy object subscriptions, &c., were sought, and the services of the Rev. I. Lowe, of East Dereham, were obtained. On Lord's day, September 6th, 1863, three sermons were preached; and on Monday, the 7th, a very eloquent and exciting lecture was given on "Primitive Methodism, its Characteristics, Scenes, and Sketches." The produce of the efforts connected with these services is £30 3s. 1d., which is very handsome. The trustees are now prepared to pay off a part of the £300 debt which is on the premises. Our well known and long tried friend Mr. Salt, of Preston Brook, occupied the chair on the Monday night. The trustees beg to acknowledge the assistance rendered them by friends of other denominations, and the public at large, as well as our own people.

GEORGE SMITH.

ENMORE GREEN CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY, MOTCOMBE CIRCUIT.—The thirty-fifth anniversary of this place of worship was celebrated September 13th and 14th, 1863. Three powerful and impressive sermons were preached on the Sabbath by the Rev. G. Morgan and the Rev. W. Hazell. The congregations were large and a most blessed influence pervaded the whole of the services. On September 14th we held our annual tea-meeting, when about 200 attended. After the tea, a public meeting of a very interesting character was held, under the presidency of our esteemed friend Mr. W. Blackmore, of Kingston Magna. The financial proceeds are £7 17s. 5½d. H. G. NORTON.

LEXDEN, COLCHESTER CIRCUIT.—The third anniversary of this chapel was celebrated on Lord's day, September 13th, when three sermons were preached by Mr. C. G. Robson, of London, and Mr. W. Steggles, of Colchester. The attendance at each service was good, and much divine influence rested on the assemblies. On Tuesday, September 15th, a public tea meeting was held, and about fifty persons sat down to the social cup. After tea a public meeting took place. The collections and profits of tea-meeting amounted to £3 11s.

O. O. BRITAIN.

CROCKLEFORD, COLCHESTER CIRCUIT.—The fourth anniversary of this chapel was held on September 20th, when three sermons were preached by Mr. C. G. Robson, of London, and Mr. O. O. Britain, of Colchester. The public tea meeting, held on Monday, September 21st, was attended by about eighty persons. The chapel was well filled at the public meeting. The amount raised by this anniversary, including a donation by Mr. Robson, of £1, is £4 16s. 7d., which, with other sums, enables the trustees to pay £5 off the principal, leaving a debt on the chapel and school-room, of only £32. O. O. BRITAIN.

ROSDALE, PICKERING STATION.—For more than thirty years the Primitive Methodists have laboured in various parts of this dale, but we could never obtain a piece of land for a chapel till now. A few months ago G. Leeman, Esq., one of the Ironstone Mining Company, deemed that our services would be beneficial to the miners, and arranged with Mr. Stephenson, one of our local preachers, that we should preach in the Reading Room on Sabbaths and week-days. A few weeks ago, the company thinking that a chapel would be better for our religious services, proposed to give us an eligible site, containing about a thousand square yards, on which to erect one, and also stone for its erection, and £50 towards other expenses. G. Leeman, Esq., also suggested that they would subscribe privately, and he promised £20, and A. C. Sherriff, Esq., £10. We have not yet had an opportunity of naming the case to the other partner, J. Hartas, Esq. The company have also selected two family pews, and proposed to give us £5 per annum for them.

On September 15th the foundation-stone was laid by G. Leeman, Esq. On this interesting occasion the trustees, through the medium of Mr. Stephenson, presented to Mr. Leeman a handsome silver trowel. When the stone was laid, impressive addresses were delivered by Messrs. Leeman and Hartas, to which the large assembly listened with great delight. At the close of this interesting service, a public tea was provided in a large tent, in which more than four hundred sat down and partook of the social repast, most of which was gratuitously provided by the ladies. After tea, a public meeting was held in the said tent. In the absence of J. Hartas, Esq., who was appointed to occupy the chair, Mr. Stephenson was called to preside, and the meeting was entertained by interesting and effective addresses delivered by G. Leeman, A. C. Sherriff, Esqs., and the circuit ministers. The proceeds of the tea amounted to £19 11s. 6d., and the public collections to £10 17 6d., making a total of £30 9s. It may not be out of place to add, that our prospects of public aid are very pleasing, and we trust, that our chapel will be placed in easy circumstances. To God be all the praise. A. WORSNOP.

BAWTRY.—CHAPEL ANNIVERSARY.—The first anniversary of our chapel at Bawtry was held on September 27th and 28th, when four sermons were preached by the writer and Mrs. Dixon. The congregations were overflowing, and a gracious influence pervaded the services. Six souls professed to obtain liberty. A social tea was held in the Wesleyan school-room, kindly lent for the occasion, the chair being taken by G. N. Naylor, Esq., (Wesleyan). The public collections were between four and five pounds, and with the produce of the tea, made up the noble sum of £10. The doings of the friends are worthy to be placed on record, for which we desire to express our gratitude.

E. DIXON.

ST. MARY BOURNE CHAPEL, ANDOVER CIRCUIT.—The anniversary was held on Sept. 27th. The sermons were preached by Mr. H. Yeates, and R. Osmond, Esq., of Bath. All the services were powerful, but the benevolent contributions of the members and friends surpassed all seen at the anniversaries we ever attended before. On the following day, after more than one hundred persons had refreshed themselves with a tea harmoniously conducted, we commenced a deeply interesting public meeting, the spirit of which we should like to see manifested in all the churches. Gold, silver, and copper were poured forth by liberal hands in abundance, and when the sum of all the proceeds was named, the trustees found themselves in possession of £20 15s., and the promises for next year amount to more than £20. This is a proof what a little village and small society can do with benevolent hearts and willing minds. One thing worthy of mention above the rest connected with this anniversary is that the old members, at the expense of some benevolent and yet not wealthy members, had tickets presented to them to attend the tea. H. YEATES.

HUTTON-LE-HOLE, PICKERING STATION.—Hutton-le-hole is an ancient village situated in a deep valley nine miles north-west of Pickering. For more than thirty years we have preached in this village, but have made very little advancement for want of a suitable place of worship. Sometimes we have preached in the Friends' meeting-house, sometimes in the Independent Chapel, and of late in a cottage; but we are thankful that Providence has now opened the way for the erection of a Primitive Methodist Chapel. The foundation-stone was laid, on September 29th, 1863, by T. M. Kendall, Esq., son of the gentleman who gave us the ground on which to erect it.

The trustees, through the medium of Mr. C. Frank, presented to Mr. Kendall a silver trowel, bearing an appropriate inscription, and the foundation-stone, containing various documents, was properly laid in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. The Rev. W. Bennett, of Malton, then gave a suitable address. At the close of this interesting service a public tea of the best kind was provided in the village school-room. After tea, a public meeting was held in the Wesleyan Chapel, kindly lent for the occasion, Mr. Stephenson, of Cawthorne, occupied th chair with his usual ability, and addresses were delivered by the Revs. W. Bennett, A. Worsnop, and Mr. J. Worsnop, of Hull. The proceeds of the tea amount to £5 14s. 6d.; and the public collections to £5 3s. 1½d., making a total of £10 17s. 7½d. A. WORSNUP.

TEA MEETING, OLDHAM SMOOD CIRCUIT.—On Saturday, October 3rd, 1863, we held a tea party in the Temperance Hall, Oldham, for the purpose of raising funds towards the erection of a new chapel and schools at Lees-road; land having been taken for the purpose more than two years ago and the trust deed executed; and we are happy to inform you of the success we have had in this our first public effort. More than 400 persons sat down to tea; seventy-five trays at five shillings each were given, which will make the nett profits of the tea £25. After tea a public meeting was held, and addresses of a suitable kind were delivered. During the meeting, cards, containing a form of promise for subscriptions were circulated amongst the people, and a goodly number were returned to the platform containing promises to the amount of £82. This we think is a very good effort, considering the state of trade; and we are sanguine of success in raising a temple for God, which will accommodate about a thousand persons.

MISSIONARY SERVICES.—RAMSGATE MISSION.—On Lord's day, October 11th, preparatory sermons were preached in the following order:—Ramsgate in the morning, by the writer, and in the evening by Rev. W. Antliff (deputation); also at Sandwich, in the morning and afternoon, by Rev. W. Antliff, and in the evening by Rev. W. Dinnick. During the ensuing week missionary meetings of an interesting character were held at Ramsgate, Sandwich, and St. Lawrence. The amount realised for the year was £12 14s. 1d., being an increase of above £4, which, considering the strenuous efforts just made on the mission for the chapel at Sandwich, we consider tolerably good. To all who have in any way aided our godly efforts, we tender thanks; while to the Giver of all good, we ascribe praise and glory.

OXFORD.—A SPECIAL EFFORT.—Our chapel in this renowned city has always been a burden. It has always crushed, and at times it has seemed as though it would prostrate, the energies of the few who have had to sustain its interests. The choice of site was not, perhaps, a happy one, and the majority of the trust selected pulled away the shoulder in the day of difficulty, leaving the few, with a comparatively feeble folk, to straggle with a debt of between £400 and £500. It has been with very great difficulty that the interest of this sum has been raised; added to this are scores of pounds which have been paid to attorneys for moving mortgages, and all the other et ceteras with which lawyers draw long bills; so that when the past is reviewed, it seems a great mercy that the society have not suffered the disgrace of having the property taken from them. It is of the Lord's mercy that a standing has been maintained, and of late he has graciously favoured us with times of refreshing from his presence, which have resulted in the increase of godliness in his saints, the reclamation of backsliders, and the conversion of sinners from the error of their ways. Then, of course, the question arose, "Can any thing more be done for the house of our God?" The case was laid before the General Chapel Fund Committee, which generously proffered £25, on the condition that the trustees and friends raised £75, and so would lessen the liabilities of the trust £100. The District Committee gave permission to solicit aid of the stations in this district, and so this was clearly the time to move in earnest; and although faint hearts from past failures grew fainter still, yet the thing was set about with a faith in some, which cried, "It shall be done." On October 11th and 12th we were favoured with a visit from the Rev. G. Lamb, in connexion with special religious services, when we gathered up the fragments, balanced the books, and found how far we had succeeded. The Methodist Free Church, in genuine catholic spirit, granted us the use of their large chapel for the occasion, and with our own friends most thoroughly appreciated the spiritual and practical character of the pulpit efforts of the occasion. On the latter date 120 persons sat down to an excellent tea, gratuitously provided, and a public meeting, rich in interest, followed. Our old friend, Mr. C. Taphouse, took the chair, and the meeting was ably sustained by the Revs. T. Kench (Free Methodist), W. Allen (Baptist), G. Lamb, and Messrs. Crapper and Goold, also of the Methodist Free Church. From the report it appeared that Messrs. Matthews, Warner, Taphouse, and Castle had subscribed £5 each; Mr. Burt, £2 2s.; and Messrs. W. Dingle, Dodson, Burchell, and Harper, £3 each. Twenty persons gave £1 each, twelve gave 10s. each, and others small sums according to their ability. A number of the stations in this district had forwarded assistance. Brinkworth, with characteristic liberality, between £6 and £7, and smaller sums from several others. These sums, with the proceeds of the tea and the liberal collections contributed, were found to amount to the required sum, and all concerned now feel lighter in spirit that the debt is not so heavy by £100. Due acknowledgments to all helpers brought these interesting services to a close—services which, we trust, mark an epoch in our upward history in this wondrous city, this strange city that sheltered King Charley and his Parliament when none other would have them, that burned the martyrs, because it could do that more easily than answer their arguments; and that flung the Quakers into the river, because it hated their simplicity and power! However, since that day Wesley and Whitfield have studied in its colleges, and the martyrs have had a resurrection. And that amid its present form of godliness, Primitive Methodism may more fully than formerly exhibit its power, is the most earnest prayer of

GEORGE WARNER.

COLONIAL DEPARTMENT.

EAGLE HAWK, BENDIGO.—We have recently held a very interesting and profitable course of missionary services in this circuit. We were assisted by the Rev. H. Robinson, and the meetings were well sustained by several of our ownable and worthy local preachers in connection with myself, and best of all, the presence and power of the great Head of the missionary enterprise was experienced. We realized by cards, boxes, and public collections, £13 10s. 0½d.

WOLLONGONG AND FOX GROUND MISSION, NEW SOUTH WALES—SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—On Lord's-day, May 17th, three sermons were preached in the chapel, Mount Keira. During the afternoon of Tuesday, May 19th, the children were regaled with tea and cake on the grass near the chapel. About half-past five about ninety persons sat down to an excellent repast in the chapel, which all seemed to enjoy. A public meeting followed presided over by the Mayor of Wollongong, and appropriately addressed by the Revs. J. Langford, Thomas Mell, (Primitive Methodist), W. Kelynack (Wesleyan), and T. Lewis and G. Hewlett, Esqs. The chapel was crowded and the meeting was brought to a close shortly after nine o'clock. After paying for the prize books, and meeting other incidental expenses, about £5 5s. were added to the school fund. To God be all the glory.

THOMAS MELL.

MORPETH CIRCUIT, NEW SOUTH WALES, CHAPEL OPENING AT MINMI.—Minmi is a township of considerable importance from the fact of its being one of the largest collieries in the Hunter River district. It is situated about fourteen miles from Newcastle, and about seven miles south from the Hunter. The approach to it is somewhat difficult, there being, between it and the Hunter, a large swamp of some six miles in width, across which the only road is the coal line, on which no accommodation has been made for passengers. As the traveller leaves the Newcastle and Maitland road that runs contiguous with the banks of the Hunter, and proceeds across the swamp, the scenery that opens before him is exceedingly romantic. Here nature has for centuries sported in majestic grandeur, controlled by none but Him who "upholdeth all things by the word of his power." Rugged mountains covered with trees of surprising height and immense size, steep declivities, dark ravines, and dangerous precipices, characterize the neighbourhood. Having crossed the swamp the traveller soon finds himself surrounded by the bush, which would lead him almost to conclude, were he not convinced to the contrary, that he had become a pioneer in a strange tract of country where the foot of the civilized had never trodden. But as he continues his toilsome travel, he presently finds himself in the very heart of a township containing a population of not less than a thousand persons, whose principal work is mining. This place, though near twenty miles from Morpeth, the writer has visited about eighty times since he came to the station.

During this period our services have been held in the school house, but as other denominations preached in that place also, our friends and the preachers have often been greatly inconvenienced. A chapel, therefore, became a desideratum. Our society having increased during the last two years from eleven to about thirty members, and the congregation in proportion, the friends determined to make an effort to erect a chapel. Application was made to the proprietors of the colliery, who readily gave a quarter of an acre of land, and a handsome donation. The chapel has been built, and is an ornament to the place and a credit to our people. The chapel is thirty-six feet long and twenty-six feet wide inside. The walls are fifteen feet high, and the roof is covered with shingles; there are six circular-headed windows, three on each side; the base course is stone, the walls are built of brick. In the front is a white stone bearing the name of the connexion, and the date of the year in which the chapel was built. It is lighted by six very handsome cocoene lamps; the fittings, though not yet finished, will be made of cedar. A pulpit has been dispensed with, and a rostrum substituted. The dedicatory services were held on Lord's-day and Monday, June 14th and 15th, 1863. Sermons were preached on the Sabbath by the Rev. R. Hartley, of Sydney, and G. James. The tea, which was gratuitously provided by the ladies of the Church on the Monday, was a most sumptuous repast, to which ample justice was done by about two hundred and forty guests. Tea being over and the tables removed, Mr. Parkin, one of the trustees, was called to the chair, who, after making a few appropriate remarks, introduced in order to the meeting, the Revs. W. J.

Dean, G. James, R. Hartley, Messrs. R. Youll and J. Robson. The speeches were stirring and practical. The entire cost of the chapel will amount to about £350, towards which the friends have raised £140, and it is hoped to reduce the debt other £60 by the next anniversary.

I may here add that the Lord has greatly blessed our labours at this place, a number of souls have been converted, and the society appears to be in a very healthy state. I trust the new chapel will become the birthplace of many souls. We ask our friends in England still to remember us at the throne of grace.

LITERARY NOTICES.

An Exposition of the Prophet Ezekiel, with Useful Observations thereupon; delivered in Several Lectures in London.

By WILLIAM GREENHILL, M.A., A.D. 1650. Revised and corrected by JAMES SHERMAN. Edinburgh: James Nichol; London: James Nisbet and Co. 1863.

THE Prophecies of Ezekiel are confessedly among the most difficult portions of the inspired volume, and hence the desirableness of any attainable aid in their investigation. The Lectures of Greenhill have now for two hundred years, or more, held high rank as an exposition of this portion of Scripture. The work was first published in five volumes, and it had long been difficult, if not impossible, to obtain a perfect copy, when the late James Sherman undertook the onerous task of editing and republishing it. He expended great pains and expense to make the edition perfect, and his readers have good reason for gratitude in the success of his endeavours. The present issue is brought out by Mr. Nichol, of Edinburgh, to whom Mr. Sherman, ere he died, presented the stereotype plates. Many corrections and improvements are contained in this edition, without any material alteration of sentiment. No student should be without this work if he can obtain it. It is a rich mine of thought. We have great pleasure in recommending it to all our readers.

The Hebrew Grammar of Gesenius. Translated, without abridgment, by T. J. CONANT, Professor of Hebrew in the Literary and Theological Institution at Hamilton, New York. With a Course of Exercises, and a Hebrew Chrestomathy, by the translator. New edition. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, 27, Paternoster Row. 1863.

GESENIUS has long stood high among students of the Hebrew language, and the present translation will tend to make him a still greater favourite. The translator has sought to advantage the young men of America in this effort, and doubtless many in England will accord him their hearty thanks. The pronunciation of Hebrew words is given in the first part of the work, which will be found an important recommendation. Any one desirous of studying Hebrew will do well to secure Conant's Gesenius.

Christian Theology: its Doctrines and Ordinances Explained and Defended.

By WILLIAM COOKE, D.D., Author of "The Deity," "The Shekinah," "The Three Intercessions," &c. Fourth Edition. London: Hamilton, Adams, and Co., Paternoster Row; H. Webber, 21, Warwick Lane; and Primitive Methodist Book-room. 1863.

It affords us real gratification to have to call the attention of our readers to a fourth edition of this valuable work, a work alike creditable to its esteemed author and to the section of the church which he has so long and ably served. It must be known to most that the work was originated, as it were, by the infidelity of a man who had been looked upon as a redoubtable champion of the Christian religion, but whose popularity seemed to have intoxicated him, and who subsequently undertook to prove the religion of which he had been a celebrated advocate, was unworthy of the confidence of sensible men. Dr. Cooke stood boldly forth as his antagonist, and ultimately committed to the press in the form of a series of tracts, the main arguments in defence of Christian truth. His theological tracts had a large sale, and were rendered eminently useful. And one edition thereof succeeded another, each containing manifold improvements, till the present edition has been issued, which is decidedly in advance of all the former ones. "More than two hundred pages of new matter, embracing seven chapters, on the Divine Authority of the Scriptures, the Immortality of the Soul, the Doctrine of Purgatory, the General Resurrection, Eternal Retribution," and the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, have been added in this edition. The doctrines of the existence and attributes of God are not discussed at length in this volume, because the author has handled them in "The Deity," and "The Evidences of Christianity," are intended to form the subject of another volume, which we shall be happy soon to see. When this last named work shall have been issued, Dr. Cooke will have supplied one of the ablest and most complete systems of theology that this age or country can boast. We are aware that many of our brethren have purchased the former editions of the present work, but to those who have not, we heartily commend this one. Our junior preachers especially should take this volume into their probationary curriculum, and read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest it. Sound in doctrine, lucid in arrangement, cogent in argument, profound in thought, and eloquent in style, it is in every respect worthy of their attention. With James Garner, William Cooke, and Richard Watson, for their guides, our younger brethren need not lack a good acquaintance with Methodistic theology.

The Shekinah: or, the Presence and Manifestation of Jehovah, under the Several Dispensations, from the Creation of Man to the Day of Judgment, with a dissertation on the Cherubim, and Urim, and Thummim. By Wm. COOKE, D.D., author of "The Deity," "Christian Theology," &c. London: H. Webber, Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row; and Primitive Methodist Book Room.

This volume was noticed by our predecessor, but we have pleasure in adding our opinion to his as to the value of the book. The subject is deeply interesting, and is treated in a very logical and conclusive manner. There is a great deal of learned research displayed in the course of the discussion of the subject, and yet all that is written is distinguished by great modesty and piety. We should think no student of God's word or works could rise from the careful perusal of the "Shekinah," without being both a wiser and a better man for the time and labour thus employed.

The Christian Pastor and Teacher: an Ordination Address. With an Appendix, containing Notes on Systematic Theology, Styles of Preaching, and Preliminary and Progressive Studies. By the Rev. J. STACEY. London: W. Cooke, Warwick Lane, Paternoster Row, 1863.

MR. STACEY delivered the "Address" at the Methodist New Connexion Conference, and was very properly requested to give it publicity through the press. The young ministers to whom this address was delivered will no doubt be happy to have the privilege of perusing its sage counsels in the privacy of their studies. And other ministers will do well to listen to Mr. Stacey's counsels, and seek to profit thereby. We presume there are few men in the New Connexion whose minds are more philosophical or better cultivated than Mr. Stacey's. Hence his words will have weight among his own people, as they deserve to have in other communions. Mr. S. is the newly appointed president of the New Connexion College at Sheffield, and ranks high both as a preacher and a writer. The Appendix, as is sometimes said of the postscript of a lady's letter, is larger than the foregoing production, and with a slight exception or two, has our hearty commendation. On the whole the work is a valuable hand-book for a junior preacher, and may meetly occupy in the New Connexion a position similar to that held by Dr. A. Clarke's and Dr. Hannah's "Letters" in the Wesleyan. Our own brethren will do well to give the work their early attention.

Hymns for Divine Worship. Compiled for the use of the Methodist New Connexion. London: W. Cooke.

THE Methodist New Connexion, like ourselves, has felt the necessity of a new and larger hymn-book for public use. Accordingly a committee was appointed some time back by the Conference to prepare one. The present volume is the result. It contains upwards of a thousand hymns, given mainly in their original form, or with but very slight alterations; the date of their first publication, and the authors' names, are also supplied. The arrangement is decidedly good, and the collection may be pronounced, on the whole, one of the richest in our language. It is intended to add to the present indexes one of texts, which will render the work all that could be wished. A beautiful preface, characterized by neatness, modesty, candour, and perspicuity, fitly informs the reader of the reason why the work was undertaken and what the book is. Our friends of the New Connexion may be congratulated on the success of the effort to provide a truly acceptable and valuable hymn book for all the purposes and occasions of worship, both public and private. The Christian Ambassador: A Quarterly Review and Journal of Theological Literature. No. IV., November, 1863. London: R. Davies, Primitive Methodist Book Room. Price One shilling.

THE present number of the Ambassador completes the first volume of the new series. The contents of this number are Richard Watson—Light Literature—An Exposition of Romans ix. 1-5—The Crusades—The Missionary Platform—Speech—Thoughts on Women Preaching—The Church of England—Man's Relations to the Future—and Brief Notices of Books. A pretty good bill of fare for one shilling. The articles are all original, except the one on the Church of England, which is extracted from the "Boston Review." The length and quality of the papers present some variety, as well as their subjects and writers. But no one can fail to see in them considerable intellectual force, and an obvious aim at general usefulness. The articles on Richard Watson and the Crusades are much to our taste, and the others with, perhaps, one exception, are highly acceptable. We hope all our preachers and reading people will patronise this valuable publication.

The Sinner's Handbook to the Cross. By the late J. FAWCIT, of Ollerton, author of "The Saints' Handbook to the Crown," and "A Dissertation on the Sin of Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost." Second Edition, revised by C. KENDALL. London: R. Davies; Leeds, J. Parrott, and all Primitive Methodist ministers.

WE are glad to see this improved edition of a very excellent little book by a very worthy man. We knew Mr. Fawcitt, and we know his worth, and his works. We are satisfied if his life had been spared he would have been capable of rendering eminent service to his fellow men. But he was taken away in early prime. His works, however, still live, and, we trust, will long live, to exercise a salutary influence upon an extended circle of readers. His two handbooks should be read by both saint and sinner, by both old and young. It gave us pleasure to go through the present work for the purpose of pointing out to Mr. Kendall such alterations as we thought would be improvements in this new edition; and we find he has both adopted most of our suggestions, and made many valuable improvements of his own. He deserves the thanks of the readers of the work for his editorial labours, and we trust a wide circulation of the book will be his compensation. We ought to say that the widow and family of the lamented author will be benefited by the sale.

Thomas Raffles, D.D., LL.D.: a Sketch by JAMES BALDWIN BROWN, B.A., Minister of Clayland's Chapel, London. London: Jackson, Walford, and Hodder. 27, Paternoster-row.

WITH Dr. Raffles for the subject and Baldwin Brown for the writer, the public will form a tolerable idea what to expect. This little work is the tribute of enlightened affection to the character of one of the most popular of the Nonconformist ministers that England has ever produced. Dr. Raffles, like Dr. Leifchild, and some other eminent Dissenting ministers, was early influenced by association with Methodism. We trace no little of the fervour, of the piety, and the extent of the usefulness of such men to this source. Besides Dr. Raffles was favourably conditioned as to worldly circumstances and education; and moreover, he enjoyed, for the most part, robust health, and had a fine poetic fancy and a most excellent voice. Indeed, he was like the late Robert Newton, pre-eminently a pulpit orator. None of his published works are of much special value, except a few poetical effusions, which rise to a considerable altitude, and his two volumes of Lectures. It was as a preacher he excelled, and he will be long and gratefully remembered in this relation. He rendered eminent service also to the Congregationalists of Lancashire and the neighbouring counties by his business tact; and his urbanity and generosity are highly spoken of. Of course a larger "life" of the worthy doctor may be expected, but in the meantime this "sketch" by Mr. Brown will be highly acceptable.

The Way Home; or, the Gospel in the Parable. An Earthly Story with a Heavenly Meaning. By the Rev. CHARLES BULLOCK, Rector of St. Nicholas, Worcester. Fifth Edition. London: Westheim, Macintosh and Hunt, 24, Paternoster-row. 1861.

THIS is a sweet evangelical exposition and practical application of the "Prodigal Son." We some years ago enjoyed the reading of the book, and have now great pleasure in recommending it to our friends. Having run through four editions already, it has evidently won for itself a position, and we can only hope it may continue to be in good demand till many another edition shall have been exhausted. It was well to put such books as this into the hands of young men, and we cannot but anticipate much good to accrue from their reading of them.

OBITUARY.

ANN MACLAUGHLIN died at Old Counden, Darlington Circuit, September 26th, 1862. Her father dying when she was about eight years of age, she, with her widowed mother, had to struggle with poverty, and being put out to service, met with very hard treatment. Attending, however, a Wesleyan Sabbath School, her mind was early drawn out after God. She saw herself a sinner, and was led to seek salvation. But in this blessed endeavour she met with considerable opposition. But she pressed through all difficulties in order to attend her class-meetings, shunning the evils of the world, and delighting in the communion of saints. Some time after this she removed to Witton-le-Wear, and was married to him who now mourns her loss. On removing to near Cockfield, along with her husband, she attended the ministry of the Primitive Methodists, and eventually joined them, remaining a steady, consistent, and devoted member to the time of her death. During this period she had much to grapple with—poverty, affliction, and bereavement. At one time the whole family was afflicted with typhus fever, which carried off her eldest son and her only daughter; this was a severe stroke for her, but the grace of God enabled her to endure it. For many years, likewise, she suffered much from that distressing complaint—asthma, but in all this her mind was sustained, and she was cheered by God's presence and blessing. During her last illness she was patient, and resigned to the will of God. Death had lost its sting; she was not afraid to die; but even desired to depart and be with Christ, which is far better. When the power of speech was gone, she waved her hand in token of victory. The exact time of her departure is scarcely known; her youngest son, who was sitting by her bed-side, thought he heard a gentle sigh, then all was over; without a struggle or a groan, her spirit went to heaven in the sixty-sixth year of her age.

For upwards of forty-one years she was a member of the Primitive Methodist Connection, and for many years sheltered the travelling preachers under her hospitable roof, making them welcome to her frugal and homely fare; now she reaps her reward among the church of the first-born which are written in heaven.

J. WORSNOP.

On October 4th, 1862, JANE, the beloved daughter of George and Bessy HARLAND, of Fridaythorpe, in this the Pocklington Circuit, departed this life, aged twenty-one years.

Naturally, she was of an amiable temper, and of a meek and quiet spirit. At the age of sixteen years she was led to seek mercy, and she obtained salvation through faith in Christ Jesus. From this time until she passed away to mingle forever with the countless millions of pure spirits who surround the throne, she continued to adorn the doctrine of God her Saviour, and to fear God above many. Her sense of the forgiveness of her sins and adoption into the family of God's children, remained strong from the time of her conversion to the moment of her death, and her joy was often rich indeed, and overflowing. She delighted in good works generally. Her attachment to the house of God was marked, and her attendance at the means of grace regular. "Seldom," remarks her leader, "did she absent herself from class or the other means of grace, and she seldom left while any remained, especially if souls were seeking salvation." Often when desired to remain at home because of company, she would reply, "I must go, for I hope to meet with Jesus," showing that her attachment to the sanctuary was not from mere habit, but the result of an enlightened and strong Christian principle.

About three months before her death, disease began with uncontrollable power to sap the seat of life. As was natural, she desired, if it was the will of God, that she might be restored; yet she meekly said to her heavenly Father, "Nevertheless, not my will, but thine be done." At times, during her affliction, she felt that Satan had seized the hours of nature's distress for fiercely assaulting her soul; yet with strong faith she said, "I will not even complain, for God means it all for good." The day before her death was a time of darkness and conflict; in this stormy hour, also, she shewed the strong courage which has so often marked the last struggles of God's people. She gave evidence of how well she knew how to trust in God, to submit to his will, and to adore his ways. While passing through this cloud, her leader and her sister prayed with her, the dark cloud parted and rolled away, and there were revealed to her faith's vision scenes of surpassing glory. She gazed with earnest admiration. Her heart overflowed with love and joy, and she said, "Ah, bless him!" "Bless him!" "I am happy!" "His goodness is enlarged." On the day of her death she spoke little, yet her soul continued to gaze on sights that dazzle mortals to blindness. It was evident she was very happy. She had gained, paradoxical as it may appear, an elevated station, a stronger vision, and a clearer sky; and her love was being kindled to angelic fervour. As she was dying, her sister said, "Dear sister, have you peace? Are you happy?" "At once with her remaining strength, she replied, "Yes, yes, bless him," and added, "Come, Lord Jesus!" and passed away to her mansion home. There the lifeless body lay, and "on the cold cheek of death smiles and roses were blending;" but her spirit had passed away, to dwell a glorified spirit amidst the splendours of the holy city, "The city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem." May her parents and family meet her in heaven.

J. DAWSON.

RUTH SMITH was born April 24th, 1784, in the parish of Madley, in the Cwm Circuit, Herefordshire. She lived after the course of this world until the Primitive Methodist missionaries visited that part; under the ministry of Messrs. Fowler and Proctor she was convinced of her lost condition, and brought to a saving knowledge of the truth. She soon, by her consistent walk and conduct, gave evidence of the change wrought in her. She met with opposition from a near relative, but she bore it with Christian patience, and lived to see her opponent converted to God, and afterward die triumphant in the faith. In 1839 she removed to Garndiffaith, in the Pontypool Circuit, where she continued to let her light shine; and all who knew anything of her in that neighbourhood believe her to have been a truly consistent Christian. In 1855 she removed to Abergavenny, where, after about thirty-six years' church membership, she ended her earthly course, and changed mortality for life on October the 6th, 1862, in the seventy-ninth year of her age.

G. SMITH.

JOHN HUTCHINSON was born at Rawmarsh, Rotherham Circuit, September 26th, 1835, and died there October 10th, 1862. At an early age he became a scholar in our Sabbath-school, where his conduct was exemplary. From being a scholar he became a teacher, and afterwards one of the superintendents, which office he sustained with becoming grace till his removal by death. His conversion took place when he was about nineteen years of age, and during his Christian career he "adorned the doctrine of God his Saviour in all things." His loss is greatly felt both by his family and the church; to the former, in consequence of his father's death, he has been for some years the chief support. The complaint of which he died was of such a nature that he had but few lucid moments, but those intervals were employed by him in expressing his unshaken confidence in God. The cross was his principal theme; and, resting on the atonement, he died, testifying that he was going to be with Jesus.

J. O. PARIS.

A mother in Israel has exchanged mortality for life, in the person of MARY GOOD, of Hepworth, in the Thetford Circuit. In the days of her youth, and for years after she reached the state of womanhood, she "with froward heart went astray," and with much carelessness neglected her highest interests. But in or about the year 1821, that God who is rich in mercy, manifested his lovingkindness in delivering her from the "dominion of sin." She united with the Wesleys, and remained a consistent member for fourteen years, after which, she was united by marriage ties to him who yet lives to lament her departure. For the last twenty-seven years she has ranked high among the "honourable women" for her unwavering attachment to Primitive Methodism, its cause in general, and its preachers, travelling and local, in particular. As a wife she was most loyal, faithful, and affectionate—as a domestic she was a pattern of neatness, cleanliness, and order—as a neighbour she was benevolent, liberal, and humane—and as a Christian her character stood high. During her life she was constantly ripening under the sunny skies of sanctifying godliness, and when standing in her lot at the end of her days, bright visions of the future ravished her happy spirit as she told those around her, that "a crown of bright glory awaited her." On the morning of October 11th, 1862, in the seventy-fifth year of her age the summons came, and she soared to the "rest that remaineth to the people of God." May a sorrowing husband, a weeping church, and the writer meet her on heaven's high platform of eternal rejoicing, in the prayer of

J. ALLIBON.

Died at Thirsk, October 20th, 1862, WILLIAM SANDERS, aged twenty-one years. Through the agency of the Primitive Methodists he was converted to God some years ago. Symptoms of bodily derangement had appeared some months before his death; yet no serious apprehensions were entertained until within a very short time thereof. The call was sudden, but found him looking to Jesus, who afforded him strong consolation.

J. MILNER.

The five following persons have recently departed this life in the faith and hope of the gospel from Thornton Street Society, Hull First Circuit.

(1.) JOHN ARMSTRONG. He was an engine-driver on the North-Eastern Railway, and found peace through believing, while travelling between Hull and Selby in March, 1856. He subsequently obtained a deeper baptism of the Holy Spirit, and thenceforward lived in the enjoyment of perfect love to the end of his days. His last affliction was long and severe; but he endured it with patience and resignation to the Divine will, and was graciously sustained by a blissful hope of heaven. The last words he was heard to say were, "All is well."

(2.) JOSEPH HAWKWARD united with our society about three years ago; and being well-informed and consistent in his walk, he was employed for a short time as an exhorter. But his course was short. Typhus fever hurried him to the grave at the age of thirty-five years. He was, however, happy in the Lord, was not afraid to die, and departed in peace.

(3.) JOHN INGRAM was brought to the Lord in Market Rasen Circuit about twenty years ago. Several years afterwards he removed to Hull, and united with Thornton Street Society. His path was often a rough and thorny one. The cares of a large family, and the difficulty of obtaining the necessaries of life frequently oppressed him; but he steadily cleaved to the Lord in the midst of many hardships and privations, and after enduring many months' afflictions in a Christian spirit, he died in the triumph of faith.

(4.) WILLIAM MANNERS. He was brought to the Lord in Pocklington Circuit above twenty years ago, and ever afterwards maintained a Christian course. Nearly ten years ago he removed to Hull, and united with one of brother R. Crow's classes, of which he continued an esteemed and useful member to the close of life. He had a good gift of prayer, and often prayed with much fervour and unction in public prayer-meetings. It is affecting to think how suddenly he was cut off in the vigour of his days. He was at chapel on one Sabbath, and engaged in prayer with his wonted energy, and the following Sabbath was a corpse. Inflammation of the chest caused him intense suffering, and quickly terminated his course. But he was ready for his change; had no dread of dissolution; and during his illness feelingly quoted several passages of Scripture and verses of hymns expressive of his peaceful experience in the prospect of eternity. About five minutes before his death, he said to his wife, "Polly, it is a sure and certain hope of a joyful resurrection." His last words were, "My race is run; my work is done." He died at the early age of forty-five years.

(5.) MRS. COLLEY was converted to God several years ago, and enjoyed more than an ordinary degree of genuine piety. She conducted herself with great propriety in the midst of a large family, being a devoted wife and a good mother. She endured a long affliction with much patience, and died very happy in the Lord. She said to her husband, "I am not afraid to die. I am going to Jesus, and you will soon follow." JOHN PERRY.

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate is privileged beyond the common walk of virtuous life, quite in the verge of heaven."

Seldom have these words of Dr. Young been more fully verified than in the demise of the late Mrs. SARAH JAY SMITH, wife of Mr. G. Smith, a local preacher in the Melbourne Circuit, Australia, who dropped mortality to enjoy immortality on August 22nd, 1862. She was the eldest daughter of John and Sarah Jay Smith, of Grimston, in the Lynn Circuit, England. Her father being a local preacher and her mother a pious woman, who served the Lord above many, she was blessed with a religious training, which led her in the days of her childhood to give herself unto the Lord and his people. In 1832 she was called to suffer a sore bereavement in the death of her mother, a sister, and I think a brother, who all died of cholera after nine hours' illness; but her youthful heart was comforted with the thought that they were all gone to be with "Christ, which is far better." Now, though young, the care of the family devolved upon her, which duties she discharged with cheerfulness and fidelity, and adorned her position with the graces and charms of youthful piety. After twelve months her father re-entered the marriage state, and Sarah Jay entered the family of the late Rev. John Smith, under whose powerful ministry she had been brought to a knowledge of salvation. She continued with this family until 1843, choosing rather low wages and the means of grace than higher wages and losing the means of grace, and thereby endangering her salvation; and possibly the deep-toned piety she enjoyed and exemplified may be traced to the examples she there saw and the gracious influences she felt.

In 1843 she removed to London, and entered the class of the late Mr. Church, and hence became a member of the society which now worships in Elim Chapel, Fetter Lane. In 1846 she was united in marriage to him who now mourns his loss, but who "sorrows not as those who have no hope," and they resolved that as for them, they and their house would serve the Lord. Her health declining, it was resolved in 1857 to emigrate to Australia. When I entered the circuit she was very feeble, and often did we fear lest she should be taken suddenly.

About six weeks before she died, the preying of her disease, her inability to attend the means of grace, and the consequent comparative lack of Christian association, occasioned her deep and distressing depression of mind. She did not doubt of her acceptance with God, but the way was dark. I reminded her of the promises, of God's readiness and ability to deliver her then, and she took courage, struggled for the light of his countenance, and success crowned her importunate and believing supplication—for the victory came. During the remnant of her days upon earth she enjoyed great peace and unshaken confidence in God, with one or two intervals of temptation and sorrow. She warned the impenitent of their dangers, and urged them to repent of their sins; the wavering she counselled to decide for the Lord, assuring them that he is God; and the saint she exhorted to greater diligence and usefulness in the cause of God. Language fails to describe her experience, her joy, her rest; the words peace and victory, though so full and expressive, seem too feeble to express the state in which she waited for the coming of her Lord. It seemed as though earth was uplifted to heaven, and as though heaven was come down to earth. On Friday she experienced a fearful conflict: it was the last assault, but she had learned to endure, and resist the devil, stedfast in the faith. For two hours amid suffering and pain, the conflict raged. She, her husband, and a Wesleyan friend, wrestled and fought for victory. They did not contend in vain. Their weapons were not carnal; the victory came, and oh! how full! how complete! She called on them to shout, "Victory and glory!" and as she broke from her moorings the words still lingered on her lips, "Victory! glory!" While she lived, "she opened her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue was the law of kindness. She looked well to her household, and ate not the bread of idleness. Her children arise up and call her blessed: her husband also, and he praiseth her;" all of whom she charged to meet her in heaven.

JOSEPH LANGHAM.

MONTHLY SUMMARY.

ONE of the principal events of interest in the United Kingdom during the last few weeks has been the visit of the celebrated Henry Ward Beecher, son of Dr. Lyman Beecher, and brother of Mrs. Beecher Stowe. Mr. Beecher came to Europe in shattered health, and refrained for some time from public speaking; but as his health improved and his visit wore on, he came forth from his seclusion, and made several eloquent speeches in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Liverpool, Manchester, and London, on the all-absorbing subjects of American slavery and the American war. His views were previously well known, but so anxious were our countrymen to see and hear the transatlantic orator that immense crowds collected at all the places. The meeting in London was, perhaps, the largest, as the throng outside Exeter-hall was said to be twice as large as that within. The Liverpool meeting was somewhat stormy in consequence of certain Southern sympathisers having got up a party to disturb the proceedings. Everybody seems to have been struck with the genius, the versatility of resource, the indomitable courage, and the eloquent out-spokenness of the reverend gentleman.—Lancashire has been recently honoured by three Conferences, as we may designate them. The Church of England held one in Manchester, composed of both clergy and laity, presided over by the bishop of the diocese, and attended by the Bishop of Oxford,

Dr. McNeile, Canon Stowell, &c. It would seem that a Puseyite leaning was evidenced by the majority of the meeting, but Stowell, McNeile, and some others gave utterance to better views. Of course, nothing is expected to come of the meeting, as the clergy and laity are tied and bound by the chain of the State. The Congregational and United Presbyterian bodies have had meetings in Liverpool, and a good deal of sound sense was displayed in the various discussions that transpired.—The Wesleyan Jubilee movement seems to leave the Primitive Methodist one far in the rear, both absolutely and relatively. We confess to a feeling of mortification when we find that while the one body can raise its tens of thousands of pounds in a few days, the other can do but a very small matter in as many years. We know full well what can be said by way of explanation, but we cannot help but believe that both preachers and people might have done much more than has yet been accomplished if they had taken a sufficient interest in the movement. We fancy we could name several friends among us who could without harm have contributed their several hundreds each, if not their thousands, and sure we are that scores could have given their tens and twenties in aid of the cause we have at heart. But ere next March we hope something will be done to redeem our character in the eyes of the religious public, and of Him whose we are and whom we serve.

One hundred and fifty thousand pounds the Wesleyans expect to raise! Would that we could hope to see our Jubilee Fund amount to ten.—The Sunday-school Union is taking steps to promote the extension of Sabbath-school influence in London; a meeting of gentlemen of all denominations of Protestants is being called for consultation. We hope we may hereafter have to report some good results.—A large number of ministers in Scotland have issued a document in reply to the address of the ministers of the rebel states of America, in which our North British brethren strongly denounce the sentiments of the pro-slavery clergy of the States. We trust the same sentiments animate the bosoms of Englishmen and Irishmen as well as Scotchmen.—Dr. Trench, the Dean of Westminster, has been appointed Archbishop of Dublin in place of the late Dr. Whately. The new Primate is a scholar and an able preacher. What effect his episcopacy will have either on himself or his diocese remains to be seen. Dr. Stanley, of Oxford, had been spoken of for the office, but the Hibernians saw reason to kick against him, not only on the ground of his being English, but that his views of religious truth were nearly allied to those of the Essay and Review writers. The doctor, however, steps into the nest at Westminster which Dean Trench has vacated.—New Zealand is, we fear, in the midst of a bloody war between Her Majesty's troops and the Maories. It seems Auckland and New Plymouth, and other places are seriously affected. Our missionaries write that they earnestly desire the prayers of our friends at home, that their lives may be spared, their families and societies and the mission property be preserved, and that soon a solid and durable peace may be established in the colony. Surely our brethren and sisters will not refuse this very opportune request.—We are glad to hear our Canadian missions report an increase of nearly a hundred members for the past quarter, and that the cause generally is progressing in the country. Our connexional intelligence will show that the good work is moving onward at home. In London two good new chapels have just been opened; and in many parts of the Connexion the friends are rearing houses of prayer, and putting forth other efforts for the advancement of the work of God.—We rejoice to learn that the Peruvian Government has taken steps to not only stop the kidnapping of the South Sea islanders, of which we spoke a month or two ago, but also to send home again the poor creatures who had been so unrighteously stolen. We hope the trick which has brought on the Peruvians the execration of the civilized world, will never be repeated by either one nation or another.—The Times has been signaling itself by a sneer at the want of success of Christian missions, making an able speech by the Bishop of Oxford, delivered in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, the occasion of its tirade. It has also had another fling at the "Prohibitionists," who seek to obtain a law empowering the majority of a town or neighbourhood to veto the licensing of public houses, so as to put into the hands of the people a power which has been, to say the least, very indifferently used by the magistracy of the nation. The Alliance Great Manchester Meeting was the ostensible cause of this manifestation of the Thunderer. But his efforts would be more admirable if they could be read like Hebrew backwards. He often contrives to be on the wrong side for the good will of philanthropists and earnest Christians. Alas! the press is too generally in need of a baptism of Christian feeling and earnest truthfulness.—Dr. Mullens has startled the world somewhat by his book entitled a "Brief Review of Ten Years' Missionary Labour in India," &c. He shows most conclusively that the Gospel is winning rapid and glorious triumphs in that part of the world. We have not space or would give some quotations. Perhaps we may do so another month.—Not a little remarkable is the fact that while in England, France, and other Christian countries, books have lately made their appearance, that seek to undermine the faith of God's people, a Mohammedan has just issued at Ghazipoor, in India, a commentary on a portion of the Christian Scriptures. The work is to be published in several volumes, and the one already out gives promise of a very respectable attempt to hold up among his countrymen the validity of the claims of Divine revelation, and of that revelation contained in the Holy Bible. We may surely thank God and take courage.—As the New Year approaches, another call to public special prayer has been issued by the Evangelical Alliance. It reads as follows:—"Proposed week of special prayer throughout the world. January 3—10, 1864. Christians of all lands are again affectionately invited to observe a week of special and united prayer at the beginning of the new year. For four preceding years the commencement of each has been thus hallowed. In almost every country in every quarter of the globe, Christians have met to present one offering of thanksgiving to our covenant God, and to plead with Him for blessings both for the church and for the world. It is encourraging to know that their prayers have been graciously answered. The Lord has been in the midst of his people gathered together in his name. They who have watched the progress of God's providence, and who have faith to discern his good hand in passing events, cannot fail to acknowledge that, notwithstanding the audacity of infidelity, the past four years have been remarkable for the very blessings sought for in earnest and united prayer. Among these may be named, the power of the Holy Spirit manifest in religious awakening and revival; the progress of the Gospel in Heathen and nominally Christian lands; the emancipation of slaves in many countries; the shaking of Papal and Pagan Powers; the Christian activity that has carried the Gospel to the neglected masses of our great cities; and the triumphs of truth in many places over various forms of error. Therefore let Christians again plead before God, agreeing on earth as touching the things they should ask, remembering the promise. "It shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

The following topics are suggested as suitable for a prominent place in the exhortations and intercessions of the successive days.

Sunday, January 3.—Sermons: Subject—The Work of the Holy Spirit and Our Lord's Words on Agreement in Prayer.

Monday, January 4th. — Penitential

Confession of Sin, and the acknowledgment of Personal, Social, and National Blessings, with Supplication for Divine Mercy through the Atonement of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Tuesday, 5th.—For the Conversion of the Ungodly: For the Success of Missions among Jews and Gentiles; and for a Divine Blessing to accompany the efforts made to Evangelize the Unconverted of all ranks and classes around us.

Wednesday, 6th.—For the Christian Church and Ministry: For Sunday-schools and all other Christian Agencies, and for the Increase of Spiritual Life, Activity, and Holiness in all Believers.

Thursday, 7th.—For the Afflicted and Oppressed: That Slavery may be abolished—That Persecution may cease, and that Christian Love may expand to the Comfort and Relief of the Destitute in all Lands.

Friday, 8th.—For Nations: For Kings, and all who are in Authority—For the Cessation of War—For the Prevalence of Peace, and for the Holy Observance of the Sabbath.

Saturday, 9th.—Generally for the large Outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the Revival and Extension of pure Christianity throughout the World.

Sunday, 10th.—Sermons: Subject—The Christian Church: Its Unity, and the Duty and Desirableness of manifesting it.

POETRY.

"MY HOME IS NOT HERE."

When I gaze on the light of yon beautiful sky,
And the curtains of azure unfolded on high,
Their glory and splendour recall to my thought
The blissful inheritance Jesus hath bought;
I fancy the portals of heaven appear,
And I feel at the moment, my home is not here.

When I see all around me the flowers so bright,
Which God has implanted to ravish my sight,
I hail them as pledges of heavenly love,
And think of the brighter ones blooming above;
Their fragrance reminds me of hopes that are dear,
And I love to remember, my home is not here.

As I list to the song of the lark as she flies,
Still warbling her notes as she mounts to the skies,
I think of the time when my heavenward flight
Will, like hers, be direct to the regions of light;
I shall sing, as I leave every trouble and fear,
My home is in heaven, my home is not here.

O land of enjoyment! O home of my heart!
What blessed delight can thy image impart!
In the midst of affliction, of sorrow and grief,
One thought of thy glory brings instant relief;
And quickly the darkening clouds disappear,
And the feeling steals o'er me, my home is not here.
